Mr. J. A. COCHRANE,
Assistant to Vice President Great Northern Railway Co.,
St. Paul, Minn.

DEAR SIR: This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 14, 1921, with which you inclose your version of "statement of facts" in the many claims we have pending.

You will recollect our understanding at the conference on January 12, at which time I informed you I would advise you on Monday, January 16, 1922, as to whether or not the "statement of facts" as presented by you would be acceptable or not, and those which I could not subscribe to I would rewrite, furnishing you our proposal, and we would then have a conference on Monday the 16th to dispose of any differences.

I therefore wish to advise you I can not subscribe to any of the "statements of facts" as proposed by you, and am inclosing herewith "statements of facts" in each case, except cases Nos. 11, 12, 13, 19, 21, 25, 26, and 38, which I will forward to you as quickly as possible, which I trust will meet with your approval.

If they meet with your approval, I shall be pleased if you will have sufficient copies made for submission to the Labor Board, or, if you will approve them and return to me, I will have the required number of copies made. We require 21 copies for our files and the Labor Board.

If you can not subscribe to these "statements of facts," I will thank you to telephone me immediately, so we can dispose of any differences.

Yours very truly,

E. W. ANDERSON, General Chairman.

GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY, OPERATING DEPARTMENT,
St. Paul, Minn., January 23, 1922.

Mr. E. ANDERSON,
General Chairman Clerks, 366 Jackson Street, St. Paul, Minn.

DEAR SIR: With reference to yours of 16th instant advising that you decline to agree to statements of fact I submitted, and inclosing statements which you ask me to approve covering your cases 1 to 40, inclusive, except 11, 12, 13, 19, 21, 25, 26, and 38, all of which were subject of our conference, and, in addition, a case you have numbered 41:

Your statements contain no facts as to conditions and circumstances surrounding the cases and convey no information as to what the facts are. Except where a misleading effort is made, they are merely a recital that you have a grievance and that the railway has refused to concede it. I will not sign any statement purporting to be one of facts covering a case which does not set forth the facts or which is in any way misleading; for that reason I can not approve your statements.

In accordance with understanding reached in conference, I submitted to you statements covering the relevant facts which you have declined to subscribe to, and until or unless you are willing to join in statements correctly and properly covering the cases, it is futile for me to make any further effort in that direction.

Yours very truly,

(Signed) J. A. COCHRANE,
Assistant to Vice President.

BROTHERHOOD OF RAILWAY AND STEAMSHIP CLERKS,
FREIGHT HANDLERS, EXPRESS AND STATION EMPLOYEES,
SYSTEM BOARD OF ADJUSTMENT, GREAT NORTHERN RAILROAD,
St. Paul, Minn., January 28, 1922.

Mr. J. A. COCHRANE,
Assistant to Vice President, Great Northern Railway Co.,
St. Paul, Minn.

DEAR SIR: This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 23, 1922, with reference to the many grievances which have been pending for months, wherein you take exception to our proposed "statement of facts."

On June 21, 1921, I wrote you listing 19 grievances, many of which had then been pending with you for over six months waiting for a conference. On August 20, 1921, it was necessary to write Mr. G. R. Martin, executive vice president, advising him of the delays we were experiencing and listing 11 more grievances. On October 25, 1921, I wrote you, inclosing copy of my letter of June 21 and August 20, as per telephone request from your office, and listed 8 additional grievances which had been pending for months.

During the period from January 1, 1921, to October 25, 1921, we made many requests for conferences to dispose of these grievances, but were invariably presented with only a promise for a conference some time in the future. On October 31, 1921, you set a date for conference for 9.30 a. m., Monday, November 7. On November 5 we were advised you could not meet with us until Tuesday or Wednesday. On Wednesday, November 9, we were advised you were out of town and would not be back before the end of the week, and finally on November 14, 1921, a conference was arranged for Tuesday morning the 15th.

We were in conference on November 15, 16, 17, 18, 21, 22, and 23, discussing these many grievances and failed to agree on any of them. At the beginning of the conference on these cases it was agreed we would go through them all first and any we could not agree on would be set aside and a couple of days or whatever time was necessary would be devoted to preparing joint "statement of facts" for submission to the United States Railroad Labor Board.

You failed to grant us another conference on these cases until January 12, 1922, at which time you proposed to again go through all these cases and set aside those we could not agree on, which, you will recollect, we declined to do, as it had been previously agreed at the November conference to prepare joint statements of facts on any cases we could not agree on at that time, and that was the purpose of the conference of January 12, and the plan you proposed would only result in further delay. We were agreeable to discussing these cases further, but insisted we could close up each case individually, either by reaching an agreement or preparing a statement of facts for submission to the Labor Board, which you declined to do. It was finally agreed you would submit your proposal for joint statement of facts on these cases and any we could not agree to; we would prepare our proposals and submit them to you with the understanding further conference would be held on Monday, the 16th, to dispose of any differences as to the facts in these cases.

We could not subscribe to any of the "statements of facts" as prepared by you, as they are very misleading and do not represent the actual facts, though you do state in your letter of January 23 that "I will not sign any statement purporting to be one of facts covering a case which does not set forth the facts or which is in any way misleading." The statements above referred to carry your personal signature.

On January 16 I wrote you, inclosing our proposals on these grievances, reminding you of our understanding of the 12th, that a conference would be held to dispose of any differences as to the facts, and requested in my letter that "If you can not subscribe to these 'statements of facts' I will thank you to telephone me immediately so we can dispose of any differences."

Instead of complying with the procedure agreed upon you still continue your dilatory tactics, which you have been very consistently for many months in your dealings with us.

It is very apparent you are not sincere in your stated desire to expedite the final disposition of these cases nor comply with agreements reached as to methods of procedure for their disposition. It is quite evident any further effort on our part to dispose of these cases with you is wasted time and effort, and I am therefore preparing ex parte submissions to the United States Railroad Labor Board on the cases referred to in my letter of January 16, 1922.

Yours very truly,

E. W. ANDERSON, General Chairman.

BROTHERHOOD OF RAILWAY AND STEAMSHIP CLERKS,
FREIGHT HANDLERS, EXPRESS AND STATION EMPLOYEES,
SYSTEM BOARD OF ADJUSTMENT GREAT NORTHERN RAILROAD,
St. Paul, Minn., June 18, 1923.

Mr. J. A. COCHRANE,
Assistant to Vice President Great Northern Railway Co.,
St. Paul, Minn.

DEAR SIR: Wish to advise Mr. J. C. Rankine, superintendent of telegraph, was requested to allow back pay in favor of Mr. Emil Johnson, amount $254.75, which request has been declined.

Mr. Rankine has declined this claim on the grounds that Mr. Johnson gained no railroad experience while employed as a check clerk.

It will be noted from the statement of Mr. Johnson's experience that he was employed as messenger and clerk from September 8, 1919, to July 15, 1920; as senior check clerk from July 16, 1920, to May 16, 1921; and from May 16, 1921, to August 8, 1921, as labor and pay-roll clerk; and August 8, 1921, to November 1, 1921, as senior check clerk; and has been employed as clerk continuously since November 1, 1921.

We disagree with Mr. Rankine's statement that the experience gained by Mr. Johnson during the period he was employed as check clerk and messenger did not in any way qualify him for a clerical position. It is very apparent that he was qualified for the position in view of the fact that he was twice promoted to labor and pay-roll clerk, once on May 16, 1921, and again on November 1, 1921, which in itself is evidence of the fact that he was qualified for the position.

In view of the fact that Mr. Johnson had had over two years' experience when he was promoted to the position of clerk the second time on November 1, 1921, we contend he is entitled to the maximum rate of pay from that time on, and will be pleased if you will instruct accordingly.

Yours very truly,

E. W. ANDERSON,
General Chairman.

DEAR SIR: Wish to advise I wrote Mr. C. O. Jenks, vice president, in charge of operation, on February 28, 1924, as follows:

"Wish to advise I wrote Mr. J. A. Cochrane in connection with the claim of Mr. Emil Johnson under date of June 18, 1923, and have traced for replies to this communication on June 28, September 6, September 29, and February 4, 1924, and up to the present time I have received no reply from Mr. Cochrane.

"It will be appreciated if you will issue such instructions as will assure us receiving replies to our communications within a reasonable period. Will you please advise what we may expect in this connection, and oblige."

Up to the present time I have not received a reply to this letter from Mr. Jenks, nor have I received a decision from Mr. Cochrane on this case. It will be noted that this matter has been pending with Mr. Cochrane for over 10 months without a reply, and I think you will agree that there can not possibly be any justification for such delay.

I am confident that this manner of handling these matters reacts very unfavorably with the management and can be avoided. I sincerely trust that you will take such action as may be deemed necessary or advisable to remedy this condition in so far as it applies to the employees whom we represent, and oblige.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of March 28 about the claim of Mr. Emil Johnson:

I am advised by Mr. Cochrane's office, that this was one of the matters that was left for consideration in conference; that conferences are now being held with you, and that this case will be reached very soon.

Mr. RALPH BUDD,
President Great Northern Railway Co., St. Paul, Minn.

DEAR SIR: Referring to your letter of April 2 in reply to mine of March 28 with reference to claim of Mr. Emil Johnson:

Wish to advise we discussed the matter of conferring with Mr. Cochrane on a number of claims which have been pending for several months which Mr. Cochrane has advised that he would not allow.

If it is not intended to allow this claim, then it would seem proper that we be advised to that effect, and the claim could then be included along with the others; but if it is intended to allow the claim, then there would be no need for us to confer about it.

You perhaps have been informed of the proposed revision of the labor sections of the transportation act, 1920, which would make it compulsory upon the railway management to handle matters of this kind within certain time limits, and it is such delays as this which we have experienced a number of times that undoubtedly causes such changes in the law to be advocated.

I sincerely trust that the necessity for bringing such matters to your attention will be eliminated in the future.

DEAR SIR: Referring to my letter of June 18, 1923, and various tracers with reference to the claim of Mr. Emil Johnson, employed in the office of assistant superintendent telegraph at Spokane, Wash., for proper compensation under interpretation 2 to decision 147 while employed as clerk in that office.

I trust you are now in a position to advise me of your decision in this case.

CONDENSED ANALYSIS AND STATEMENT OF RAILWAY ACT

"The railway labor act" repeals Title III of the Esch-Cummins law and thereby abolishes the Railroad Labor Board.

This bill establishes a machinery for settling disputes as follows:

1. It is made a duty for employers and employees to "exert every reasonable effort to make and maintain agreements" concerning wages and working conditions.

2. It is made a duty to confer when disputes arise. Representatives are to be chosen by each party without any interference by the other party. If disputes are not decided in conference they are carried forward according to their classification as

(a) Grievances covering the application of existing agreements.

(b) Changes of existing agreements, establishing new wages or working conditions.

GRIEVANCES

3. If grievance disputes are not decided in conference, they must be referred to a board of adjustment for decision.

4. There are four boards of adjustment on which employers and employees have equal representation to adjust disputes covering—

(1) Train service men.

(2) Shopmen.

(3) Clerks, stationary firemen, and maintenance-of-way men.

(4) Marine workers.

The members are nominated by the carriers and employees and appointed by the President.

5. If the board of adjustment does not decide a dispute, it may be referred to the Board of Mediation and Conciliation, or the board may proffer its services.

6. The Board of Mediation and Conciliation is composed of five impartial men appointed by the President.

7. If mediation is unsuccessful, the board shall propose arbitration.

8. If the arbitration proposal is accepted, boards of arbitration are to be created as under the Newlands Act, and the agreement to arbitrate requires acceptance of the award.

CHANGES

9. If changes are not agreed upon in conference, either party may call upon the board of mediation or the board may offer its services and in the event of failure of mediation arbitration shall be proposed.

10. The compulsory features of the bill are mainly—

(a) That grievance disputes must be considered in conference and submitted to a board of adjustment if they are not decided in conference.

(b) That changes in wages and working conditions can not be put in effect until the machinery provided has been employed to bring about agreement.

THE RAILWAY LABOR ACT

The purpose of the proposed railway labor act is to insure continuity and efficiency in the transportation system of the country by providing means whereby the management and the employees, through representatives of their own choosing, shall confer on the problems of the "human side" of railroading and through such conferences, first, enter into collective agreements respecting wages and working conditions, and, second, adjust differences of all kinds. To carry out this purpose a duty is imposed on both parties "to exert every reasonable effort to make and to maintain agreements concerning rates of pay, rules, and working conditions." Disputes over proposed changes of rules or rates of pay or over the application of agreements are to be settled in conference, if possible, and the machinery of boards of adjustment and a board of mediation and conciliation or reference to arbitration is to be resorted to only when a conference can not produce an agreement.

The proposed legislation utilizes the successful provisions of former acts (the act of 1886, the Erdman law, the Newlands law, and Title III of the transportation act) and seeks to avoid the weaknesses that developed in the practical operation of those laws.

MACHINERY PROVIDED

The proposed act provides four ways in which differences between the men and the management can be adjusted:

(1) CONFERENCES

The primary emphasis is laid on conferences. Sections 3 (A) (1) imposes a mandatory duty upon the parties involved in a dispute to confer. Such conferences must be held whether a dispute is one "arising out of grievances or the application of agreements concerning rates of pay, rules, or working conditions or proposed changes in rates of pay, rules, or working conditions." While there is no duty upon the parties to decide such disputes in such conferences, the parties, through their representatives, must meet and endeavor to agree.

The framers of this bill, which has been drafted by practical railroad men, have provided that in these all-important conferences the workers shall have genuine representation; otherwise such conferences are useless. If a management is permitted to exert pressure to influence the choice of conferees or to refuse to meet conferees whom it does not select or approve, the satisfactory results of conferences are impossible, and autocratic dictation is made doubly offensive by the pretense of democratic cooperation. The much-censured conduct of certain railroads in seeking to control the choice of representatives of its shop and clerical forces shows that the effectiveness of the conference system depends entirely on this principle of independence.

The bill therefore provides (sec. 3 (A) (2)) that the representatives shall be designated by the parties in such manner as their own organization shall decide, "without interference, influence, or coercion exercised by either party over the self-organization or designation of representatives by the other, and it shall be deemed a violation of the obligation herein imposed upon carriers for any carrier * * * to interfere with or attempt to influence or control, directly or indirectly, the organization of employees or subordinate officials, or participate in the functioning thereof or the designation of employee or subordinate official representatives." It is because voluntary agreements between the parties immediately concerned is the foundation of the entire bill that so much emphasis is placed upon this matter of noninterference by one party in the selection of the representatives of the other. Moral and legal obligations to fulfill a contract arise only when the parties are bound by their self-chosen representatives.

(2) BOARDS OF ADJUSTMENT

If a dispute—except disputes involving changes of rules or wages—can not be disposed of to the satisfaction of the parties in a conference, the act imposes upon the parties the duty to refer such disputes to the appropriate board of adjustment, where the controversy will, if possible, be decided.

(The boards of adjustment have nothing to do with changes of rules or working conditions. Controversies over such questions may be settled (1) in conference; (2) through mediation, or (3) by arbitration. The boards of adjustment are, therefore, concerned solely with questions of operation under existing agreements. It is hence appropriate and desirable that they should be composed exclusively of practical railroad operators.)

The members of the boards of adjustment are Government officers, appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. However, these boards are not third-party tribunals, but are an extension of the conference plan on a national scale, where men skilled in railroading, representing both managements and the employees, can try to adjust the human problems of their common business.

There are four such boards, divided roughly as follows:

Board No. I. Train service men.

Board No. II. Shop and mechanical workers.

Board No. III. Clerical and station workers and maintenance-of-way men.

Board No. IV. Marine workers.

The organization of board No. I is typical. This board is composed of 14 members. Seven are representatives of management, appointed by the President from not less than 14 names presented by the carriers. Seven are representatives of labor, appointed by the President likewise from a list of not less than 14 nominees, each of the "nationally organized crafts" within the classifications embraced by board No. I being authorized to nominate two men.

Again it should be emphasized that these are not third-party tribunals or boards of arbitration. The members are not expected to stand "impartially" between those who bring controversies before them for adjustment. There is no "public member" or "neutral" or "umpire." Long experience has convinced railroad men—employers as well as employees—that the continuity of railroad service can most often be secured not through referring technical problems to individuals enjoying so-called "impartiality" (individuals unfamiliar with the problem of the engine cab, the yard, and the machine shop) but rather through providing disputants with a full and fair opportunity to present their claims before an equi partisan board. The successful operation of just such boards for years on various railroads and covering all railroads during Federal control and some of the gratifying results of similar machinery in Canada in recent years have demonstrated the effectiveness of this method of settling controversies.

The bill provides in addition for the exceptional situation where the parties may be unable to adjust their differences within the industry itself either in conference or before the appropriate equi partisan board of adjustment. In that event (a) the board of mediation and conciliation may be invoked or may intervene; or (b) there may be submission of the dispute to arbitration.

(3) BOARD OF MEDIATION AND CONCILIATION

The composition and the function of this board is quite different from the intraindustry machineries heretofore discussed. This board is made up of five commissioners, appointed by the President. They are all to be impartial and not associated in interest with either the carriers or the unions. Unlike the present Railroad Labor Board, this board is not an impotent court, authorized to "decide" cases, but without power to make its decisions effective. The creation of this board would inaugurate a return to the successful mediation provisions of the Erdman and Newlands Acts.

The functions of the commissioners are threefold:

(a) The board may try by mediation to induce the parties to settle all disputes as to the application of agreements which can not be adjusted either in conference or before the proper board of adjustment. The board may act either on the request of either party or on its own initiative.

(b) The board may take similar action in the case of proposed changes of rules or wages which have not been agreed upon in conference between the parties.

(c) If conferences, adjustment, mediation, and conciliation have all failed to result in an agreement, the board shall endeavor to induce the parties to submit their differences to arbitration, under the conditions provided in the bill; and if this effort succeeds the board shall help to organize the arbitration proceedings.

(4) ARBITRATION

The bill provides for voluntary arbitration of either class of disputes which have not been settled in conference, (1) of disputes regarding the application of agreements which have not been settled in conference or by a board of adjustment or after mediation, or (2) of disputes regarding changes of rules or wages which have not been settled directly in conference or after mediation. In either event, if the board of mediation has failed to bring about an amicable adjustment "the said board shall at once endeavor, as its final required action, to induce the parties to submit their controversies to arbitration" (sec. 5–A). The board of arbitration may consist of three or six persons, as may be stipulated in the arbitration agreement. If a board of three is provided, each party shall choose one; if a board of six, each party shall choose two. If the parties fail to agree upon the third arbitrator or upon the fifth and sixth arbitrators for a board of six, it is the duty of the board of mediation to choose the one or two disinterested arbitrators (sec. 5–D). The form and contents of the agreement to arbitrate are set forth in section 7–C and comprise a restatement of the best provisions of arbitration agreements under previous laws. In this agreement it is provided that the parties shall agree to faithfully execute the award and that it shall be filed with the clerk of the appropriate district court and judgment shall be entered upon it: Provided, however, That the court shall have power to set aside the award only upon the three grounds:

(a) That the award or the proceedings were not in conformity with the act; or

(b) That the award does not conform to the agreement to arbitrate; or

(c) That there was fraud or corruption which affected the result of the arbitration.

These provisions of the agreement to arbitrate whereby the parties expressly limit the power of judicial interference are for the purpose of preventing the delays or harassments of litigation whereby the purposes of arbitration are defeated. This marks an important advance over previous legislation.

(5) GENERAL PROVISIONS

There are certain provisions of considerable importance not covered in the previous description of the machinery provided in the act, which should be briefly described.

(a) Section 6 requires 30 days' written notice of any changes of rules or wages and an opportunity for consideration of such changes in conference and for the use of the services of the board of mediation before such changes may be made effective, imposing a penalty that in cases of changes without notice or prior to fulfilling the requirements of the act such changes shall be void and the offender liable in damages to double the amount of the loss occasioned by such unlawful action. Section 4–B provides for an interpretation by a board of adjustment of any decision concerning the application of which a controversy may arise, and section 5–C makes a similar provision regarding interpretations by the board of mediation of any agreements reached through mediation. These provisions are intended to prevent the reopening of controversies which have been presumably settled and to prevent either party from destroying the value of a settlement through an unfair interpretation of the agreement of settlement.

Section 7–A (2) specifically provides that the refusal of a party to submit to arbitration shall not be considered as a violation of a legal obligation in order to prevent attempts to force parties into arbitration by judicial action. It is the underlying principle of the entire act that if opportunity is provided for ample hearing and fair consideration of matters in disagreement the representatives of employers and employees can be relied upon to adjust amicably their differences, as they are more vitally interested than any other persons can be. The use of coercive methods to force agreements or to compel men to serve under unacceptable conditions is not only opposed to American principles but has been shown to be destructive of, and not productive of, harmonious industrial relations.

In like manner, although arbitration awards are binding upon the parties thereto, it is especially provided in section 7–D (8) that nothing in the act shall be construed to require an individual employee to render compulsory service. It should be obvious that although organizations properly may be bound by their contracts and the members equally bound while rendering voluntary service no individual can be compelled to render service so long as the Constitution of the United States forbids involuntary servitude.

The railway labor act is presented as a constructive measure for the adjustment of industrial controversies that affect the transportation service in such a manner as to promote the cooperative efforts of employers and employees, to insure harmony in and to improve the efficient operation of the American railroads.

Mr. BURTNESS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from North Dakota rise?

Mr. BURTNESS. For the purpose of striking out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair has already stated, that motion is not in order. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that debate is exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already stated that fact.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS] preferred a unanimous-consent request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS]?

Mr. KENT. I object.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Who made the objection?

Mr. KENT. I made it and will make it again if necessary.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. It seems to me we ought to have some debate on this measure.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is the question of agreeing——

Mr. LONGWORTH rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Ohio rise?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute in order to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute in order to ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. Reserving the right to object, on what subject does the gentleman want to talk?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I did not ask the gentleman's permission to make a speech. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman need not fly off if I object. The gentleman did the same thing Saturday night.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. KELLER. I object.

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I would like to prefer a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes upon this motion.

Mr. LILLY. I object.

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. I would like to ask unanimous consent that the floor leader be permitted to ask that question of the gentleman from Kentucky. Surely that should be granted.

Mr. RAKER. Reserving the right to object——

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BARKLEY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kentucky rise?

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] have a minute in order to ask me a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] have a minute in order to ask him a question. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Objection having come from that side of the House to what I regard as a reasonable time to discuss this amendment, I desire to ask the gentleman if it is his disposition to prevent reasonable discussion of amendments from now on?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; indeed. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio it is not my disposition to prevent reasonable discussion of amendments.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I am quite sure the gentleman himself would not and I hope the gentleman has sufficient control over other Members on his side to enable proper discussion.

Mr. BARKLEY. I can not prevent objections being offered by any Member. Objection has been made on both sides of the aisle.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota came from that side of the House. I desire to know in advance what the gentleman's disposition is.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is not my disposition to cut off reasonable debate, but I do hope the House will not seek to interminably debate irrelevant amendments.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I wil say to the gentleman that so far as I am concerned I will offer no opposition to the orderly procedure of this bill, but we do demand, and we shall insist on having, reasonable time to discuss amendments.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say that is what I desire. I desire that shall prevail and that the House may have reasonable time to debate legitimate amendments offered in good faith, but I do not think it ought to waste time on this motion to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It seems to me we ought to be permitted more than 10 minutes on that question. The gentleman himself does not think it is fair to limit debate to 10 minutes upon so important an amendment as that, does he?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think that would not be unreasonable if unanimous consent can be granted for it, and I would have no objection myself to 10 minutes, but I have not any control over other Members. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I renew my request.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I yield.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that there may be 20 minutes' debate upon this motion—one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] and one-half by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW].

Mr. KELLER. Reserving the right to object, two weeks ago——

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. KELLER. I object, then.

Mr. WOLFF. I object.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman over there objected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KELLER] objects.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, in order that the record may be complete, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] also objected.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I did not object, Mr. Chairman. The gentleman ought not to presume to make such a statement.

Mr. MAPES. If the gentleman says he did not object, I, of course, accept his statement.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I can speak for myself and make my own objections.

Mr. MAPES. The gentleman is perfectly right about that.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The gentleman should attend to his own matters and I will attend to mine.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Indiana to strike out the enacting clause.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the committee divided, and there were—ayes 104, noes 97.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. SANDERS of Indiana and Mr. BARKLEY as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 144, noes 134.

So the motion to strike out the enacting clause was agreed to.

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TILSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7358) to provide for the expeditious and prompt settlement, mediation, conciliation, and arbitration of disputes between carriers and their employees and subordinate officials, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move to refer the bill to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, upon which I demand the previous question, and, pending that, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 170, nays 211, answered "present" 2, not voting 50, as follows:

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. BYRNES, on this and subsequent votes. I voted "aye." I wish to withdraw that vote and answer present.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I ask for recognition.

Mr. BARKLEY. The previous question having been ordered——

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he should state the question before the House. The question is, Will the House concur in the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. BARKLEY. On that, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. MAPES. I ask to be recognized, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Of course, the motion for the previous question is a preferential motion.

Mr. MAPES. But the gentleman from Kentucky can not take me off my feet.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Kentucky for his views on the point of order as to whether he or the gentleman from Michigan is entitled to recognition.

Mr. BARKLEY. I consider a fair interpretation of the rule under which we are operating is that I am entitled to recognition to make the motion I have made. I think under a fair interpretation of the rule I stand in the attitude of the chairman of a committee who would have reported out the bill, and as such, being in charge of the bill, I am entitled to the same recognition that I would be if I were chairman of a reporting committee.

The SPEAKER. That is undoubtedly true until the House in Committee of the Whole has stricken out the enacting clause. The question in the Chair's mind is whether the House having done that it does not transfer the right from the gentleman from Kentucky to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think it does, because so far as the House is concerned that committee has no rights whatever.

The House has discharged that committee from the consideration of this bill, and it has no more to do with it than it would have had if it had never been referred to it, so that from a parliamentary and a legislative standpoint the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has no more rights in the consideration of this bill than has the Committee on Appropriations or the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, because that committee has been discharged. The House in succession has voted down a motion to adjourn and a motion to refer the bill back to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, so that the committee as such has no rights whatever, and that motion was made, not by the friends of the bill, but by the enemies of the bill. When the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] rose, the Chair asked for what purpose he rose, and he said he rose to ask recognition, but he was never recognized, and has not been recognized until this moment for any purpose.

The SPEAKER. That is just the question. Whom should the Chair recognize as being entitled to recognition?

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course this is an unusual situation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think the Chair is desirous of doing the fair thing, and I think the Chair wants to rule fairly on the point, and that is why I am appealing to him. If this bill had been reported by a committee and that committee had been in charge of the bill in Committee of the Whole, and on a motion made by an enemy of the bill the enacting clause had been stricken out, and we had gotten back into the House, the chairman of that committee would have been entitled to recognition, because of his position on the committee.

The SPEAKER. That is just the issue, whether he would or not.

Mr. BARKLEY. On a proposition of this kind, Mr. Speaker, the control of the House goes to the side that wins in a contest like this. On two votes we have won, and therefore are entitled to have charge of the House at this time in the disposition of this bill, and for that reason I think I am entitled to recognition to move the previous question as against any other Member, an enemy of the bill, whose side has been consistently voted down on a roll call in the House. Although the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] is a member of the committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, that committee having no jurisdiction and no rights and no status now with reference to this bill, no right attaches to him by reason of his membership on that committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that as to that point the Chair was in error, probably. If the gentleman from Michigan is to be recognized, it is not particularly as a member of the committee, but as a representative of the side that struck out the enacting clause.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, if the proposition laid down by the Chair is correct, then the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS], who made the motion, would be entitled to preference. I want to remind the Speaker of a situation that arose once before. I think it is conceded that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] is in the attitude of a man in charge of a bill. He is in the same attitude as the chairman of the committee of conference or the chairman of any committee that has charge of a bill on the floor. The Speaker will recall that in the Sixty-sixth Congress the gentleman from New York, Mr. Platt, brought in a conference report on a bill amending the Federal farm loan act. I opposed the adoption of the conference report, and the House sustained my opposition and voted down the report. Then I demanded recognition for the purpose of making a preferential motion. The point was raised that the favorable vote did not transfer the control of the measure from the gentleman from New York to myself, and that proposition was very ably supported by the ex-Speaker of the House, who was then on the floor, Mr. Champ Clark, as the Chair will recall. The Speaker at that time—and I think there were some precedents cited—held that the precedents were against any such contention, and even though the House had voted with me and had voted adversely against the conferees, led by the gentleman from New York, yet I was not entitled to the floor and that the gentleman from New York still had the right to make whatever preferential motion he desired. I think that is a case in point. In any event I call it to the attention of the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not remember, but it has been suggested to the Chair that the question at issue at that time was whether the gentleman from Arkansas should be appointed chairman of the committee of conference.

Mr. WINGO. Oh, no; I wanted to be recognized to make a motion that the House insist on its disagreement to amendments of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not remember.

Mr. WINGO. I am clear on that. I asked for recognition to make the motion, and the point was made that the gentleman from New York, who was on his feet, had a right to be recognized. I argued that in view of the fact that the House had just voted with me, the control of the bill had passed to me as leading the opposition. Mr. Clark supported that contention, but, as I now recall, the present Speaker was able to cite a precedent to the effect that the rejection of a conference report leaves the matter in the position it occupied before the conference was asked, and that the minority had no special privilege as to conferences. That decision was on March 2, 1920. I submit it for what it is worth in the consideration of the pending point of order.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, the question of control in this case depends not, as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] has suggested, upon the success of the motion to adjourn or the motion to recommit. It depends upon the success of the motion to strike out the enacting clause. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS] offered that motion. It prevailed in the committee, and the control passed from the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS] or any other man who wanted to support the motion.

Now, let me call the attention of the Chair to paragraph 739, bottom of page 323 of the Manual:

> When an essential motion made by the Member in charge of the bill is decided adversely the right to prior recognition passes to the Member leading the opposition to the motion. The control of the measure passes under this principle when the House disagrees to the recommendation of the committee reporting the bill, when the Committee of the Whole reports a bill adversely, and in most cases when the House disagrees to a conference report.

This is a case adversely reported; therefore it seems clear to me that the control of the measure, so far as the motion to strike out the enacting clause, has passed from the gentleman from Kentucky, and that the Chair, if it was insisted upon, should recognize the gentleman from Indiana or any other gentleman similarly situated.

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I think what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] has said is strictly correct. I submit this to the further consideration of the Speaker. I submit that the matter of recognition is entirely within the discretion of the Speaker. The Speaker asked me as I rose for what purpose I rose, and I said that I asked for recognition. Mr. Speaker, I was on my feet; I was recognized by the Speaker. I am on the prevailing side of this motion. I think no one need call the attention of the Speaker to the fact that when a motion to strike out the enacting clause prevails in the Committee of the Whole that the man representing the prevailing side is invariably recognized by the Speaker when the committee gets back into the House.

The SPEAKER. There is no question about that.

Mr. MAPES. I recall, Mr. Speaker, very distinctly during my first term in Congress, when the committee rose after consideration of a piece of legislation, the gentleman from South Dakota, Mr. Burke, asked for recognition from the Speaker before the previous question was ordered, and Speaker Clark recognized the gentleman from South Dakota, Mr. Burke, for an hour, and he proceeded to discuss the legislation. In this case it is, I think, entirely within the discretion of the Speaker as to whether he recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky or myself, but I submit as a matter of proper procedure that I, being on the prevailing side, being on my feet first, and having been recognized by the Speaker, that I should be recognized now to debate the motion. It was not at all necessary for the Speaker to ask for what purpose I rose, but he could have recognized me if he had seen fit to do so, and I could have taken the floor and proceeded to debate the question for an hour, and I desire to renew my request now for the purpose of debating the motion.

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard on the point of order. The gentleman from Michigan asked for recognition out of order. The Speaker had not declared the question, had not declared the matter before the House——

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. No; let me state my case. Now, then, the Speaker is the organ that causes the will of the House to function. The Speaker has been present two days when an organized filibuster has been conducted——

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not aware of that fact. The gentleman says two days. Does the gentleman refer to two weeks ago?

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Yes. The Chair is aware of the fact that Monday two weeks ago there were something like 16 roll calls——

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman said two days.

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. The Chair is aware that we did not go into the committee until we had another roll call. The Chair is aware the leader of the House made a motion to adjourn and recommit the bill, and the Chair knows the House has twice voted down the proposition. The Chair knows that Mr. BARKLEY is in charge of this bill, that the House is with him trying to legislate, and here comes the gentleman from Michigan making another effort at delay——

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Now, the previous question is intended as a means to stop this very thing, and so we are asking that the Speaker assist us in enforcing the rules of the House and getting the business done.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes the gentleman would confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I shall only take a moment. I know the Speaker is absolutely fair and wants to rule as he sees the right of the proposition. Now, in my judgment, when the House votes on a measure the control passes to the side that wins that vote. Now, the Committee of the Whole decided to strike out the enacting clause of this bill. The chairman of the committee reported that to the Speaker. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] was on his feet demanding recognition, and gentlemen opposed to the bill were on their feet demanding recognition, and the Speaker probably recognized the gentlemen of the opposition because the vote in the Committee of the Whole had been favorable to them and against the bill, and there had been no vote taken which showed the sentiment of the House against the gentlemen recognized who moved to adjourn and to recommit the bill to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The Chair, as I stated, properly recognized those gentlemen, and the opposition made two motions, one to adjourn and one to refer the bill to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The House has just voted on both of those motions, urged and advocated and proposed by the opponents of the bill, which showed clearly that the majority of the House was not with that side, but against it. Then the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], who is the proponent of the bill and in charge of it, was asking recognition at the hands of the Speaker for the purpose of making a motion which tended to expedite the consideration of the bill, to wit, demanding the previous question. The gentlemen of the opposition were seeking recognition at the hands of the Speaker. It seems to me under these conditions, in view of the two votes just had, where the House had rejected the motion of the opposition, that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], who was in charge of the bill and who by the two votes of the House is shown to be the representative of the majority will of the House, is entitled to recognition.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRISP. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The gentleman has suggested that the motion to adjourn and the motion to refer being defeated, therefore the right of recognition passes to the gentleman from Kentucky. Is there anything in these two votes to indicate that the people who now want to end this thing by rejecting the bill would not have voted down those motions upon rejecting the bill?

Mr. CRISP. I think this House is a very intellectual House, and I know that every man who voted to recommit was opposed to the bill, and I know the Speaker wishes to rule fairly.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is aware of one gentleman whom he knows was against the bill who voted against the motion to adjourn. There may be others.

Mr. CRISP. Well, there are exceptions to all rules. That does not change the rule.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois rose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the only question here is on the merits of the proposition. The Committee of the Whole House made an adverse finding on this bill, and adopted a motion to strike out the enacting clause. There has been nothing since that time that expressed the views of the House in any different way. The first motion that was made was a motion to adjourn, and that was decided adversely. Now, in what way did that show that the will of the House had changed on the matter of striking out the enacting clause? It might well be that a Member would vote against adjourning who would be in favor of striking out the enacting clause.

The next motion was to recommit the bill to the committee. That did not decide the question which is now before the House, namely, whether the enacting clause of the bill should be stricken out, because it might well be that there are those here who do not desire to recommit this bill to the committee and at the same time might be in favor of striking out the enacting clause.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Is it not true that, so far as the House is concerned, this motion has not had one single sentence of debate, and would it not be a hardship to deprive anybody in the House of an opportunity to discuss that?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes. I am speaking on the question of which side should be recognized, those favoring the striking out of the enacting clause or the friends of the bill. The proponents of the motion to strike out the enacting clause have not been heard. The last expression of the House was in favor of that motion, and until the House expresses itself otherwise on that question the proponents of that motion are entitled to recognition. When two gentlemen rise, one who was in favor of that motion and the other against it, the one in favor of it ought to be recognized.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The very motion to refer to the committee would give the bill further life, would keep it still further before the House for consideration.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes. I think the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] ought to be recognized.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard for a moment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, may I cite a precedent to the Chair?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. A bill in the last Congress coming from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to make Lincoln's birthday a legal holiday in the District of Columbia was pending in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Mr. Mann, of Illinois, moved to strike out the enacting clause, and when we came back into the House Mr. Mann demanded recognition to make the same motion. There was an attempt on the part of Mr. Focht, then chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, to take recognition away from Mr. Mann, and the Speaker then held in favor of Mr. Mann, and recognized him, he having succeeded in striking out the enacting clause in committee.

The SPEAKER. There is no question about that.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I am asking for recognition.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, may I say a word, and only a word?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the House two weeks ago voted to take the bill away from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. By that vote, under rule 27, the House voted immediately to consider the bill. The House then took charge of the bill, and the Chair recognized the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], representing the House, to have control of the measure. Only a few moments ago the House voted down the motion to send that bill back to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The motion was to send the bill back to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and the House refused to do it.

Now, having twice refused to leave the bill in the control of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, what motion has been passed to send it to any committee? None whatever. It is still in the House, under the rule. How, then, does any member of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee have a preferential right to make a motion concerning this bill? The opposition control was in Committee of the Whole. But we are now in the House, and the House having by those two votes shown its determination to keep the bill in the House that would seem to decide who has the right to have charge of it.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, when the Speaker took the chair and the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House reported to the House, the proposition before the House was the motion to strike out the enacting clause. Now, the friends of that motion were certainly entitled to take charge, but their right was deferred by a preferential motion under the rules, to wit, the preferential motion to refer the bill to the committee, a right given under the rules. That motion has been disposed of and put out of the way, so, necessarily, the House recurs to the proposition that was before the House and which was delayed by the preferential motion, to wit, the motion to strike out the enacting clause, and therefore we are back to the motion to strike out, and the friends of that motion are certainly entitled to take control of the motion.

The motions which were defeated—the motion to adjourn and the motion to recommit—were not such essential motions under the rule pertaining to the motion to strike out as would cause the friends of the motion to strike out to lose control of the proposition to strike out.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. It might very well happen that some one voting against the motion to adjourn and some one voting against the motion to refer might like an opportunity to vote now on the question of striking out the enacting clause.

Mr. SINNOTT. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule. There are certain questions about which there can be no doubt. When the enacting clause of a bill has been stricken out by the committee, there is no question but that when the bill comes back into the House the side which favored the striking out of the enacting clause is entitled to control and to take it away from the proponents of the bill, who before had control. It does not always follow that when a motion is defeated the parliamentary control changes. A great many times a committee is beaten or a side is beaten, and the control does not pass, but there is no question that in this case—as the Chair thinks everyone will admit—control does pass.

Now, what has happened since? And, by the way, adverting to the remarks one gentleman has made, as if filibustering affected this question. To the Chair's knowledge there has not thus far been the slightest indication of filibustering. Filibustering would have been very easy on the original motion to go into Committee of the Whole and before that; time could have been consumed indefinitely, but none has been up to date, and the Chair feels he ought to state he has not seen any evidence of it. Just now on the motion for the previous question no roll call was demanded. The rule of the House provides that—

> Whenever a bill is reported from a Committee of the Whole with an adverse recommendation, and such recommendation is disagreed to by the House, the bill shall stand recommitted to the said committee without further action by the House, but before the question of concurrence is submitted, it is in order to entertain a motion to refer the bill to any committee, with or without instructions.

Now, when the committee came back with the recommendation to strike out the enacting clause, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] moved that the House adjourn. That was defeated. It does not seem to the Chair that it could ever be held that the decision of a motion to adjourn could have any effect upon the passing of the control of the bill. Moreover, the Chair in this instance is ruling not for this particular case, because the Chair in this particular case has a decided opinion as to who are the friends and who are the opponents of this bill, and if he took that into consideration exclusively his ruling might be different; but it is important that this ruling should be made for the future, because the Chair finds no direct decisions upon the question as to whether this motion to refer, which the rule allows, is such a motion as transfers control from one side to the other, according to the result of the vote, and the Chair thinks that question is important.

When a motion to strike out the enacting clause prevails, it unquestionably changes control. Now, just consider the rule: There shall be allowed before the House acts on that recommendation of the committee one motion to refer with or without instructions. Now, it might very well be in the future—the Chair does not think it was so in this case—that the motion to recommit is made not by the persons who favored the striking out of the enacting clause but by their opponents. The presumption would be that, having succeeded in the committee, they would also succeed in the House and would wish to come to an immediate decision; and apparently the provision for a motion to refer was inserted so that the friends of the original bill might avert its permanent death by referring it again to the committee, where it could again be considered in the light of the action of the House. In such a case, which would seem to be the natural and normal one, it would be most unreasonable to hold that when the motion to refer was defeated the contest should go back to the sponsors of the bill. And even if the Chair should be of opinion that in this case those who moved to refer were hostile to the bill, yet the question whether the defeat of the motion to refer changes the parliamentary control ought not to depend upon the opinion which the Chair holds of the motives of gentlemen but should be a definite, settled rule. The Chair, therefore, thinks, which is contrary to his original inclination, that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] is entitled to recognition.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit a parliamentary inquiry, a good many of the Members, as a matter of convenience, whichever side they are on, would like to know what to expect, and if the Chair would not object, I would like to raise an inquiry which will facilitate the comfort and convenience of the Members. As I understand it, the gentleman who now has the floor has one hour——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to an hour.

Mr. WINGO. Yes. The gentleman can hold the floor for an hour——

The SPEAKER. If he wishes to.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman can do either one of two things, as I understand. He can either use all of that hour himself or yield part of the hour to others who may want to speak. Will the Speaker hold that he can speak for five minutes, as an illustration, and then yield five minutes to some one else and prevent the gentleman from Kentucky from being recognized in the interim?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so. Of course, if he should make a motion, that would end it. If he simply debates the matter, the Chair thinks the gentleman could either use his time or yield it.

Mr. WINGO. The contention will be made, I might state to the Chair, that if the gentleman speaks for five minutes and then seeks to yield to some one else, that the gentleman from Kentucky would then be entitled to recognition or some one else opposed to the motion.

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. WINGO. That question is bound to come up and it would facilitate the convenience of Members to know what the situation will be.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already told the gentleman from Kentucky that he would recognize him whenever the gentleman from Michigan yields the floor, and at the end of an hour at any rate.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman from Michigan may proceed for five minutes, for instance, and then say, "Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio and reserve the balance of my time," and the gentleman from Kentucky will contend that the debate should alternate.

The SPEAKER. Oh, no; the Chair thinks the gentleman from Michigan is entitled to one hour, to be used either by himself or to yield.

Mr. WINGO. Well, there are some mighty good Republicans who want to go to dinner.

The SPEAKER. Perhaps the gentleman from Michigan could notify the House how much time he expects to use.

Mr. WINGO. I think it would be for the convenience of Members on both sides if the gentleman would state whether he is going to use the one hour.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I had intended to submit the same parliamentary inquiry that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] has submitted as soon as quiet was restored. Personally, I shall take but a few minutes, but there are some Members opposed to this bill who did not have a chance to debate it, to whom I would like to yield the balance of my hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman would be entitled to do that.

Mr. MAPES. I imagine we will consume the major part of the hour.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order we have not a quorum. We ought to have a quorum here.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman insist on his point?

Mr. BLANTON. I insist on it. We ought to have a quorum here. The Constitution requires it.

The SPEAKER. It is clear there is not a quorum present.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and eleven Members have answered to their names; a quorum.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, so far as I am concerned, I recognize the hour, and I also recognize the fact we are likely to be here for some time this evening, and I am satisfied to proceed with the number who are here. I have no desire to have anyone, so far as I am concerned, make a point of no quorum while I am occupying the time that I will occupy. I hope that no one will.

I had no idea when I asked the Speaker for recognition to debate this motion that any point of order would be made or that anything further would happen than that I would be permitted to discuss this bill for a few minutes and put into the RECORD a few things going to the merits of the legislation which I think ought to be considered by the Members of the House.

I think this procedure this afternoon has disclosed the folly of attempting to consider a piece of legislation of this importance on the floor of the House of Representatives without any consideration by a committee. This is a bill going to the very vitals of the railroad-labor section of the transportation act.

Mr. FREE. Mr. Speaker, I think it is quite evident there is not a quorum present, and I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. MAPES. I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. FREE. Then I move we adjourn.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield the floor for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. FREE] can not make that motion.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present, and there ought to be one here. The Constitution says so.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that the roll call has just demonstrated that a quorum is present.

Mr. BLANTON. It is very evident there is not a quorum here now.

Mr. MAPES. I hope the gentleman from Texas will not insist on that point.

Mr. BLANTON. It is a constitutional right.

Mr. MAPES. The gentlemen who have left the Chamber have evidently gone to their dinner.

Mr. BLANTON. I insist on the constitutional right of the House to have a quorum here.

Mr. MAPES. I would like to make a brief statement and then I will yield part of my time to other gentlemen who want to discuss this question.

Mr. BLANTON. That is not going to do any good unless there are more on the floor of the House than the small crowd that is here at this time and I insist on the point of order.

Mr. FREE. I am going to insist on the point of order. If some of us are going to be punished, let us all be punished.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes a point of order there is not a quorum present. As to the point made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] there have been rulings that points of order of no quorum can not be made one after another, but the Chair thinks those rulings always apply to cases where, in the opinion of the Chair, a quorum is present. Everybody knows that there is no quorum present, and if the gentleman from Texas insists——

Mr. BLANTON. I insist, Mr. Speaker. It is a constitutional right.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will have to decide there is no quorum present.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and ninety-six Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, as I was saying before the point of no quorum was raised, I asked for recognition for the purpose of bringing out a few points in regard to the bill which I think have not been clearly brought out before. I submit that it is not an unreasonable request to ask to discuss an important measure of this kind for a few moments on a motion to strike out the enacting clause. That was my only purpose in asking for recognition.

It seems to me it is folly to attempt to compare the board of mediation and conciliation proposed to be set up in the Barkley bill with the present Railroad Labor Board. The present Railroad Labor Board has power to arbitrate labor disputes. The board of mediation and conciliation provided for by the Barkley bill has no power except to extend its good offices and to coax the employees and employers to arbitrate if they will. We know from experience how difficult that is. Different Presidents of the United States, with all the prestige of their high office back of them, have failed whenever a critical labor dispute has arisen to get the two sides to arbitrate. What more reason have we to expect the board of mediation and conciliation will be able to succeed than has the President in other cases?

I think a good deal of the criticism of the present Railroad Labor Board, or a good deal of the reason for that criticism, was brought out by the brief statement of the chairman of the board before the subcommittee of the Senate. He called attention to the fact that the representatives of these brotherhoods never were in sympathy with the legislation and have never given their moral influence to make it a success. To quote the language of Mr. Hooper, he said:

> The whole truth of the matter is that most of the leaders of the organizations are so strongly opposed to the theory upon which the labor section of the transportation act of 1920 is predicated that they have never been able to assume a fair attitude toward the board, and neither the board as constituted at present, nor any board that may hereafter be constituted. * * *
> They opposed the enactment of this provision and have fought it unceasingly ever since. If they had been contented to go along with the law and the board, and occasionally to say a good word for the board to their membership when it had rendered decisions of great importance and benefit to the men, the sentiment among the employees would have been vastly different. But from the hour the law went into effect no opportunity has ever been lost by these leaders to belabor the board and the law to their membership.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. In that same testimony does not Mr. Hooper say that the railroads were guilty in violating the decision and the union had only violated the decision once?

Mr. MAPES. No; I do not think that he says that the union had only violated the decision once, but he does say that the railroads have violated it. He says the Pennsylvania and the Erie railroads violated it, and, I think, all unbiased students must admit that the Pennsylvania and the Erie companies were subject to severe condemnation for not abiding by the decisions of the board, but they have exercised their right to go into the court and determine whether the board was within its jurisdiction or not. President Hooper says that the Railroad Labor Board itself has issued stronger condemnation of the railroads for their violation of the decisions of the board than it has of the employees.

Mr. JOCOBSTEIN. Is it not a fact——

Mr. MAPES. I do not yield any further.

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. MAPES. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. When the Committee of the Whole by a majority of 10 votes has voted to strike out the enacting clause in this bill, and it is very evident that the Congress can not pass it over the veto of the President, it being such a bad bill that the President would veto it, what is the use of wasting the time of the Congress on it?

Mr. MAPES. The bill is before Congress, and those of us who think it ought to be considered have not had any choice to determine whether the time of Congress would be wasted or not.

Mr. BLANTON. Because they have not given us a chance to consider it.

Mr. MAPES. They will not give us a chance to consider it. In further answer to the question of the gentleman from New York, the president of the Railroad Labor Board suggested some amendments to the present transportation act which might eliminate some of the objections which have been made against it.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Has the gentleman a copy of the hearings there?

Mr. MAPES. I have.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Look at page 257 and the gentleman will find that Mr. Hooper says in one instance only the employees of one railroad ignored this imperative requirement of law and went on strike.

Mr. MAPES. I do not recall his testimony on that point, but if the gentleman makes the positive statement I will not——

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. There it is.

Mr. MAPES. If the gentleman will pardon me, I do not care to yield further.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman is not going to yield further, I am going to make a point of no quorum present.

Mr. MAPES. I am not advocating all the provisions in this law——

Mr. BLANTON. The Constitution says there shall be a quorum here all the time, and I am asking that the Constitution be enforced.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I hope the gentleman will not insist on it.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order there is no quorum present, and evidently there is not.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. BLANTON. We have to get a quorum first.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. Does the gentleman insist on his point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. I insist on the point of order, it is constitutional.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman is not obliged——

Mr. BLANTON. I insist on it.

The SPEAKER. Ninety-four gentlemen are present, not a quorum.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky moves a call of the House.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Can that motion be made after the motion is carried?

The SPEAKER. Oh, no; not after it is carried, but the gentleman made it before the Chair had taken one side. It is a preferential motion. The Chair thinks the gentleman was in time to make it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I make the point of order on the motion that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] had the floor and can not be taken off his feet.

The SPEAKER. The misfortune is that he could not be taken off his feet by a motion to adjourn, but the gentleman from Texas made a point of order that there was no quorum present. That took the gentleman from Michigan off the floor, and when the point of no quorum is made there are only two motions, one is to adjourn and the other is a call of the House, and the motion to adjourn has precedence.

Mr. BARKLEY. I make the point of order the motion to adjourn is dilatory.

Mr. TYDINGS. No, sir; it is not dilatory with me, I want to go home. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. There has not been a motion to adjourn for two hours.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know which side the gentleman who made the motion is on.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Chair wants roll calls——

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to escape roll calls. The Chair does not think a motion to adjourn made at this hour of the evening, half past 7, is dilatory.

Mr. BARKLEY. It has not been a half hour, Mr. Speaker, since the motion was made and defeated.

The SPEAKER. It must have been two hours.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Has the Chair found that there was no quorum present?

The SPEAKER. The Chair announced that 94 Members were present.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Inasmuch as no business can be transacted without a quorum, can a motion to adjourn under those circumstances be considered to be dilatory?

The SPEAKER. Only two motions can be made; one for a call of the House and the other to adjourn. The Chair thinks the motion to adjourn can not be dilatory. The Chair does not think he can be justified in calling it dilatory.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Obviously a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 132, nays 169, answered "present" 6, not voting 126, as follows:

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, did the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. BURTON, vote? If he did not, I withdraw my vote of "no" and answer "present."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I was not in the Hall listening, but I would like the privilege of being recorded as "present."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is not entitled to be recorded.

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman in the Hall listening?

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. I was on the first call, but some one was talking to me on the second call and I was out.

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to vote "aye."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman in the Hall listening?

Mr. THATCHER. I was at the door.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman in the Hall listening?

Mr. THATCHER. I can not say that I was. I was in the room, but did not hear my name.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Michigan desire to insist upon his motion for a call of the House?

Mr. MAPES. No; I withdraw the motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, as we all know, has not had an opportunity to consider this bill and hear the different sides of this question. I have some statements here which are highly contradictory to some that have been made on the floor of the House. I am not sure which side is correct, but I call the attention of Members of the House to some of the statements that have come to me. For example, I have a letter here which I received from the shop employees' association of the Union Pacific system. I suppose every Member of the House received a similar one. This letter states that there are 700,000 employees of railroads that are not represented by the national organizations which sponsor this bill. Seven hundred thousand is over a third of the total of the employees of the railroads of the United States, as I am informed.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. In the Esch-Cummins law which passed the House we did not provide for any representation of any organized labor.

Mr. MAPES. I am willing to take the gentleman's statement for that. I am not arguing the merits of the Esch-Cummins law nor the merits of this statement or its correctness, but I say that the House of Representatives ought to have an opportunity to find out for itself the truth of the conflicting statements which have come to us. I am not arguing the merits. I am simply saying that the House of Representatives has not had an opportunity of its own to make any investigation to enable it to form any intelligent judgment on the question.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. It is a fact that the Esch-Cummins law did not have, and that point was not raised by the gentleman or anyone else, and yet the gentleman voted for that bill.

Mr. MAPES. I voted for the Anderson amendment, but the Esch-Cummins law was put through this House after months of consideration by the committee and by the House and after months of discussion by the country of the railroad labor provisions in it, whether it was advisable to have compulsory arbitration or not. Nobody can say that any particular group forced through this House the Esch-Cummins law. I can not yield any further.

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. MAPES. I can not yield.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will not yield, then I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MAPES. Oh, I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. BLANTON. We want to find out something about this bill, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and thirty-eight Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Anderson	Fish	Little	Sites

Edmonds	Lehlbach	Shreve

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three hundred and twenty-nine Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, among the other statements contained in this letter from the shop employees' association of the Union Pacific system is one which says:

> The bill proposes adjustment boards which are made up of an equal number of men, respectively, from the managements of railroads and from the nationally organized crafts. In this connection I would beg to draw your attention to the fact that there are, as far as the crafts mentioned in boards No. 2 and No. 3 are concerned, a greater number of men that are not members of the nationally organized crafts than those that are.

If that statement is correct, a minority of the employees is going to make up the membership of these two boards, Nos. 2 and 3, and the majority will be deprived of representation altogether. In the existing law the employees of railroads who are on the Railroad Labor Board are chosen from all of the employees, regardless of whether they are members of the nationally organized crafts or not, in accordance with rules and regulations laid down by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

A great deal has been said about the work of the present Railroad Labor Board, and I want to say that I do not think the work of that board has been perfect, but no one here has come to its defense, and I wish to put in a statement made about its work by the chairman of the board, Mr. Hooper. He said:

> The board's calendar was not a matter of gradual growth; it commenced business with an extremely congested docket.
> From April 15, 1920, to April 1, 1924, 12,543 disputed questions were referred to the Railroad Labor Board. Of these, 11,228 have been disposed of. Of the total number of disputes, 865 did not reach the status of regular docketed cases. The cases regularly docketed, as in a court, number 11,678. Of these, 10,430 have been disposed of. In some instances cases involving the same general question of wages or rules were consolidated under one docket and decision number.

You hear it stated by some that the Railroad Labor Board has decided only 1,000 cases. It is true it has rendered only a little over 1,000 decisions, but those decisions in some instances have involved a number of docketed cases, so that altogether it has decided over 11,000 of the cases out of 12,000 that have been brought before it. As President Hooper said, the work done certainly does not show that the board has been slothful in the disposition of the questions submitted to it.

Now, what does this Barkley bill propose to do? It proposes to take off the arbitration board entirely all the public representatives.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MAPES. I dislike to yield, because every time I have yielded somebody makes the point of no quorum; but I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MILLS. Before the gentleman leaves the question of the failure of the present labor board and the disregard of its decisions by the carriers, is it not a fact that Mr. Hooper testified that only four class 1 roads had violated the decisions of the board and only three short lines had violated them in 1924?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I was wondering whether the distinguished gentleman from Michigan had not read carefully the splendid substitute prepared and introduced in the House day before yesterday by our colleague from Ohio [Mr. COOPER], known as the bill H. R. 9298? Has the gentleman read that substitute?

Mr. MAPES. I have read it, but I can not say I have read it very carefully.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] would accept that substitute, I believe he could pass that bill to-night, because it is a splendid bill. It provides a means of mediation and conciliation. Hoping that somebody will discuss that bill to-night and have an audience, Mr. Speaker, I now make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold that?

Mr. BLANTON. No. I insist on the point of order. Evidently there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and seventy-nine are present—not a quorum.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Anderson	Edmonds	Leavitt	Stengle
Bacharach	Fish	Little	Strong, Kans.
Begg	Fitzgerald	McSwain	Sullivan

Dominick	Kahn	Shreve	Zihlman
Doyle	King	Sinclair
Drane	LaGuardia	Spearing
Dyer	Langley	Sproul, Kans.

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and forty-eight Members have answered to their names—a quorum.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

The doors were opened.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, we have been notified that there will be one amendment made to this Barkley bill before the consideration of the bill is completed, and it affords an illustration of who is doing the legislating on the bill. Some one referred here this afternoon to the fact that, so far as this bill is concerned, this body was not a deliberative, legislative body. In the May number of the American Federationist, the official magazine of the American Federation of Labor, which comes to the desks of all of us, we have been notified that the bill was introduced prematurely, at least before it was acceptable to all the members of the national crafts. However, they have reached an agreement, and the dissenting organizations are now satisfied. But the Congress of the United States, which must take the responsibility for the legislation, was not consulted, and no concession has been made to the Congress of the United States.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I am sorry, but I can not yield.

On page 420 of the American Federationist for May, in the discussion of the railroad labor problem, there is this statement:

> After the introduction of the bill it was discovered that certain provisions did not meet with the approval of the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Employees and the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, and after conferences this was rectified.

I am not going to take any further of the time of the House, except to read from a statement from the president of the Railroad Labor Board. I read:

The labor article of the transportation act, 1920, is predicated upon the sound theory that the American people have too much at stake in efficient and uninterrupted railway transportation to allow railroad managements and men unobstructed freedom to fight out their labor controversies at the expense of the lives and property of innocent people. The act does not, however, undertake to prohibit strikes. It merely provides that a tribunal equally representing the carriers, the employees, and the public shall openly hear the full contentions of both parties, render a public decision, and then, if that decision is disobeyed by either party, publish the fact of such disobedience to the people. The only penalty is that of the condemnation of public opinion. And yet the power of an enlightened public sentiment to prevent strikes and to quell the few that do occur has proven so efficacious that Congress is now being asked to enact a bill that carefully excludes the public from all participation in or supervision over railroad labor controversies and sets up an elaborate and expensive system of five boards, without jurisdiction or power and without the possibility of bringing to bear a potent public sentiment. Under the proposed legislation the public would be required to pay enormous sums of money from the Federal Treasury for the privilege of having its eyes bandaged, its ears stuffed, its voice stifled, and its hands bound whenever a strike is threatened, so that it might never see, hear, understand, speak, or act.

Those who hold the view that the public has no right to try to prevent transportation tie-ups resulting from strikes can not be reconciled to the transportation act, because it does assert such a right in a moderate and conservative way. No board could so function under this law as to please those who condemn the law itself because it throws obstacles in the way of railroad strikes.

Although the principles underlying the present law are based upon sound public policy, it is not surprising that its execution has disclosed certain weaknesses. None of the defects, however, are inherent in the law itself or in the policy upon which it is predicated. Most of them have been developed by efforts of a small number of carriers to evade certain requirements that seem to have been plainly intended by Congress. In one instance a similar evasion has been practiced by two labor organizations. The Railroad Labor Board has frequently declared in official orders and decisions its disapproval of such evasion. The representatives of certain of the labor organizations have emphasized these matters before the Senate Subcommittee on Interstate Commerce. It would be a comparatively simple undertaking to meet every meritorious criticism along these lines by amendments to the present law that would compel the few delinquent carriers and labor organizations to adopt the orderly procedure that has been pursued by all others. If this were done, I am sure that the employees in general would be much better satisfied with the law, that very few carriers would complain, and that the interests of the public would be correspondingly subserved.

But this Congress has had no opportunity to consider the amendments offered by President Hooper and the members of the Railway Labor Board, and it seems to me that in self-defense the only thing this Congress can do is to vote to sustain the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole and strike out all after the enacting clause of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes of my time to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota is recognized for 15 minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. Before the gentleman begins, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that motion is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. The only time when a point of no quorum is dilatory is when it is clear that there is not a quorum present. The Chair is uncertain whether there is a quorum present or not, and the Chair will count.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I would like to read the Chair some precedents upon the question of dilatoriness. This is from page 365 of Volume V of Hinds' Precedents. The first case was upon a motion made by Mr. UNDERWOOD that no quorum was present when a division had been had and the division showed there was no quorum present. Later, Mr. Sereno E. Payne of New York, moved a recess. A division being taken on ordering the previous question, there were—ayes 169, noes 5. Mr. UNDERWOOD made the point of order that no quorum was present, and the Speaker said:

The Chair is obliged to overrule the point of order, for the reason that a recent call of the House shows that there was a quorum present, and it is well settled by the rules that the point of no quorum can not be made when a recent call of the House shows the presence of a quorum.

Now, we have had six roll calls during the 45 minutes the gentleman has been speaking; that is, he has been speaking 45 minutes, and we have had six roll calls during that time. A little later, on the 28th of February, a division showed 173 ayes and 4 noes. Mr. UNDERWOOD made the point of no quorum, and Mr. Payne made the point of order that the point was dilatory, stating:

Every roll call we have had to-day has shown that there was a quorum present.

Now, later Mr. John Sharp Williams, of Mississippi, made the point of order that a quorum was not present. The Speaker ruled:

Under the practice, a vote having just been taken by the yeas and nays, the most accurate way of taking it, has disclosed a quorum. * * * The Chair overrules the point of order.

Three times on one page the Chair declared that it was a dilatory motion when the roll calls just preceding had shown a quorum present. Although a division taken had shown that there was apparently not a quorum present, the Speaker held the motion was dilatory.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask to be heard a moment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not care to hear the gentleman from Texas. This is a question to which the Chair has given considerable consideration at various times. The mere fact that a division shows that there is no quorum voting does not establish the fact that a quorum is not present. The question is whether there is a quorum present in the House.

Now, any Member has a constitutional right to insist that a quorum shall be present. Of course that is not obligatory upon any gentleman, but upon the insistence of any Member it is necessary that a quorum be present for the conduct of the business of the House. Now, the fact that a count had just been made and showed a quorum present, in the opinion of the Chair, would prevent a point of no quorum being made immediately afterwards. Nobody can keep raising the point of no quorum when it is manifest to the Chair and to the House that a quorum is really present, and that is the only occasion, it seems to the Chair, when a point of no quorum can be dilatory. It often happens, as we know, that a roll call is had, and when the roll call is over there is, in fact, no quorum present, and the Chair feels that the only time when a point of no quorum is dilatory is when it is obvious that a quorum is present. Just now the Chair is uncertain as to whether there is a quorum present or not. The Chair thinks it is pretty close, but the Chair can not hold it dilatory.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. At that time, Mr. Speaker, Mr. John Sharp Williams, of Mississippi, was evidently carrying on a filibuster, which was well known in the House.

So the ruling of the Speaker had to do not with the question of his judgment as to whether or not a quorum was present but whether the motion was purely dilatory, and I think under the situation confronting us now, with no intervening time of more than 5 or 10 minutes between these motions, we have a right to a ruling that this is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that very often it is perfectly obvious that the motion is dilatory in the sense that it is made to consume time, but any Member has a right to insist that a quorum shall be present, whether it is to consume time or whether it is to procure an audience, and the Chair does not think he has any discretion in deciding that.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the minority leader, I withhold the point a moment, as he desires to interrogate the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, may I have the attention of the gentleman from Ohio? Why should we not vote now on the motion to strike out the enacting clause? That brings the matter to an issue. The issue is perfectly clear here. The bill can not be amended to meet the approval of those who drew it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Unless the gentleman yields, the gentleman can not interrupt with a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I simply wanted to ask whether the gentleman from North Dakota has yielded the floor or is losing it.

The SPEAKER. No; the gentleman from North Dakota is not losing the floor. The gentleman from Texas made the point of no quorum and temporarily withdrew it to allow the gentleman from Tennessee to ask a question. Nobody will lose his rights.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not see any reason why the matter should not be brought to an issue on a vote to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will say to the gentleman that so far as I am concerned I am ready at any time to vote upon the question of striking out the enacting clause. However, there are some gentlemen who desire to debate it, and for the time being debate should be had. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS] has been attempting to get the floor on this subject for some time. I will be very glad a little later to ask some of the gentlemen on this side if they are not willing to dispense with further debate, I will say to the gentleman. The gentleman from Tennessee will recall that I asked unanimous consent for only 20 minutes to debate the motion to strike out the enacting clause. It was objected to. The gentleman from North Dakota at that time was ready to speak. He is ready now. He is a member of the committee, and was unable to get time in general debate. I think the gentleman from North Dakota ought to be heard. I will say I have no personal objection to having a vote as soon as possible on that question, and I will confer with gentlemen on this side, and will be glad to take the matter up later with the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I renew my point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that no quorum is present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and seven members present; not a quorum.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not entertain a parliamentary inquiry after a point of no quorum.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was just wondering if the 36 Members out in the lobby can be counted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not entertain any inquiry after a point of no quorum.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this call 359 Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Speaker, there is probably no question upon which there is a greater divergence of views among thoughtful people than the one as to what means can be used to settle disputes which continually arise between railroad operatives and their employees, with the end in view that not only the railroads and their employees but particularly the public may have a square deal and the enormous economic waste of strikes avoided.

Prior to the passage of the transportation act in 1920 the only governmental agencies which had been provided by law were, practically speaking, boards of mediation and conciliation. The most important of such laws were the Erdman Act and the Newlands Act. True, arbitration was also provided for, but it was purely voluntary. Arbitrators, when used, were selected for each specific case, and men were usually obtained unfamiliar with the subject involved.

When the railroads were returned to their owners following the war, provision was made for the present Railroad Labor Board consisting of nine members, three from the labor group, three from the management group, and three from the public. The intent of the law was that there would be voluntary adjustment boards established by agreement between the carriers, or a group of carriers, and the employees of such carriers, which would iron out most of the difficulties as they arise, such adjustment boards to be conducted without expense to the public.

If a decision could not be reached by such adjustment boards on any question, then it was the intent that the matter should be referred to the Labor Board. Other questions can also be submitted direct to the Labor Board upon the application of the carriers or the employees, or hearings can be ordered by the board on its own motion. Concurrence of at least five of the nine members is required to constitute a decision. Wide publicity is given to the decisions, and the force of public opinion is expected to compel compliance therewith when fair and reasonable.

Undoubtedly this board assumed its duties at a most difficult time. Many important and controversial questions were pending. Its decisions were naturally severely criticized, sometimes by the carriers, sometimes by the employees. There may be considerable doubt as to whether a board, the component parts of which constitute the three elements referred to, is a practical proposition. Some contend that all agencies of this nature should be eliminated, others that the agency should have greater powers than the present Labor Board has, and particularly the power to enforce its decisions both against carriers and employees.

The Howell-Barkley bill now being considered consists of 35 pages, and has been prepared by the representatives of the four big railroad brotherhoods. Other employees' organizations have been wholly disregarded. It was introduced in Congress on February 28, and the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, of which I am a member, refused to grant hearings on the bill until it had disposed of some other business which had been pending for a longer time, including the so-called truth in fabrics bill. The result was that Mr. BARKLEY and others working with him took steps to discharge the committee from consideration of the bill with a view of bringing it up in the House immediately. In this they were successful.

I have tried to give careful study to the bill, have read the hearings held before a Senate subcommittee, have ascertained the viewpoint of the operatives, of organized labor, and of members of the Labor Board. Somewhat to my surprise I have found that the bill really offers no new constructive suggestions. On the whole it simply provides for four boards of adjustment to be appointed at public expense to perform the present functions of voluntary boards of adjustment. Two of the proposed boards would have a membership of 14, two others a membership of 6, making a total of 40 at salaries of $7,000 each. Of course, offices, secretaries, clerks, and so forth, would also have to be provided, all at great public expense. Operatives and employees would have equal representation on such boards, the public none. The bill, however, provides further for a board of conciliation and mediation consisting of five men, all representing the public, to take the place of the present Labor Board, such members to receive annual salaries of $12,000. Without attempting to detail the powers of this board I might say that they would more nearly conform to the powers held by the board under the Newlands Act. At any rate the big difference between it and the present law is that it would not have the power to render decisions and make such decisions public. It could attempt to get the parties together, or to get them to agree on arbitration. The decisions of the present Labor Board made with the view of bringing the force of public opinion to bear upon operatives and labor to accept them, if regarded as just by the public, would be done away with.

Mr. Speaker, the immediate issue on the pending motion is whether or not the House is going to approve the action of the Committee of the Whole, which by a substantial majority carried the motion to strike out the enacting clause of the bill. I rather regret that an issue is forced on that motion just at this time, for it involves in reality passing upon the merits of the bill without the bill having received the consideration that one of such great importance merits. It seems to me that the proponents of the measure might have rendered a far greater service and would have taken a more consistent attitude if they had voted for the motion just defeated to recommit the bill to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, where it could have received the thorough consideration that is required on such a highly controversial measure as this is.

I am not one of those who believe that there is no merit whatsoever for the suggestions in the bill or that the question involved is entirely one-sided. I regard it as important, and in my feeble way I have tried to arrive at definite conclusions thereon. I have not simply considered it as to how it may affect the 2,000,000 railroad employees in this country, or the couple of million people who may be owners of railroad securities or who may be the owners of the railroad stock in this country. The test that I have tried to bear in mind throughout is whether it would or would not be for the best interest of the general public. I am one of those who believe that the owners of railroad securities, that the owners of railroad stock, and that organized railroad labor are pretty well able to take care of themselves. It even appears that they may have some representatives on the floor of the House specifically pleading their case and fighting their battles from time to time; but it seems to me that most of us, at least those who represent the ordinary kind of districts throughout this country, ought to have in mind the best interests of the entire public rather than of special groups. [Applause.]

There are two particular features that I want to stress further, and they are the two which, to my mind, are conclusive of what we should do on this bill. One of them is the proposition of setting up four national boards of the Government with 40 members on them with a salary of $7,000 apiece, but representing primarily, if not solely, the two interested parties to the controversy. [Applause.]

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I have a constitutional right to hear anything good that may happen. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURTNESS. I will be glad to assist my good friend from Nebraska in his desire for the light.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CASEY] this afternoon made this statement, as I recall it: That the public had absolutely no business to be represented upon the boards of adjustment. I am inclined to agree with him on that proposition. They deal with grievances between the carriers and the employees, and have nothing to do with wages or working conditions. But if the public has no right to be represented on the boards of adjustment, if the members of the boards of adjustment are to constitute solely the special advocates of the two parties to the controversy, I ask you in all fairness what business has the Public Treasury, the individual taxpayers, to pay the salaries and other enormous expenses of these members? [Applause.]

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. I yield.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman from North Dakota will recall that the public was not represented on the adjustment boards that adjusted the wages in the anthracite coal situation a few months ago, and by reason of that fact there was loaded on the public the additional expense growing out of that increase, and that is what would result from this sort of legislation.

Mr. BURTNESS. The gentleman is undoubtedly right. Even the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CASEY], a representative of organized labor, made the argument this afternoon in supporting this bill that the present Labor Board, consisting of three representatives of labor, three representatives of the managers, and three of the public, furnishes an opportunity for collusion between representatives of the carriers and its employees, but he forgot to tell the membership that the present provision in the transportation act relating to the Labor Board provides that these men can not render any decision on important questions unless at least one of the members representing the public on the board joins in the decision.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. Not at present, but a little later. Let us see what the present law is with reference to boards of adjustment. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. NELSON] told us in glowing terms this afternoon as to the good that would result from the provisions in this bill urging the two sides to get together and make up their differences, but everything he said in that regard could just as well be said in support of the provisions of the present law, section 302 of which reads as follows:

SEC. 302. Railroad boards of labor adjustment may be established by agreement between any carrier, group of carriers, or the carriers as a whole, and any employees or subordinate officials of carriers, or organization or group of organizations thereof.

Those of you who listened to the splendid address made this afternoon by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER], who himself came to Congress from a locomotive cab, years ago, and who has so ably represented the interests of labor here, but who refuses to follow the dictates of labor leaders on this bill; those of you who heard Mr. COOPER know that a large number of such boards have been established all over this country, on most of the railroads of the country, not only here in the East, but in the South and in the West as well. Shall we undo the splendid work now being done by these boards?

While I think it would be absolutely improper for the Public Treasury to pay the salaries of special pleaders for any cause in a controversy of this sort, I for one do not regard that as the most important reason for opposing this bill.

I come now to the second main feature I desire to emphasize, and that is the fact that if you adopt this bill you are taking a step backward from the step that was taken in the transportation act, when Congress tried to make public opinion a moving force in the settlement of industrial disputes between labor and capital engaged in railway transportation. I think in the short discussion here on the floor of this House upon the merits of the bill not sufficient attention has been paid to just what the present act is, so let me quote just a very few of the provisions from it, so as to refresh your minds with reference to it. Section 304 provides for the personnel of the board. Section 307 provides the duties of the board:

SEC. 307. (a) The Labor Board shall hear, and as soon as practicable and with due diligence decide, any dispute involving grievances, rules, or working conditions, in respect to which any adjustment board certifies to the Labor Board that in its opinion the adjustment board has failed or will fail to reach a decision within a reasonable time, or in respect to which the Labor Board determines that any adjustment board has so failed or is not using due diligence in its consideration thereof.

To decide the dispute is the primary and fundamental duty of the board. What happens when this board makes its decision? Is it enforced or not?

In answering that question I want to quote now one of the most important provisions in the entire act, as I view it. I believe this provision fully justifies the establishment of the present Railroad Labor Board, and that we should hesitate in setting up any new tribunal without some such similar power.

All decisions of the Labor Board shall be entered upon the records of the board; and copies thereof, together with such statements of facts bearing thereon as the board may deem proper, shall be immediately communicated to the parties to the dispute, the President, each adjustment board, and the commission, and shall be given further publicity in such manner as the Labor Board may determine.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. In just a moment. This provision just quoted is not a case of a tribunal being given the power to say to any man that he must work or that he must not work. It was an attempt to give to a tribunal upon which the public has representation, a tribunal before which also special representatives may present the viewpoints of the two parties to the controversy as well as possessing membership thereon, a tribunal whose decision must be made by a majority vote, including at least one vote of the public representatives, and it does give to such tribunal and to its decision when found just and reasonable the backing of the force of public opinion. Is not that advisable? Is it not fair to railroad labor? I for one can not for the life of me believe that the great railroad employees of this country have any need to fear the opinion of the public with reference to their rights in dealing with the owners of the railroads.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. The gentleman is aware of the decision of the Supreme Court that the decision of the Labor Board is not binding on either party. The gentleman says that he believes that the public should have the benefit of the decision of the Labor Board. That Labor Board decided that the striking employees had outlawed themselves, whereas the railroads which failed to obey or consider the decision of the Labor Board were all right.

Mr. BURTNESS. That is not a fair statement of the facts; but let us see just what has happened in that regard. Let us ascertain the facts as shown by the testimony submitted before the Senate committee.

Mr. McKEOWN. Does the gentleman agree with that decision of the Labor Board?

Mr. BURTNESS. I agree that there is now no tribunal, no power, no court that can enforce the decisions of the Labor Board, that can, for instance, make an employee work against his will, or a railroad employ a certain set of men at a given wage, but I do not believe that the gentleman from Oklahoma contends that such power should be given under the law. I do contend, however, that whenever any decision of the Labor Board has been regarded as fair by the public, it has shortly been accepted as such by the interested parties with very rare exceptions. The gentleman will remember that in the fall of 1921, after the reduction in railroad wages had been made by the order of the Labor Board, several at least of the great railroad organizations of the country voted to strike.

And you will remember, if you think back that far, that hour by hour you were waiting to find out whether the strike order would actually go into effect. In fact that very hour and minute had been set on the great transportation systems of the country. I am not talking about the shopmen's strike of 1922 but the strike that in the fall of 1921 would have tied up every wheel of rolling stock on every railroad of the Nation. As I said, you were wondering hour by hour whether that strike would actually become a reality, and out in the Northwest, where we were dependent on coal, when we realized that fall and cold winter weather were soon at hand there was many an anxious home which wondered whether there would be enough coal coming over the transportation systems to that great country to keep the people from freezing to death during the winter. You will recall, if you are fair, that it was the force of public opinion crystallized around the decisions of the Labor Board which prevented that strike. Not a single one of the organizations went upon the strike they had voted, and is there anyone here to-night who will say that on the whole the railroad employees have not been dealt with fairly or that they are not to-day enjoying reasonable success and prosperity, at least on a par with the average trained individual throughout this country? [Applause.]

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. I want to say this: I wish it were a fact that the clerk in the store, the clerk in the bank or office, the man in the ordinary white-collar job, the small business man, and particularly the thousands, yes, millions, of farmers scattered throughout this Nation were earning to-day as comfortable a living and getting as many of the necessaries and comforts of life as are the railroad employees generally. If they were, gentlemen, you would not be asked here in the next two or three days to pass such a bill as the agricultural interests are asking you to pass, the McNary-Haugen bill, to which we hope you will give your earnest support.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. I do not yield.

Mr. SCHAFER. I would deny that statement.

Mr. BURTNESS. Oh, does the gentleman deny my statement regarding the wages now received by railway labor?

Mr. SCHAFER. I deny the gentleman's statement.

Mr. BURTNESS. The gentleman's contention about railroad labor to-day is, then, that they are entitled to higher wages than they are now receiving?

Mr. SCHAFER. Yes; I do.

Mr. BURTNESS. All right. But I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin and a prominent representative of organized labor what are you going to do besides yielding to the demand for higher wages for railroad employees of the country? If you yield to that, what are you going to do for the rest of the people who are not getting anything like what the railroad men are getting? I yield for you to answer that. [Applause.]

Under the general leave to extend my remarks I insert herewith several extracts from the testimony of Mr. Ben W. Hooper, chairman of the Railroad Labor Board and one of the representatives of the public, which I believe Members will find of general interest and of importance. I submit that this testimony should be carefully considered before a final vote is had on the bill:

Title III of the transportation act, 1920, was the result of much thought and discussion in Congress. It received the bipartisan support of both Republicans and Democrats and the approval of President Wilson. In a sense it was a compromise measure, too weak to please some and too strong to suit others. It was not perfect, and its administration during a period of four years has served to bring out and emphasize both its good and bad points. Upon the whole, however, it was the greatest forward step that has ever been taken in our country, and perhaps in all countries, for the protection of the public against railway strikes and at the same time the conservation of the rights of both carriers and employees.

In appraising this law and the work of the board which has functioned under it the abnormality of times and conditions must be weighed.

* * * * * * *

From April 15, 1920, to April 1, 1924, 12,543 disputed questions were referred to the Railroad Labor Board. Of these 11,228 have been disposed of. Of the total number of disputes, 865 did not reach the status of regularly docketed cases. The cases regularly docketed, as in court, number 11,678. Of these, 10,480 have been disposed of. In some instances cases involving the same general question of wages or rules were consolidated under one docket and decision number.

The foregoing certainly does not show that the board has been slothful in its disposal of the questions submitted to it.

It is, of course, true, as shown by Mr. Roberston, the spokesman of the labor organizations, that many cases are still pending before the board and that some of them were submitted quite awhile ago; this situation is due to several causes:

First. The enormous number of cases presented to the board.

Second. The fact that cases of major importance, such as wage and rules disputes, have been given precedence, and these involved hundreds of millions of dollars and could not hastily be dispatched. A great majority of the cases remaining are grievance cases, each affecting the rights of a small number of employees, usually one. Right now the board is enjoying the first period it has ever had when no big, general questions of rules and wages were pending before it. As an evidence that this will enable it to expedite the cases on the calendar and remove the complaint, the fact is pointed to that during the month of March the board has closed by decisions 179 dockets.

Fifth. That this country would have been filled with successive strikes, some of them of great magnitude and destructiveness, had it not been for the work of the board, no well-informed man can question. Both sides were determined to fight, and they did fight, but as a rule they thrashed out their respective contentions before the board like good American citizens, and stood loyally by the decisions.

* * * * * * *

The great majority of the 201 class I carriers have scrupulously obeyed the board's decisions. The wages and rules fixed by the board are almost universally effective throughout the country to-day.

* * * * * * *

The only fair criterion by which this matter can be judged is the action of the board under section 313 of the transportation act, which empowers the board to investigate an alleged violation and to formally declare it to be such.

Up to April 1, 1924, four different class I carriers and three short lines had been formally and officially declared by the board to have violated its decisions. These roads are as follows:

Class I carriers: Erie Railroad Co., 14 violations; Pennsylvania Railroad system, 3 violations; Chicago & Alton Railroad Co., 1 violation; Fort Smith & Western Railway Co., 1 violation.

Short-line railroads: Duluth, Missabe & Northern Railway Co., 1 violation; Interstate Railroad Co., 1 violation; and Butler County Railroad Co., 1 violation.

The carriers which have violated the decisions of the board in the most persistent and hurtful way are the Pennsylvania and the Erie. The course adopted by these two carriers is not approved by other railroad managements and has not been followed by the management of any other railroad in the United States.

Commenting upon the contention that the voluntary arbitration provisions of the Howell-Barkley bill would be used effectively, Mr. Hooper testified as follows:

It is true that it provides for arbitration boards to pass upon questions of wages and working conditions, but the submission of a dispute to an arbitration board is purely voluntary on both sides, and the bill leaves the implication that no odium would attach to either party for refusing to arbitrate.

Now, it was said this morning in discussion of this very point that odium would adhere to the party refusing to arbitrate. That I think can hardly be said, in view of what happened in connection with the dispute that resulted in the enactment of the Adamson law when mediation and conciliation was then in effect, and when even the mediation and conciliation urgently and persistently interposed by the President of the United States himself failed to settle the difficulty, and when all offers of arbitration under existing laws were absolutely rejected.

It sets up a board of mediation and conciliation, composed of five members, without any power to pass upon disputes, but with the power to mediate and conciliate, if that can be termed a power.

This board of mediation is also empowered to appoint the "balance-of-power" member or members on arbitration boards.

Even the proponents of this bill can not very well claim that the board has been of no value. I quote the following expressions of the Railway Clerks' Magazine, which represents one of the organizations supporting this bill:

Some good has undoubtedly been accomplished by the Labor Board functioning under the provisions of the transportation act. During the readjustment period following the return of the railroads to private operation there perhaps would have been more trouble between the carriers and employees had there been no board. It is probable that some of the carriers that have been so diligent in breaking up unions would have been more successful had it not been for the intervention of the Labor Board. It is not with the thought of destroying whatever good has resulted to both carriers and employees from existing legislation that the change is proposed, but to substitute something better.

The following editorial from the same magazine deserves serious consideration. Does it mean that the right to tie up the country's transportation system at any time regardless of the rights of the public must be retained and without giving the public any right to attempt to prevent it?

The board has become a deterrent to the natural economic power of an organized group of workers.

It has also at times acted as a deterrent against hard-boiled managers to the advantage of the workers, especially among the groups not well organized, preventing wage reductions and the imposition of unfair working conditions. But granting that the board has established rates for certain groups of unorganized or poorly organized employees that are higher in some instances than might have obtained otherwise, that kind of a paternalistic policy will not benefit the wage earners in the long run. The same group of workers solidly organized could have secured more than they received at the hands of the Labor Board.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 16 minutes remaining.

Mr. MAPES. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH]. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. I agree with the suggestion made to me not long ago by my friend from Kentucky that it would be desirable to have a vote shortly upon the motion now pending, to strike out the enacting clause, with the understanding that after that vote we shall ask an adjournment, there being evidently no further object to be attained by being in session longer, and I would be prepared to ask the gentleman from Michigan to yield to the gentleman from Kentucky to make just a brief statement, if he desires, and to move the previous question in order that we might have a vote and then the House shall stand adjourned.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to me?

Mr. MAPES. I will yield to the gentleman, but I think the gentleman can answer the gentleman's question in the time of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BARKLEY. How much time?

Mr. MAPES. I yielded the gentleman from Ohio two minutes and that time has not yet expired.

Mr. BARKLEY. I want to make a statement. We understand each other about this matter and if the gentleman is willing to yield me five minutes in which to make an explanation it may facilitate the consideration of this matter.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Of course I have absolute confidence in any word the gentleman from Kentucky gives me, but I simply wanted the House at large to know what the understanding was.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will undertake to make that perfectly plain if the gentleman will yield to me. If he is not willing to yield under those conditions I am not willing to accept time.

Mr. MAPES. I yield the gentleman from Kentucky five minutes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I heard a story of a good woman who lost her husband, and the doctor said to her, "What were your husband's last words?" She said, "He had none, I was with him until the end." [Laughter.]

Whatever else may happen to-night, I hope to have the last word. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, when I introduced this bill I introduced it in good faith, believing that its enactment would bring industrial peace upon the great transportation systems of our country. When I asked the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to give consideration and hearings to that bill I did that in good faith, in the hope that the committee might give it such consideration as it would be expected to give an important measure of that kind. Failing to secure any consideration on the part of the committee, I took advantage of the rule which permitted me to move that the committee be discharged.

That action on my part evidently met the approval of this House, because it discharged the committee; and on every roll call since that time, two weeks ago, those who are in favor of this bill have been in a majority. Every effort that has been made by those who sought to hinder the consideration of the bill in the House has been made by those who pretended to be offended because the committee refused to consider it. But, Mr. Speaker, every effort on the part of the enemies of this bill, who pretend to be offended because the committee refused to consider the bill, in resorting to every parliamentary device to prevent consideration here, has belied their professions, because they have done everything possible to prevent this House from considering it. [Applause.] And it is nothing but the sheerest and rankest hypocrisy to pretend to be outraged because we took the bill from the committee, to lend every effort that parliamentary skill can lend itself to to prevent the House from considering the bill on its merits.

I want to thank every Member who has stood solidly for the consideration of this bill. I do not know how much longer Members would be willing to remain here. But I do not desire to punish Members by asking them to stay here all night. It has been manifest that the intention of the opponents of this bill is not only that it shall not pass, if they can prevent it, but that it shall not be given decent consideration on the part of this House if they can prevent it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to punish Members of the House by asking them to stay here all night. It is apparent that the consideration of the bill can not be completed to-night. I intend to move the previous question and allow the record to stand as it is, each individual Member being answerable to his constituents, and let him answer to them when the time comes. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the pending motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky moves the previous question on the motion, which is, Shall the House approve the recommendation of the committee? The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] yielded for that purpose?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS] to concur in the recommendation of the committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. On that, Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. As many as are in favor of the motion to concur in the recommendation of the committee to strike out the enacting clause of the bill will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 160, nays 188, answered "present" 9, not voting 76, as follows:

Mr. Dyer with Mr. Weller.
Mr. Sweet with Mr. Wilson of Louisiana.
Mr. Taber with Mr. Jones.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I wish to withdraw my vote of "nay" and vote "present." I understand my pair is not voting.

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw my vote of "nay" and be recorded as "present." I am paired with the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. Jost.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I wish to withdraw my vote of "nay" and vote "present," inasmuch as I am paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. BURTON.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw my vote of "nay" and be recorded as "present," because I am paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. BEGG. If he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. RAGON. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. KERR. Since he is not present, I wish to withdraw my vote of "nay" and be recorded as voting "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MORIN, indefinitely, on account of illness in family.

To Mr. CABLE, indefinitely, on account of death of his father.

To Mr. PATTERSON, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. COLLINS (at the request of Mr. RANKIN), indefinitely, on account of attending lawsuit in which he is defendant.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Teapot Dome situation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the Teapot Dome situation. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. Speaker, I also ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the post-office employees' salary bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota also asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the post-office employees' salary bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

A TEAPOT DOME SITUATION

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. Speaker, I secured unanimous consent to extend my remarks that the Minnesota "Teapot Dome" situation might be exposed, and the people of my State made aware of the plot to wrest from them and transfer to private interest the patronage, prerogatives, and perquisites of United States Senator by the election as Republican national committeeman of William F. Brooks, junior partner of Backus-Brooks Co.

I know that I shall avail but little against the tremendous din of paid claquers, subsidized press, and carefully manipulated but misguided campaign organizations.

I realize that it is a futile battle between the weak and the strong—that it is a battle of the humble cobbler, carpenter, mechanic, and laborer in general against the minions of Midas; that it is the tiller of the soil against the speculator, gambler, and seeker for riches and glory unearned by the sweat of the brow; that it is the small banker, business man, clerk, salesman, and merchant against monopolistic trust; that it is the scheme of the old selfish political plunder gang, headed by Backus-Brooks & Co., with their hands in almost every business of the State, holding in contempt assessors, county commissioners, State tax commissions, as well as income-tax officers, with a well-known trend of ruthlessness in their operations well greased with their millions of ill-gotten gain, filched from the Commonwealth, against a humble, blind representative of the people.

The people have trusted me in ever-increasing, overwhelming majorities for 10 years, and I would fail in respect to myself and to my people and to my God, if I shirked this disagreeable, dangerous, unwelcome, imminent, and imperative duty of exposing to the people of Minnesota the long, grisly fingers that are reaching in to control their national politics.

A Congressman holds the power of attorney to represent his State and country, and it is not only his province to transact the legislative business of his State but it is also his duty to warn the voters of impending dangers and to do what he can to thwart the ulterior motives of selfish interests who seek to turn the ends of government to their private profit.

Neither party nor locality should warp his judgment when the great principles or safety of his country and its Constitution are at stake.

The problem of the endurance of our Republic is the problem not only of having all the people understand the questions upon which legislation is proposed but of the underground wires that lead to the election of men that must decide these questions, and in order that all the people might have the fullest opportunity to know what was going on in their Government or what schemes were being concocted to thwart good government Congress has very wisely provided what is known as the franking privilege, by which system any public document, letter, or information pertaining in any way to the business of the Government or to the exposure of plots against its security or unhampered functioning can be mailed free to any citizen throughout the country.

Congress has also gone to the extreme, and rightly, in minimum rates to the newspapers that the fullest privilege of free speech and free press may be preserved. The safety of our Republic rests upon our free institutions, unhampered information, and our public schools, from whose towers the Stars and Stripes tell in what a spirit are reared our coming men.

The franking privilege is one of the bulwarks of the people's liberties, upon which the foundation of our Republic must stand, for it is upon the education and understanding of our people that our republican institutions must rely for their perpetuation.

Every citizen has a right to know what laws are proposed, what are enacted, what are defeated, the attitude of the Congressmen or public officials upon each of these, and their reasons for or against them, and they also have a right to the vision and experience of their paid public servants. A Congressman who fails to call a warning to the aggregate of citizens in danger is as negligent as one who would fail to warn an individual in immediate peril. The franking privilege is expressly given the people, and it is the Congressman's duty, through his frank, to see that the people are informed as to the public business, and the closer he keeps in touch with them the more efficient and democratic will be his vote.

Newspapers can not and do not give full and definite information, and it can not be expected of them, for they are run for gain, and often the policy of a paper is a considerable source of income.

Often the apparent information is a plain matter of business, and there is no animosity intended to be conveyed by this statement.

No doubt the mailing privilege given to the newspapers is often abused. But the evil is so far outweighed by its necessity and benefit that the privilege should remain a lasting institution.

Too often one privilege in the interests of the people tries to get rid of another. The franking privilege is a thorn in the side of false molders of public opinion, and their attempt to drag it down should be met by understanding on the part of the people.

Without the franking privilege there will be no chance to counteract the contagion of misinformation, and public representatives would dwindle to trembling weaklings, shrinking and subservient to the swish of the whip of the interest-owned press. I hope the day may never come that honest public officials will thus be driven from the country's council, deprived by the destruction of this institution of self-defense for their public acts, and denied the opportunity of exposing to the public plots and schemes and plans of unpatriotic, selfish cliques and gangs, to control or mislead public opinion, to destroy the people's champions, and place the power of government in the hands of their tools.

The common people are the Government; the office of Congressman is their gift and they have a right to any information their public servants possess. The frank is meant to be used as an avenue to get to the people the truth, for truth will make them free and enable them to distinguish between friend and foe.

How often in the interest-owned newspapers, whose mailing privilege amounts almost to a frank, do we read, "Petty graft, which indicates the user is not the type of man the people want at Washington. Size him up. Recall that you as a taxpayer are paying the postage on the letter. A good way to show your contempt * * * is at the polls." "Cheap economy, if a man's conscience will allow him to use it." "Hundreds of thousands of dollars extorted annually from the taxpayers for paper and printing of the belchings of our Congressmen."

The writers of such as the above are either ignorant or malicious, for the Congressman must pay for paper, printing, and addressing, exactly as must the newspapers; and the postal organization and carrying facilities are permanent institutions. The expense per month is the same, whether or not a frank is included, and hence no extra cost comes on the taxpayers. The law is that—

The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD or any part thereof or speeches therein may be carried free.

Citizens have the right to secure their information concerning their Government straight from the men they send to represent them. The office of Congressman ought to reap as much public confidence as the bought-and-paid-for opinions of hireling editors of a newspaper.

If the occasional franking of a public document "extorts hundreds of thousands of dollars annually from the taxpayers," what must be the toll on the taxpayers for the mailing privilege given the newspapers?

Because of these unwarranted and vicious attacks some Congressmen are intimidated, and the people are thereby deprived of information concerning their Government.

The Backus-Brooks crowd not only hold a strangling grip upon Minnesota's financial resources but their ramifications extend into Canada, and are therefore international. A few years since, as a short cut to control of the Ontario government they put over the Farmer-Labor ticket for the purpose of securing great concessions in timber and water power. They have not been negligent in seeking to grab control of such a movement in Minnesota. They are vitally interested in the international-boundary-waters treaty between Canada and the United States. They have for years, regardless of anyone's rights, been pursuing a ruthless course in the construction of water-power dams. This high-handed policy has caused overflow damages for which they are absolutely liable under the law. The State of Minnesota alone has a claim of over a million dollars against them and the claims for destruction of private property will amount to far over another million. So besides being interested in water power they are interested in saving the millions of dollars damages from which there is no avenue of escape unless they can get into the pending treaty between the United States and Canada the proper water levels which will throw the liability for such damages upon the Government of the United States, and the United States Senate must confirm all treaties.

Then too, there is a little matter of several millions of dollars of income taxes due to the Government of the United States, which the Backus-Brooks Co. are vitally interested in escaping. I have introduced House Resolution 301 to investigate this tax steal, and in case I am the Republican candidate for the United States Senate I want it understood that I am in no way connected with this boodling reactionary gang, and if I am elected to the United States Senate I shall be as free as I have been during my 10 years' service in the House. No clique, gang, corporation, organization, or person has a 5-cent piece invested in the office I hold, and if elected to the leadership of the National Republican ticket in Minnesota I shall guide it so that the citizens of my State will not have to hold their noses when they vote the Republican ticket.

The natural inclination of the voters of Minnesota is Republican and it is only because individual Republicans have failed to measure up that it is not in the Republican ranks to-day.

The Democratic Party on account of its traditions and sectionalism is not serviceable to the people of the Northwest. The Republican Party is the best instrument through which the people of my State can arrive at much-needed results. In the State of Minnesota, where we have wide-open primaries, the people can make of any party what they will; if they will only get out in the primaries and nominate the right individuals for upon the nomination depends the control, for wrong men will make a wrong party.

The Government has filed liens for the years 1917 and 1918 upon the Backus-Brooks property for back taxes due to the amount of $1,353,372.15. The Government does not file such liens unless there is good reason to believe that statement and affidavits in reference thereto have, to say the least, not been frank. The Government action covers only 1917 and 1918, leaving the taxes for the last five years unpaid. The figures for these years are unavailable but probably increase the sum by $4,000,000. The taxes for which the Government has filed liens should have been paid six years ago. During these six years the company has saved the interest on $1,353,372.15 or about $80,000 each year. This makes approximately half a million interest saved on 1917 and 1918 taxes alone. If the Backus-Brooks Co. should finally pay the full amount claimed by the Government the delay which they have engineered would save it at least a million in interest alone.

It is of vital importance to the people of Minnesota to know how these large concerns manipulate to delay payment and how very important to such business interests it is to have influence at Washington and makes it entirely clear that they are prejudiced against men who regard the peoples' rights as sacred. I would like to go into how they have for years manipulated our State politics, but it is a long story and I think I had better confine myself to their devious trail in the national end of it. State Senator William F. Brooks is junior partner of the firm of Backus-Brooks & Co. He is the author of the Brooks bill in the State of Minnesota which made two classes of dollars, the one belonging to the special interests which could do no wrong and which could not fail to draw its profit, and the dollar of the ordinary fellow, which must take its chance in commerce.

Bill Brooks is now on his way to be Republican national committeeman of the State of Minnesota, and unless public opinion stops him he will be so elected at the Cleveland convention, for he already has in his pocket 16 votes of the 27 delegates from Minnesota. Why is he so anxious to be national committeeman? Because if things go as this old reactionary gang has planned them he will practically be the United States Senator, for the Farmer-Labor candidate will be without the pale of the Republican administration and can "but peep to what he would," and the national patronage of the State, together with other tremendous influences, will be solely within the hands of the national committeeman. This is a condition that would exactly suit these selfish interests. And this is the condition for which they have set the political stage in Minnesota.

Ever since the special election last July this outfit has been studiously circulating, by mouth and through the press, that it was impossible to elect a Republican Senator; that it was a forlorn hope and that they better nominate some good old stand-pat reactionary and go down with colors flying; that, anyway, whoever received the nomination would only be a sacrifice. That they better have things as they are and bear the ills they have than flee to others that they wot not of, and to this end a campaign of publicity, the most extensive the State has ever seen, a continuous stream of special articles, accompanied by large photographic display, was pulled off in the hopes that it would scare away anyone of dimensions, or well known enough to win, or with sagacity enough to understand their game. But looking over the senatorial situation in the last few weeks, despite all this extensive and expensive propaganda, they decided that the Republican field contained men who might win, and one of them, at least, understood their sinister plans.

It was high time to trot out somebody with whom they could secure the nomination, for once their man was nominated they could go home and go to sleep, and this would evidently be the cheapest and best finesse to play absolutely safe. So they cast about for somebody who would best serve their purpose. They finally settled upon a man named Ole. They did not like the name of Oscar or Tom. They knew about Ole, for they observed him while he was in the State senate and saw that his record was thoroughly inconsistent and that he constantly voted in opposite directions upon the same questions presented at different times, so that he would be perfectly available to be anything to anybody, for they could use the vote that fit the case. They saw, however, that his record for prohibition was constant, and, they said, with that record they could by proper influence get the Anti-Saloon League out with hammer and tongs for him. It would not matter that both of his opponents were right on this question, for right has no prestige in their lexicon. They knew with plenty of grease it could be put over. They also saw that he had voted and spoken to memorialize Congress to pass the nineteenth amendment for woman suffrage. It did not matter if one of his opponents had voted for that amendment in Congress, for with plenty of dust they could make the shadow outshine the substance, and, they calculated, with his record and plenty of money, they could organize women's clubs throughout the State in his behalf and put thousands of innocent workers to pulling their chestnuts out of the fire.

They have women already on their pay roll whom they have purposely made prominent through persistent advertising. These they are sending throughout the State to organize the women. Then, too, he is a farmer, "and," they reason, "we can work that on the farmer end of the Republican vote."

"But," said one of the less zealous, "this man Ole is the fellow that we got to sign that pamphlet we circulated against the Nonpartisan League four years ago, when we were so afraid of them that we spent one-half million dollars to lick them." "Well, that will only be an asset so far as the Republican nomination is concerned, and that's all we are interested in, and it will insure his defeat for the election and thus leave Bill in reality our Senator. Yes, everything considered, he is absolutely the best man for the Republican nomination, and we can well afford to raise $100,000 for his campaign," which amount was pledged a few days ago at a Minneapolis gathering of big financial interests.

"But," one of the cautious suggests, "this blind guy is onto us and is exposing us in his speeches." "He can not get very far. We can block all avenues for his getting over anything. We have kept him pretty well corked up during his 10 years' service. No one outside his own district knows anything about him. He has no organization; no money with which to make a State-wide campaign. We will see to it that he does not get any. We will destroy the confidence of his friends by propaganda that he is going to run a poor third. If we can beat him now we are through with him forever."

"But," the cautious one ventures, "out of a field of nine State-wide prominent men, his mere name, without even getting a statement of his candidacy in the papers at last special election, brought him within a few hundred votes of second place against a well-known State official who spent over $100,000 and who was completely organized throughout the State."

"Well, that was a fluke, because there were so many strong candidates in the field. He's little known. We must see to it that he remains unknown. Besides, this nomination comes off June 16, and he'll have to remain in Washington, so he won't be able to reach the people of the State."

"But," the wary one suggests, "he may use the privilege of the frank to get his speeches out and thus become enough known to secure that nomination; and if he does he'll be elected, because between June 16 and November he'll have plenty of time to cover the State, and he's a regular hog for speech making. He'll have over 130 days in which to make speeches. We can't with profit attack his record in any spot. He's offering $1,000 reward, sufficient amount to warrant anyone looking it up, to anyone who can point out one place in his record where he has ever voted against labor or the farmer, or has failed to champion the cause of the common folks in his entire 10 years' service. That sort of 100 per cent labor record, if it becomes known, compared with one who voted 23 times against labor, will get him the labor vote, and without the labor vote we can't hope to win. Then, too, when you place this 100 per cent farm record against a man who claims to specially represent and champion the farmer, yet who twice voted against reducing the maximum rate of interest from 10 per cent to 8 per cent, and let this record become known to the farmer, and you can see where we'll come out.

"You let this man get out to the State and show up the negligible record in the interest of the farmer of the highly advertised champion of the farm interests, and I tell you there's nothing to it but defeat, and our Bill will lose his senatorial prerogatives and we'll be out of luck."

"Well, we must leave no stone unturned to defeat him for the nomination, and Ole is our best bet, and we must do for him everything we can. We mustn't overlook spiking the blind boy's guns on the franking proposition. We must see to it at once that our newspaper fraternity come out stronger on the well-known old chorus of antifranking stuff. We've already had our newspapers do some work along the line of attempting to connect him with the Shevlin Lumber Co. and advertise him as their man Friday."

"But," suggested cautious, "you know that the Shevlin Co. were opposed to him and dumped thousands of dollars into campaigns against him, and there's not one place in his record where we could by any stretch of the imagination connect him up."

"That doesn't make any difference. His small trickle of truth can't compare with our Niagara of accusations. Besides, he won't deny that Andy Rahn is his friend, and you know and everybody knows that Andy is connected with the Shevlin outfit. We might catch him on that, for he never denies a friend, and I have heard him in speeches state that Andy Rahn was his friend and that he and Andy were kids together and shined shoes on the streets of Minneapolis. That Andy had gone his way, devoting his tremendous energies to business, while he had chosen the profession of law."

"But the people don't know it. We'll connect him up all right, and show this holier than thou people's man that the crowd who has for years controlled Minnesota's politics can not be outdone by an insignificant blind upstart."

"But what are we going to do about his soldier record? He's not only voted five times for soldiers' adjusted compensation, but is one of the foremost in Congress in advocacy of soldier legislation and the ex-service men know him as their friend." "We'll counteract that by organization, for I tell you its organization, not records, that counts at election. We'll instruct our clever writers to lambast him as a radical, a progressive, an independent, and a Democrat, for he seems to stand well with the leading Democrats of the Nation. Late Speaker

Champ Clark said, 'SCHALL is able, fearless, and a cracking good speaker,' and former Democratic Floor Leader Claude Kitchin said, 'TOM SCHALL has made good. He enjoys the esteem and confidence of the entire membership, regardless of party. He is one of the most eloquent and attractive speakers in the House.'

"You know it was SCHALL'S vote at the beginning of the war Congress, which was so evenly divided, that organized the House for the Democrats, and even though it was the only thing for a courageous man to do, for if he hadn't done it the House might have been held up for weeks or months, as it had been on other occasions when the vote was so equally divided, and yet we can turn it against him. Yes; it's true, the Senate and the President were Democratic and the President should have at such times full control. Yet the people will have forgotten all about that and it will be a proof in our claim that he is no Republican.

"But," says the wary one, "how are you going to get away with that no-Republican stuff, since he has been a member of the Rules Committee of the House for four terms, and elected to that most powerful committee of the House by the Republican Members? And this is the only political committee in the House, for it's the nozzle through which legislation gets before the House, and must be in close touch with the administration, for it's through this committee its policies must be worked into legislation. That he is one of eight Republican members, elected by the Republicans of the Nation, is indisputable evidence that he is considered a good Republican by the Nation's Republicans, and I don't see how we're going to make it stick that he's no Republican if the truth is put over to the people."

"Well, my dear man, that's just what we're not going to let go over to the people. We've got him stamped as a wild man, an opportunist, and a dangerous radical, and we're going to see to it that this reputation sticks and it ought to stick, for he's the man, as a member of the Rules Committee, that had so much to do with defeating our sedition bill after we'd taken so much trouble to get it passed in the Senate. For if he hadn't made such a stand before the Rules Committee it would have come before the House, and the House in its war fever would have passed it, and we'd have had to-day a sedition bill that would have absolutely protected us in our business enterprises, for it would have hung such radicals as dare advocate a change in our Government or criticise our public officials. He's one of those crazy fools who insist that property should stand its share of war taxes and attempts to prove it by such silly rot as this: 'The man who has a billion has had the protection of that billion, and he should pay a just tax in proportion. He draws for the protection of his property against the combined efforts of the entire Army and Navy, and in proportion to such protection it is just that he pay.'

"It's fellows like him that give us all our trouble in Washington and they must be rooted out. We don't want investigations. We don't like investigations. It's such investigations that have kicked up all this trouble in the Nation. Anyone who starts investigations is surely a radical. We can't afford to have hounds like that around, setting their teeth into us. We need men to protect our interests, not expose us. We're the backbone of the country. The natural resources of the country belong to us. We ought to have them, nor be hampered in our great work of development by fool conservationists and their tiresome investigations." "Yes; that's all very true, but how are you going to substantiate your newspaper charge of radicalism and unfitness when a patriot like ex-President Roosevelt says he believes in TOM SCHALL with all his heart?" "Oh, that demagogue. He never was right." "Well, here's Jim Mann, late leader of the House, whom no one will question as a good Republican, who said, 'Masterful, sincere, very eloquent speaker, always listened to with great interest in the House,' and Mondell, a Republican floor leader, who says, 'We of the House owe a debt of gratitude to our colleague SCHALL for the example he has set us of cheerful, helpful, efficient service. If Mr. SCHALL had two good eyes he could not be more efficient in the discharge of his duties'; and here's Congressman MADDEN, a good Republican, chairman of the great Appropriations Committee, who said, 'I have watched his activities with deep interest. I have been charmed with the force with which he has presented questions to the House. I have listened with interest to his speeches from time to time and unquestionably pronounce him one of the most forceful speakers it has been my privilege to know. I congratulate the district that sent him here on the wisdom of its choice.' And here is a good Republican, United States Senator S. D. FESS, who served with him for years on the Rules Committee when he was in the House, 'Mr. SCHALL'S high recognition among his colleagues is not due to a sense of pity, but because his ability, his industry, his devotion to his cause in public service, his constancy on the job, have impressed his personality upon each Member'; and here's Senator HIRAM JOHNSON, who says, 'SCHALL is a fighter, fearless, honest, able, eloquent.'

"And here's Rev. James Montgomery, formerly pastor of Wesley Methodist Church in Minneapolis, known throughout our State as a good Republican, now Chaplain of the House of Representatives, who says, 'A careful, painstaking, and conscientious representative of the people.' And here's a railroad man, W. N. Doak, vice president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, who says, 'SCHALL'S record is 100 per cent for labor.' And here's Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor, who says, 'He has always championed by voice and vote the interests of labor.'" "Well, that's a strong array of witnesses to go up against, but he can not get that over to the State, for the State's a mighty big place, and we know he has no money, and we'll see to it that he doesn't get newspaper space." "But he might use his frank." "Well, he can't get very far, even if he does. It's a mighty expensive job to get the addresses of the voters of the State and the few he would reach wouldn't be a patch. Besides, our newspapers will in any locality he might impress so damn the frank that it will destroy its effect, and we must see to it that he is thoroughly advertised as totally blind. He can't deny this. And that fact alone should, in the minds of the people, make him unfit for the job, and we can by proper advertisement make him ridiculous through the claim that he is working the sympathy racket." "But you can't get that over. SCHALL for years made his living, and a good living, practicing law though totally blind, and has for 10 years, among the best ability and best brains in the country, held an enviable place in Congress; those 10 years, most strenuous years in our country's history, have given rise to many great international problems as well as domestic ones which must be settled in the next few years and the experience he has gleaned during this time fits him as no other candidate running for that great office. I fear we should have chosen some one, if we expect to beat him, who has had national experience, for his national experience will be his greatest appeal for that greatest office in the gift of the people."

In exposing this public wrong, I wish to point out that the private injury to me of unjust, high-handed, unsportsmanlike, little, petty, unfair, lying propaganda is only incidental to the removal of obstacles in the path of their plot. And in the service of the people it becomes my official duty to point out, much against my personal inclinations, the falsity of such accusations. I have only used such means as the law permits to uncover their selfishness, show them forth in the nakedness of their ugly truth, to the end that the people of Minnesota might know their enemies and thus be armed with information they can easily verify and by the simple process of adding two and two together draw their own conclusions.

POSTAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. Speaker, the railway mail clerk, the custodian service, the third and fourth class postmaster, the city and rural carrier, the postal employees in general, all good and faithful servants, are scandalously underpaid. At a time when all other labor wage was on the upgrade theirs stood at a standstill, though the need for the increase was proven.

I heard a postal employee in Minnesota say, "It isn't a question any more of saving but of which bills to pay and which to let go another month." The movement to grant the postal employee salary adequate to the trust reposed in him has almost unanimous backing of the people of the United States who feel that our Government is not indigent. We are more absolutely solvent than any other country on the globe. The people who are back of this Government do not want, do not ask, faithful service that is insufficiently recompensed. Men in the Postal Service merit the recognition this bill gives. Their responsibility is great. The least inefficiency is visited with dismissal. Only gilt-edged service is accepted. The man who delivers in city and country, the man who sorts on railroad trains, the night and day clerks in post-office stations represent skilled labor, trained in speed and accuracy, in memory and in judgment, in courtesy and efficiency. They must be employees capable of a high grade of work. They deserve and must have adequate compensation for the invaluable service they render so uncomplainingly. They need this helping hand and need it badly.

It will be impossible for the service to be maintained at its present degree of excellence if these men are not at least granted a living wage. They can not continue to sacrifice their lives in toil which does not receive sufficient remuneration for them to live decently and maintain their families like Americans. It will drive out these well-trained veterans. It will drain the service, built up through long years of training, of its best men. All classes, business, farmers, homes, recognize their dependence upon this service, and realize the importance of keeping it up to high efficiency. It takes time to develop a system, and it is the height of inefficiency to destroy by thoughtless improvidence. Their small salaries will not expand to meet the continued upcurve of the cost of living. This very increase only failed to pass four years ago because it was urged the cost of living was sure to decrease. It did not do so, and it is a question of raise their wages or lose them. They can not be blamed if they try to do for themselves what their Government is too indifferent or too penurious to do for them; $26.25 to $33.75 a week as a maximum is pretty shameful in comparison with other lines of industry. These increases are recommended by the House Post Office Committee experts.

In my State there are three months of every year when motors can not be used on the rural-delivery routes. This necessitates the carrier having both motor and horse equipment. There is no extra allowance for upkeep and this extra burden has to be borne by the carrier. Gas and oil and feed have gone up and parts have increased in cost until the cost of maintaining the necessary vehicles runs around eight to nine hundred a year, according to a questionnaire conducted by the R. F. D. News. In other parts of the country where one style of vehicle does for the year, the cost does not run so high, but the vehicle allowance is desperately needed by all. Even where the cost falls to the average of $638 a year, this leaves the average net salary $1,192. This is a meager sum on which to take care of a family. There you have the reason why so many postal employees try to get part-time work. They are forced to it.

The postmaster in Boston, after investigation, found that the average cost of living of a family of four was $46.86 a week. Not a lavish allowance, either. The present weekly wage of the post-office employee, after he pays into the retiring fund, runs to $33.75. So that is why there are so many postal employees leaving a service which rewards them with a deficit after each pay day.

Adjustments are necessary in wage scale of men and women in custodian service, such as janitors, firemen, watchmen, elevator men, and engineers in the employment of the United States Government.

These Federal employees feel that they are being discriminated against. Their basic pay is only $65 per month plus the $20 bonus, making a total of $85 a month. City and county employees average $100 to $125 per month, with better conditions than in the Federal service.

The custodian service employees work eight hours a day and all day Saturday, excepting from June 15 to September 15, while city, county, and State employees work but seven hours a day and have Saturday afternoons off the year around.

The custodian service is allowed but 10 days sick leave a year; other departments of the Government under civil service are allowed from 15 to 30 days sick leave. Custodian service is allowed 15 days annual leave with pay; other departments, 30 days annual leave with pay.

There is no question but what this branch of Federal employees under civil service is discriminated against, and the Federal employees' unions all over the country are to-day crying for the adjustment of conditions which will permit them to meet the standard of living that is to-day demanded by the ordinary folk. This discrimination is well known to the authorities, and for a number of years they have been promised relief and adjustment of their pay which would permit them to meet the conditions that now exist.

It is all very fine to make compliments and call them high-sounding epithets, but the thing that counts in this world is the reward you are willing to give, the real cash you will devote to making good your fine phrases.

If you have noted the growth of the Postal Service, you will see that it has even been the effort of all, from top to bottom, to better the service, to increase its speed and efficiency, to make it more prompt. Every energy has been bent to improve it. The men are constantly trying out new methods. The business has been increasing all the time; the pay should increase with the quality of the service. It is incumbent upon us to relieve the pinch of distress, correct the injustice, and grant the long-deserved increase of salary to the hard-worked and faithful, honest, loyal postal employees.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. ROSENBLOOM, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 694. An act to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief of the Saginaw, Swan Creek, and Black River Band of Chippewa Indians in the State of Michigan, and for other purposes," approved June 25, 1910;

S. 1638. An act granting permission to Commander Dorr F. Tozier, United States Coast Guard, retired, to accept a gift from the King of Great Britain.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL

Mr. ROSENBLOOM, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on May 17, 1924, they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 3684. An act for the enrollment and allotment of members of the Lac du Flambeau Band of Lake Superior Chippewas, in the State of Wisconsin, and for other purposes;

H. R. 7995. An act to limit the immigration of aliens into the United States, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 7962. An act to extend for the period of one year the provisions of Title II of the food control and the District of Columbia rent act, approved October 22, 1919, as amended.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the House adjourns now, will the bill which has been under consideration to-day remain the unfinished business on the 2d of June, as it was to-day?

The SPEAKER. It will, in the opinion of the Chair.

PUBLIC OWNERSHIP—A PUBLIC BENEFIT

Mr. BERGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the railroad bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the railroad bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BERGER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, the argument for public ownership of all railroads, canals, and other highways as the ultimate solution of the railroad problem is so strong that it has won over nearly the whole world—outside of the United States.

Railroads and all public highways are performing a public service. Public service necessarily must be for public benefit.

It is in the nature of private ownership and private operation to obtain private profit, however, and to subordinate the benefit to private profit whenever the two conflict.

PRIVATE OWNERSHIP OF PUBLIC UTILITIES A DANGER

Therefore, it is an economic blunder and an abuse of governmental power to put into the hands of a small portion of the people the highways of the country.

It is also unnecessary to prove the great danger that the nation is subjected to by the struggles between the owners of the railroads and their employees as long as the railroads remain in private hands. So long as it is a question of private profits on one hand and better wages on the other we are bound to have trouble.

Private ownership is so inefficient that the Government had to take control of the railroads during the war in order to be able to make any use of them at all.

WE HAD PRIVATE OWNERSHIP DURING THE WAR

The claim that during the war we had Government ownership of railroads is nonsense. We did not have Government ownership during the war. We had private ownership under Government control. The railroads were so run down in every respect—especially as to roadbeds and rolling stock—that the war would have been lost had the Government not stepped in.

The Government was compelled to put in a lot of money to repair the railroads. This cost the Government about a billion and a half dollars.

And on top of this the Government guaranteed the private owners of the railroads their profits. This in the case of some of the companies ran up as high as 647 per cent—at least, in the case of one railroad. However, even the larger railroads got profits that ran as high as 45 per cent annually during Federal control.

The New York Central gathered in only 12.96 per cent, while the Chicago & Lake Erie Railroad Co. received a profit of 70.45 per cent.

Not much Government ownership about this.

RAILROADS OWNED THE GOVERNMENT

And when the time came for turning back the roads the Government agreed to continue the payment of these unprecedented profits for six months after they were back in the hands of the private owners.

Instead of Government ownership of the railroads during the war we had really private ownership of the Government by the railroads.

DISCREDITED NATIONAL OWNERSHIP

But what did the railroad managers do?

While they were undoubtedly glad enough that the Government did all this for them, they did not intend to lose their graft. Therefore they instructed their conductors and railroad employees to blame all the troubles and shortcomings—which, of course, were many, because they were inherited from the past—on Government control. They got busy in advance to discredit any possible demand for national ownership.

COMPETITION ABSOLUTE FAILURE

Besides being inefficient, however, private ownership of public utilities is one of the worst corrupting influences in our public life. The railroad corporations have always tried to influence Congress and State legislatures by all means, fair and foul.

And as to competition being the life of trade, surely competition among the railroads has failed to protect the public interest and even the interests of the railroads.

While competition may have enabled a few big shippers occasionally to play one road against another where more than one road entered the same locality, competition has also wasted a great amount of capital. Result? Consolidation under one control has gone a long way to remove the waste of competition. The original 5,000 companies have dwindled to about 500. And even these are greatly massed in six great systems with many interlocking directorates.

REGULATION LEADS TO CORRUPTION

Regulation has failed also. Rate regulation has made railroad rates in America higher instead of lower. It is simply impossible to regulate other people's property.

Regulation also leads to more corruption. The public-utility company which is to be regulated will either deceive the "regulators" or buy them up. That is the experience of every State that tried regulation.

What is said about the railroads holds good in every particular for the public ownership of the telegraph, cable, and telephone lines, and every other public utility.

The experience of other countries shows, practically without exception, that the rates in all branches of public service are lower and the service infinitely better under national ownership than they were there, and are here, under private ownership.

WASTING RESOURCES OF OUR NATION

This is the reason why I have also proposed the national ownership of all the natural resources—forests, mineral, coal and oil lands, and water powers—and reacquisition of such as were sold or turned over to private interests for private exploitation.

Of the many crimes of omission and commission with which the capitalist parties can be charged, the one involved in giving away and wasting the Nation's natural resources is the most flagrant and the most indefensible. It was a crime to permit that which was intended to belong to all the people to pass into the hands of a few, who have wasted it without the slightest concern for the well-being of the Nation in the future. They use the Nation's resources only to satisfy their own greed for profits.

MUST BE MANAGED BY NATION

The abolition of the private ownership of the natural resources will restore to the people what is left of them, and it will also do away with one of the most prolific sources of corruption and graft known to American political life.

The Ballinger scandal of some years ago and the Teapot Dome and Doheny affairs of to-day are only a few of the known instances of what private interests will do to obtain control of the natural resources.

The Federal Government must own and manage the Nation's resources. The question is too important to be solved by each of the 48 individual States, and it would be impracticable to leave it to the States for the additional reason that these resources often run across boundary lines.

Moreover, the Government could manage them more efficiently and economically by controlling both extension, exploitation, and output, according to the needs of the whole Nation.

SOME RESULTS OF PRIVATE ENTERPRISE

The blessings of private ownership of public utilities we have witnessed not only in the days of the great land grants to the railroads—and later when our immense and wonderful forests were practically despoiled and denuded for the private profits of some lumber kings—but more so recently in the oil scandals.

Some years ago our Government, in a lucid moment, tried to reserve some oil lands for the use of the American Navy. This was not to the liking of our oil magnates, of course. They would not have the Nation own anything if they could have their way. They prefer to have all natural wealth and all the natural resources in the hands of a few big financial pirates and trustocrats.

These Government oil lands had been protected by legislation, and were under the control of the Navy Department.

THE "OHIO GANG"

In 1920 the Democratic Party was overthrown by an unprecedented majority, because it had gotten our country into the war and had inaugurated an era of unparalleled profiteering.

The Republican Party that came into power was dominated by a small but very powerful reactionary clique of standpatters from the Middle West. This group of corrupt politicians later on got the name of the "Ohio gang," and succeeded in nominating President Harding.

Even before the Republicans got into power the oil magnates, with the help of the Democrats, passed a law which made possible the transfer of these oil reserves to private parties under permanent lease.

PAID TO FUNDS OF BOTH PARTIES

And since the oil magnate, Doheny, paid $75,000 to the Democratic campaign fund, and the oil magnate, Sinclair, a similar sum to the Republican fund—and both of them contributed smaller amounts to the opposite parties—they insisted upon their reward after Harding had been elected.

This was easily accomplished by Mr. Harding signing an Executive order based upon the law that had been passed by the Democratic Party in 1920. The oil reserves were transferred from the Navy Department to the Interior Department. A contract was signed with these "big business men" by which the Government was to get six barrels out of every hundred yielded by the Government reserves.

It is unnecessary to go into the details.

BOUGHT UP CABINET MEMBERS OF TWO PRESIDENTS

We all know that Mr. Fall, the Secretary of the Interior, received from Mr. Doheny "a suitcase full of cash"—containing $100,000—as his share for transferring oil lands. One of these leases was worth, according to the testimony offered by Mr. Sinclair, more than $100,000,000. Mr. Sinclair paid $25,000 to Mr. Fall for the right of grabbing oil lands.

The beauties of private ownership are furthermore illustrated by the fact that the oil interests engaged the "services" of no less than five members of the Wilson Cabinet at immense salaries. Mr. McAdoo, for instance, received $50,000 annually, and the others similar sums as their "attorneys" while Woodrow Wilson was President.

No wonder Mr. McAdoo was accused in the Senate of "practicing son-in-law" instead of practicing law.

THEY SIMPLY WANT THEIR SHARE

Corruption of that kind will always be rampant in our Government, however, and can not be avoided so long as private graft can be gotten out of the public domain.

It is simply the application of the business principle to politics. Our big politicians are usually shrewd lawyers or "big business men" themselves. And realizing the immense profit that can be made by speculators and profiteers, the politicians insist on getting their share.

Is it surprising when Sinclair himself admitted on the witness stand that he expected to make $100,000,000 out of the oil lease for which Albert Fall wanted $25,000 as a tip? Fall's modesty is rather astonishing. The Doheny lease was supposed to be worth $500,000,000—Mr. Fall got only $100,000 as his share, as far as we know.

PUTTING THE "PAY" INTO "PAYTRIOTISM"

Not only does the transfer of the oil leases vividly illustrate the corruption to which private exploitation of the Nation's resources inevitably leads, but it also reveals the readiness with which "big business" and old party "patriots" will weaken the national defense whenever they can make some graft.

These oil reserves were considered essential if the Navy was to be properly equipped and prepared for an emergency. In giving them away the Navy was endangered, but that did not seem to make any difference to those who put the "pay" in "paytriotism."

PUBLIC OWNERSHIP FREE FROM SCANDALS

Had the oil lands been kept as a naval reserve, as they were intended to be kept, there would have been no bribery and no scandal.

Under public ownership there is occasionally a case of small graft or nepotism in the appointment of officeholders.

But, on the whole, public ownership, whether it be the Post Office Department—a national affair—or a public-school system or a waterworks, which are municipal institutions, is free from any scandal or graft on any large scale.

Even the prohibition bureau and our Department of Justice is only corrupt and full of graft whenever it comes in conflict with private profit and private gain.

PALMER AND DAUGHERTY

Thus the Department of Justice, both under Palmer and Daugherty, was linked with all kinds of graft on account of private profiteering.

During the war, under Palmer's administration, our Government confiscated many valuable German patents; for instance, the Bosch magneto patents and also patents pertaining to the manufacture of dyes. "Patriotic" profiteers saw a good chance there to grab millions, and they did so with the connivance of some of the highest officials of both parties.

THAT "SECRET SERVICE"

The same thing happened under Daugherty, who proved to be a very prominent and influential member of the Ohio gang. Daugherty seemed to be in close connection with "bootleggers," especially through his friend Jesse Smith, and with "Remus, the bootleg king."

According to the testimony given by his friend and associate, William J. Burns, he even used the so-called Bureau of Investigation and the "secret service" with cool effrontery to raid offices of the Senators investigating him. He tried to "frame-up" stories on these Senators for the purpose "of getting something on them" in order that the inquiry might be stayed.

Incidentally, let me remark that the so-called secret service department has grown during the war and under A. Mitchell Palmer from a few special agents to a bureau requiring $2,500,000 a year, and manned with all kinds of shady characters, some of whom ought to be in prison.

THE PRESS AND THE GRAFT INVESTIGATION

But the most deplorable fact about the entire situation is the state of our "public opinion," so called.

When the revelations were made nobody seemed to get excited about the methods of "big business"—about the bribery of the highest officials—or about the steals of both groups.

On the contrary, the capitalist news agencies and the big papers all over the country managed to tell the stories in such a manner that, if one was to judge from the newspapers, the sympathies of the people would be with the crooks. The tenor of most articles was decidedly hostile to those who tried to expose the thieves.

One got the impression that the big crooks were heroes, who were pounced upon by low-down common rascals, men and women who would have no standing in any court, but that riffraff was taken seriously and believed by those "peanut politicians" and muckrakers in the Senate.

ALL THE NEWS THAT IS FIT TO PRINT

Of course, the news agencies, and the big newspapers as well, are owned by big business and need not be told what to print and how to print it. They know by instinct "all the news that is fit to print."

But, alas, the city worker, the farmer, and the small business man have read these papers so long and have had their conscience so deadened by the war and by the era of profiteering that followed the war that they are also apt to pass over these thieveries with a shrug of their shoulders or with a cynical smile.

To judge from the capitalist press, it almost seemed to be a crime to uncover the criminals.

GRAFT INVESTIGATIONS INTERFERE WITH BUSINESS

We have all over the country the Rotarians, the Kiwanis, the Lions, and the other "go getters." Did a single one of these business organizations denounce Doheny or Sinclair or Fall or Daugherty or McAdoo?

Not one of them.

Several associations passed resolutions condemning the investigations as interfering with business; and Mr. Denby was even lionized in Detroit, Mich., the center of the automobile business.

And I am sorry to say that I did not see any labor union condemning these gentlemen—which shows that the psychology of the masses has become affected to no small degree.

MERCURY AND MAMMON

Truly Mercury—the god of commerce, and of the thieves in ancient Greece—is next to Mammon, the ruling deity to-day. I say is the ruling deity to-day—but do these people think of to-morrow? Are these big thieves and thievish-minded people realizing the fact that they are sowing dragon's teeth?

So far they do not seem to worry.

WOULD WELCOME A MUSSOLINI

And as a result of the revelations that have occurred during the present session of Congress, we only find that the big capitalists now are doing all they can to deprecate and ignore the legislative branch of the Government and to boost the executive and judicial branches.

Capitalist papers are telling continually of the low level to which Congress has fallen.

Why?

Because a few of the Senators have refused to stop the investigation which has disclosed such corruption.

Big business would just as soon do away with Congress entirely.

"High finance" now prefers the dictatorial method of government a la Mussolini—and would probably like to arrange for something of that kind with the help of the American Legion or the Ku-Klux Klan, if it could be done in our country.

GOVERNMENT BY BLACKMAIL

In short, private ownership of natural resources, while conducive to creating multimillionaires, undoubtedly leads to "government by blackmail."

And that is what we have had to no small extent in Washington during the last few years.

What is there to be done?

THERE IS ONLY ONE SOLUTION

Well, public ownership of public utilities and the removal of the temptations which lead to corruption is the only solution.

And therefore the only way to assure and secure the efficient management not only of the railroads but of all public utilities, and also to eradicate and avoid a great deal of corruption, is to make all public utilities (including the railroads) public property, and the managers the servants of the Nation.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, May 20, 1924, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

495. A letter from the Public Printer, transmitting schedule of useless files of papers and records of the office of the Superintendent of Documents that are no longer of any value or use to that office in the transaction of public business, and requesting that authority be granted the Public Printer to dispose of accumulated waste paper and similar accumulations at regular periods in the future; to the Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers.

496. A letter from the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, transmitting report for the month of April, 1924, showing the condition of railroad equipment and the related information indicated in Senate Resolution 438 in so far as such information is available; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

497. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, for general expenses, Bureau of Agricultural Economics (crop and livestock estimates), $50,000 (H. Doc. No. 295); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

498. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the legislative establishment of the United States for the fiscal year 1924, and to remain available during the fiscal year 1925, in the sum of $38,000, for improving Capitol power plant (H. Doc. No. 296); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

499. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Department of Commerce for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, for collecting statistics, Bureau of Census, $30,000 (H. Doc. No. 297); to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. LEAVITT: Committee on Indian Affairs. S. J. Res. 103. A joint resolution authorizing expenditure of the Fort Peck 4 per cent fund now standing to the credit of the Fort Peck Indians of Montana in the Treasury of the United States; without amendment (Rept. No. 785). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MORROW: Committee on Indian Affairs. S. 2159. An act authorizing annual appropriations for the maintenance of that portion of the Gallup-Durango Highway across the Navajo Indian Reservation and providing reimbursement therefor; without amendment (Rept. No. 786). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SNYDER: Committee on Indian Affairs. S. 2932. An act to quiet the title to lands within Pueblo Indian land grants, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 787). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska: Committee on Indian Affairs. H. R. 6541. SENATE

TUESDAY, May 20, 1924

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come; Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven. We would ask therefore that this morning this may be the desire of our hearts, not simply the utterance of our lips, but that Thy will may be regnant in our lives, directing every thought and action and enabling us to understand that when Thy will is regnant the blessedness of life shall be realized and the high intent of Thy purposes with Thy children shall be fully attained. We ask in Jesus' name. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings when, on request of Mr. LODGE and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENSE ACT

Mr. WADSWORTH submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2169) to amend in certain particulars the national defense act of June 3, 1916, as amended, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 6 and 11.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 12, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the language proposed to be inserted by the House and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"SEC. 2. Add at the end of section 4c of the national defense act of June 3, 1916, as amended, the following: 'When in his judgment efficiency demands such action, the President is authorized to except officers of the Medical Corps, Ordnance Department, and Chemical Warfare Service from the provisions of this section requiring duty with troops of one or more of the combatant arms. The President is further authorized to except from the provisions of this section requiring duty with troops of one or more of the combatant arms such officers of the Judge Advocate General's Department as are now engaged in patent litigation in which the Government is involved.'"

And the House agree to the same.

J. W. WADSWORTH, Jr.,
RALPH H. CAMERON,
DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOHN C. McKENZIE,
HARRY E. HULL,
PERCY E. QUIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is the report signed by all the conferees?
Mr. WADSWORTH. It is.
Mr. ROBINSON. It is a unanimous agreement?
Mr. WADSWORTH. It is.
Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection to the report.
The report was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. WARREN presented resolutions adopted by the Sheridan (Wyo.) Commercial Club, favoring an amendment of section 4 of the interstate commerce act, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Green River, Wyo., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Howell-Barkley railway labor bill, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. BRANDEGEE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 169) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 73 of an act entitled 'An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary,' approved June 12, 1916," and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SMITH, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 862) amending section 1 of the interstate commerce act, reported it without amendment.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON PATENTS

Mr. KEYES, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate Resolution 224, submitted by Mr. ERNST on the 15th instant, reported it favorably without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Patents, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-eighth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

RELIEF OF INJURED GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably, with an amendment, the bill (S. 2508) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916. Inasmuch as it is an emergency measure I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be immediately considered.

Mr. KING. Let it be reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The reading clerk read the bill.

Mr. KING. This is a very important measure and affects a matter that has received consideration heretofore. I think it had better go to the calendar and be considered in due order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill will be placed on the calendar.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. TRAMMELL:

A bill (S. 3343) granting an increase of pension to Fannie H. Davis; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GEORGE:

A bill (S. 3344) to provide for the establishment of a dairying and livestock experiment station at Tifton, Ga.; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. EDWARDS (by request):

A bill (S. 3345) to renew and extend certain letters patent to John V. Rice, jr.; to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. FRAZIER:

A bill (S. 3346) to provide that jurisdiction shall be conferred upon the Court of Claims, notwithstanding the lapse of time or statutes of limitation, to hear, examine, and adjudicate and render judgment in any and all legal and equitable claims arising under or growing out of any treaty or agreement between the United States and certain bands of Indians, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. STERLING:

A bill (S. 3347) to extend the benefits of the United States employees' compensation act of September 7, 1916, to Theodore B. Warner; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HALE:

A bill (S. 3348) granting a pension to Alice E. Alden (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NORRIS:

A bill (S. 3349) granting an increase of pension to Samuel P. Howland; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GOODING (for Mr. WATSON):

A bill (S. 3350) granting the consent of Congress for the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River between Vanderburgh County, Ind., and Henderson County, Ky.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. BORAH:

A bill (S. 3351) granting a pension to Rose G. Bingham; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 3352) to provide for the appointment of an appraiser of merchandise at Portland, Oreg; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. FRAZIER:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 129) to provide for venue of suits against the United States Grain Corporation; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

NATURALIZATION PETITIONS

Mr. ERNST submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2178) to relieve United States district judges from signing an order admitting, denying, or dismissing each petition for naturalization, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

REIMBURSEMENT TO SENATOR FRANK L. GREENE

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 230), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Hon. FRANK L. GREENE, a Senator from the State of Vermont, the sum of $7,500, as reimbursement for actual and necessary expenses incurred by him in the treatment and care of injuries resulting from an accidental bullet wound received while walking on the street in the city of Washington, D. C., February 15, 1924.

POSTHUMOUS MILITARY PROMOTIONS

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 124) to provide for the posthumous appointment to commissioned grades of certain enlisted men and the posthumous promotion of certain commissioned officers. I am sure there will be no objection. I hope the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, will give me his attention.

During the World War a soldier whose appointment to a higher office was made, if not received by him and accepted before he died, was then denied his proper place on the rolls at the higher rank. If he was killed in battle, and his commission had been issued but not accepted in writing, under a decision of the Supreme Court he was denied the promotion which he earned on the field of battle. The joint resolution which I have introduced provides specifically that there is no increase of pay in any particular and no expense involved to the Government, but it simply allows the boy who died in service or was killed in service after the promotion had been made but before it had been formally accepted to be placed on the rolls in the grade and at the rank to which he had been appointed. I ask the Senator from New York if he will kindly state anything I may have overlooked in regard to the joint resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not object to the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I shall have to object. We are waiting to call up some matters in the regular way, and I think it is time to stop the granting of unanimous consent to consider measures out of order until we can get something up in the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming objects to the request of the Senator from Georgia, and the joint resolution remains on the calendar.

RELIEF OF INJURED GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I ask leave to return to the order of reports of committees.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. We are now in the order of the introduction of bills and joint resolutions.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I ask unanimous consent to return to the order of reports of committees; and on behalf of the Committee on the Judiciary I report back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 7041) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916.

The bill bears upon the same matter as that referred to a few minutes ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection——

Mr. ROBINSON. I inquire of the Senator from California if the bill he has just reported relates to an amendment of the employees compensation act?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I answer, yes; as agreed upon.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is the bill similar or substantially similar to the Senate bill which he has already reported?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. It is not only substantially similar, but is in exactly the same words, I will say to the Senator from Arkansas. We propose to amend the House bill in the manner in which we propose to amend the Senate bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California has asked unanimous consent to submit a report from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Arkansas understands that, but he wants to understand what the Senator from California is reporting.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I am reporting the House bill, I may answer the Senator, with the amendment agreed upon by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does it embrace the so-called Caraway amendment?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection the report will be received.

ADJUSTED COMPENSATION OF WORLD WAR VETERANS

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I wish to occupy about three minutes of the time of the Senate.

Mr. President, in my judgment, the President made a mistake in declaring the attitude of the soldiers as immoral in asking for a readjusted compensation. When the railroads asked for a readjustment of their war pay immediately after the war and received in the neighborhood of $2,000,000,000, Mr. Coolidge did not then declare their claim immoral, and should not have done so. Afterwards when the war contractors, commonly known as war profiteers, demanded and received $706,000,000 in readjusted pay, he did not declare their action immoral, and perhaps should not have done so, though there was more room for such a declaration in that particular case. Nor, when the civilian employees of the Government asked for and received hundreds of millions of dollars in readjusted pay or bonus, he did not declare their action immoral, and should not have done so. In some way he has, in my judgment, the mistaken view of limiting his charge of immorality of action in asking readjusted pay solely to the ex-service men.

Harsh criticism of a considerable portion of the citizens of this country may catch the public eye for a short time, but it is never lasting. When we consider the difference in pay that the soldiers received during the war and the enormous profits and pay that were earned by those who remained at home, I should think anyone would see that there were two sides to the question and that it was unnecessary to abuse either side.

Nor is the President's theory that the passage of the bonus bill will prevent tax reduction correct. The $100,000,000 a year it will take to pay the bonus is a large sum, but not governmentally speaking. For instance, the President has just recommended, through his Navy Department, an increase in the Navy which, if carried out, will cost probably more than the soldiers' bonus. The Republican administration last year recommended a ship subsidy bill that would have cost quite as much as the bonus. The enormous sums spent by the Government on airplanes during this administration that have since been declared useless will amount to very nearly as much as the bonus. The sums spent on submarines, which sums have been thrown away according to the reports, would almost rival the expenditures of the soldiers' bonus.

In addition, the extravagant tax refunds and tax abatements inaugurated by this administration costs the Government several times as much as the bonus. The Gulf Refining Co., in which Mr. Mellon is personally interested, drew from the Treasury Department in less than 30 days after Mr. Mellon became Secretary of the Treasury the enormous sum of $3,300,000 in tax refunds. Last year he paid over $2,300,000 to one of the five big Chicago packers. These are types of refunds. During the Wilson administration there were practically few refunds, and those resulting from accidental mistakes made in the assessment and collection of taxes. Since Mr. Mellon has been in office the rise in tax refunds has been continuous and tremendous—$24,000,000 in 1921, $48,000,000 in 1922, and $229,000,000 in 1923. As enormous as these figures are, however, we are advised that in the way of abatements much more has been granted to the wealthy taxpayers, but Mr. Mellon, under the law, keeps these matters secret as much as possible.

We are spending this year $330,000,000 on an army. We had about as good a one just before the war that cost us about $100,000,000 per year. We are spending more than twice as much on our Navy as we did just before the war, and it is claimed that our present Navy is not as good as it was then.

None of these extravagances has even been attempted to be checked by the President. He becomes economical only where the soldiers are concerned.

A most substantial tax reduction bill has already been passed by the Congress, and if it does not become the law it will be because of the fault of the President in vetoing it and not the fault of the Congress.

EMPLOYEES OF LEGISLATIVE BRANCH OF THE GOVERNMENT

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 8262, being a bill relating to the salaries of the 2,000 or more employees of the Capitol.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wyoming that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8262) to fix the compensation of officers and employees of the legislative branch of the Government, which had been reported from the Joint Special Committee on Readjustment of Compensation of Officers and Employees of Congress without amendment.

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect on July 1, 1924.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator who has the bill in charge what is the aggregate increase in the salaries allowed for all of the officers and employees covered by this bill?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. KING. I yield. I have asked the Senator a question.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Utah inquires of me just what I was about to say anyway.

Mr. KING. I shall be happy to hear the Senator. There is no report accompanying the bill.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, there is a report—a very full report. If I remember rightly, there are 2,361 people provided for here. Starting at what is perhaps the most interesting subject for the moment, the employees here at the Senate, the percentage of raise for the first clerks, the senior clerks of Senators, is a little over 20 per cent above the salary that they are now receiving and the bonus, and that is the only increase of that proportion.

On the House side, opposite that, their increase is but 10 per cent—that is, each Member gets $4,000, from which he provides for all of his clerks. The minimum that a Senator's clerical force gets is $8,590. He gets $3,300 for his first clerk, $1,940 for the next, $1,830 for the next, and $1,520 for the fourth.

In the case of the committees, some of them, where there is not a great amount of work, have the same number of clerks. There are other committees, heavily worked, that have more assistants, and their assistants have higher pay.

The increase in the assistant clerks and in the employees in the Capitol is from 8 to 10 per cent more than the present pay and the bonus. The classification outside of the Capitol, as we understand from what has been done in the other bills, seeks to cover the old salaries and the bonus and from 3 to 5 per cent increase, except in the upper grades—as, for instance, Assistant Secretary of a department. That position has had a salary of $5,000 for the last 40 years without raise, and in that case the salary has been raised considerably more than that.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill a question. On page 1 it is observed that under the office of the Vice President a clerk is paid $1,940 and an assistant clerk $2,080. Why is the subordinate paid more than his superior? Why does the clerk receive less than the assistant clerk?

Mr. WARREN. That arrangement is one where a resolution clerk followed the regular statutory clerk. It occurred in the old bill, and we did not change it. Of course, one proposition has been observed throughout—not to reduce any salary—and that has been carried into all of the reclassifications that are made outside of the Chamber, not to reduce any of the salaries or wages that are received, except in some of the lump sums, where they were running over the normal. The matter to which the Senator refers is one that I shall not be able to explain.

Mr. ROBINSON. Of course it seems anomalous to pay the clerk $1,940 and the assistant clerk $2,080.

Mr. WARREN. I will acknowledge that, Mr. President. That is a very just and reasonable complaint to make; but the former Vice President, who is now President of the United States, had arranged it that way, and we have not changed it.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WARREN. I was about to finish, but if the Senator wishes to ask me a question I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I did want to ask a question, and perhaps the Senator can continue his remarks in answer to the Senator from Utah by answering my question.

I notice, under the office of Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper, that there seems to be a very marked inequality in the pay of the doorkeepers, and I wondered why that was. Then, when we come to the salaries recommended for the press gallery superintendent and assistant superintendent, why they are not paid at the same rate as the clerk and assistant clerk of a Senator?

Mr. WARREN. Their duties are entirely different, and the salaries have always been very different; so we saw no reason for changing the proportion of salary on account of what the Senator has said.

I was going to say, further, that this bill is the result of the consideration of a joint committee composed of three Members of the Senate and three Members of the House, who met and spent, perhaps, a month on the matter at our closing time a year ago, and again about a month before we assembled at this session. Those men should, and I think did, reflect the feeling and wishes of their respective bodies. In the consideration of this bill each side met the other, and naturally did the best they could. The House has laid its cards upon the table and passed the bill exactly as the committee recommended it.

There are questions that will occur, I think, to any man. I think it is human nature that one man thinks he does a little more work than another, or that he is worth a little more, and that he is worth at least as much as somebody who is graded higher than he is. It is pretty difficult to take a large lot of employees and arrange matters satisfactorily to all of them, unless the matter is dealt with at the time of their employment, as in a case where a commercial concern has a line of employment and these matters are agreed upon when the men come in, on a basis of "take it or leave it."

Here are a large number of employees, many of whom have been here a great many years, while others are new. The general result of this arrangement is that the representatives of the House on the joint committee were willing to acknowledge—because they talked it over long beforehand—that we should make a further advancement in the case of the first clerks of Senators, who are given $3,300, on account of the increase of business; so they are increased, as I have said, at the rate of over 20 per cent. But every Senator gets as the minimum the amount I stated.

As to the employees who receive more than $2,500 no bonus, of course, reached them heretofore, and in their case there has been an increase similar to that made in the case of employees who had the bonus, because the bonus was to make up differences.

I shall be glad to give any further information that is desired, but that is about all there is to the measure. It stands in this way: The raises have been from 8 or 10 per cent up to 20, except where the salaries are $4,500, and salaries of that size were not raised at all. On the other hand, as I said, Members of the House received less for clerks than Senators receive. In other words, a Member of the House receives $4,000 for his clerks, while a Senator's force receives $8,590 as a minimum. In the House $4,000 is their maximum, because their minimum is $3,300 if a Member employs only one clerk and $4,000 if he employs two.

Mr. KING. Were any new positions or offices created by the bill?

Mr. WARREN. I think not. I do not remember one.

Mr. KING. Is this the bill which provides for automobiles and various other accessories for certain employees in the Capitol?

Mr. WARREN. It does not touch that at all. It has nothing to do with the contingencies. It is simply a straight matter of how much the secretaries and clerks shall receive for their services, and this bill does not appropriate. The appropriation bill will follow.

I am reminded of one or two alleged errors, and I am not contending that they are not errors. If such errors exist, when the appropriation bill comes along, as it will when we reach a point where the House can predicate an appropriation bill upon this measure, we can correct those errors, of course, because there is no intention of allowing the mistakes to go uncorrected. But as a general proposition, I think we will fare better and get through with better spirit all the way, and get better pay for our employees if we accept this bill as it comes to us from the committee and from the House.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a situation in the document room. For the document room, under the item on page 2, line 20, there are provided a superintendent, $3,500; first assistant, $2,880; two clerks, at $1,770 each; skilled laborer, $1,520.

For some reason or other this joint committee has failed to appreciate that a second assistant in the document room has been working there for years——

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator that I have sent down for my clerk, who has the papers in regard to this matter, and I will be able to show the condition when those papers come up.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If the Senator does not mind, I have the entire history of it for 40 years back on my desk. I shall not read it all, but here is the situation: In the legislative act of 1906 the position of second assistant in the document room was created. In 1921, for some reason or other, the position was left out of the legislative act of that year, but it has been filled and paid for by annual appropriations since 1921.

Mr. SMITH. When was the position created?

Mr. WADSWORTH. In 1906.

Mr. SMITH. And was continued up to 1921?

Mr. WADSWORTH. To 1921, when, for some reason or other, it was dropped out of the legislative act of that year, but the man who did the work, and who is doing it now, has been paid by annual appropriations since then. There is no mention of him in this bill.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I think it will develop that he has been paid out of the contingent fund, because some of those places years ago were taken care of in a resolution, which read "until otherwise provided by law," and I think that the clerk the Senator has mentioned is one of those. I think that resolution is still alive, and I think the pay is being drawn under it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the situation there is exceedingly unjust. While this bill provides for five employees in the document room, and in former years we have had as many as six, and upon one or two occasions at least seven, literally there are only three men working there now, the superintendent, the first assistant, and this other man, who apparently holds no title whatsoever, and who, with the first assistant and the superintendent, does all the work.

I do not know what the appropriation bills are going to carry for him. He disappears in this shuffle. The Secretary of the Senate tells me he is absolutely essential to the good work in that office, but the joint committee has forgotten him, as far as I can find out. The efficiency of the place is dependent upon somebody remembering each year to slip an item into an appropriation bill to take care of this man.

Mr. WARREN. It has not been handled that way.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then a resolution must be passed putting him upon some roll of the Senate, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. As I explained to the Senator, I think it is handled under an old resolution which takes care of it; but I shall be able to inform the Senate in a few moments.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. MOSES. I wish to inquire if the bill is in its amendment stage?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MOSES. Does the Senator intend to offer an amendment?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not intend to offer an amendment now, because I want to cooperate with the Senator from Wyoming, who tells me that perhaps the matter can be fixed when certain information comes before the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. There is no doubt that it can be fixed so that no man will be left out.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is my idea. I want to say, however, further, that in 1921 the salary of the second assistant was $2,250. The work is still going on just as it was before. If this bill were put in logical form to carry out what is going on now, and what is right and proper in the matter of salaries, the second assistant, in my judgment, should be put in either here or taken care of in some other statutory way with a salary of $2,250, plus the bonus of $240, plus the 5 per cent proposed increase, which would give that man a salary of $2,002.50. What the functions of a skilled laborer are I am not entirely certain.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I have ascertained that what I said in regard to this case is true. There is a resolution covering the matter which has been passed every year for several years past. There are two or three similar places. We tried once to repeal all those resolutions, and have each place taken care of by the session or by the Congress terms, but this is one of those which have been continued. This man has been paid continuously, as I suppose, because the resolution is alive, and he is drawing his pay now.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The injustice of it is that he is doing the work of the second assistant, and he is drawing the pay of a laborer.

Mr. WARREN. That is something I do not know anything about, of course.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is the fact.

Mr. KING. Why should we not abolish the office of second assistant, if the first assistant is doing his work?

Mr. MOSES. And make them all skilled laborers?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Make them all laborers?

Mr. KING. No. If he is doing the work of the second assistant, the presumption is the second assistant is doing nothing.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is no second assistant now by title under a statute. This man is doing the work that the second assistant did from 1906 to 1921.

Mr. KING. Is the office of second assistant, then, abolished by this act?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No. It was abolished in 1921, and it ought to be restored, because there is a man there doing all of that work. He is doing it as the result of a resolution of the Senate which authorizes the employment on a separate roll, not under this statutory roll, of this person, who, as far as I can find out, is drawing the pay of a skilled laborer.

I took this matter up with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], who is fairly familiar with it, and he expressed the opinion that the second assistant should go in the bill. But if he is to be taken care of in some other way, I am not going to be particular about it, because the Senator from Wyoming tells me that if this bill is amended in any way its passage will be jeopardized.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator tell me, from his examination, whether it is necessary to have a superintendent, a first assistant, two clerks, and a skilled laborer?

Mr. WADSWORTH. From all I know, that office is undermanned now. It does an important, effective service for Senators. If there is anything a Senator wants, it is prompt service from the document room.

Mr. KING. In addition to those to whose positions I have just called attention, is the position now held by the person to whom the Senator is referring a necessary one?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; it is an anomalous position. He is doing the work of a second assistant, and is not being paid enough. They had to get him in there to continue the office. He voluntarily took the position.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator whether, in his conversation with the Secretary of the Senate, the Secretary stated whether he has been detailing others to that office?

Mr. WADSWORTH. He has been detailing this man.

Mr. WARREN. Has he been detailing others?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I believe not, other than the number provided for here.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I wish to offer the amendments which I send to the desk and ask to have reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire offers the following amendments, which the Secretary will report.

The READING CLERK. The Senator from New Hampshire offers the following amendments: On page 2, line 24, strike out "$3,300" and insert in lieu thereof "$4,200"; on page 3, lines 1 to 23, both inclusive, strike out "$3,300" wherever appearing therein and insert in lieu thereof "$4,200"; on page 3, line 24, strike out "$3,600" and insert in lieu thereof "$4,500"; on page 4, lines 4 to 24, both inclusive, strike out "$3,300" wherever appearing therein and insert in lieu thereof "$4,200"; on page 5, lines 1 to 22, both inclusive, strike out "$3,300" wherever appearing therein and insert in lieu thereof "$4,200"; on page 6, line 4, strike out "$3,300" and insert in lieu thereof "$4,200."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the first amendment.

Mr. MOSES. All the amendments go to the same subject, and I ask unanimous consent that they may be considered en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and they will be considered together.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, this bill is a most imperfect response to a movement which took place in the Senate toward the close of the Sixty-seventh Congress, at which time a very determined effort was made upon the floor of the Senate to amend the legislative appropriation bill in order to provide greater compensation for the secretaries to Senators and clerks to committees. As a result of that agitation, after the failure of the amendment upon the floor, a joint committee was provided for, the result of whose labors is contained in the bill now before us.

I have described it as an imperfect response to an agitation, because, although the explanation given to the Senate by members of the committee is that the committee considered the result of the reclassification in the civil service in the city of Washington throughout the various departments and, finding the average increase there to be of a certain percentage, decided to make the same average percentage in these increases, that percentage totally loses sight of the principles of the classification bill, because every Senator who is familiar with the terms of the classification act applying to the civil service as a whole knows that in the higher positions, where the largest amount of work was required and where was required also the greatest of ability and the greatest variety of public services, there the increases were much more considerable, in some cases reaching to the extent of 50 per cent of the salary theretofore paid. Twenty per cent is the average increase given here.

I need not advert to the character of the service performed by secretaries of Senators and clerks of committees. Every Senator knows how varied, how continuous, how delicate, how important the services of his secretaries are to him; and I would wish—and the purpose of my amendment is to produce—an increase in salaries for secretaries to Senators which would be something commensurate to the service rendered to us, and something commensurate to the old-time relation between salaries of Senators and their clerks back in the days before any increase took place at all.

We have been told, we will be told again, I assume—the Senator from New York has just put the Senate upon notice—that any amendment made here to this bill will jeopardize its passage. We have been told, we probably will be told again, that the House will absolutely refuse to consider any change which we make in the text of this measure. We have been told, we will be told again, that we must take the bill as it stands or have nothing. To all of that I retort that nobody can tell what the result of an effort to amend the bill will be until the effort is made.

As I said to the Committee on Appropriations when appearing before them in behalf of the amendment which I have now presented, of course if the Senate conferees do not intend to stand for the rights of the Senate as written into an amendment in this bill or any other bill, naturally the Senate can not accomplish anything; and I added that which every Senator knows, namely, that it is always possible to recede if we come to a point such as we have been told will result. I further retort to all those assertions that this is a matter which concerns the Senate alone. If I may say so without being reproached from the other end of the Capitol, this is a matter with which the other end of the Capitol has no business at all to deal.

We do not undertake to interfere with the Members of the House in fixing the salaries of those who assist them. We have never undertaken, indeed, to say to them that the salaries should be paid in given sums to any person. We have given them full liberty of action within the limit of appropriations they saw fit to fix for themselves. Therefore I contend that this is a matter which we should determine. I suppose there are no Senators here who will not admit that a competent principal secretary is worth $4,200 a year, and if we conclude that is the salary which we should pay our principal secretaries, it is nobody else's business, and anybody who attempts to make it his business should be plainly told that he is going beyond his functions and outside of his jurisdiction.

This is a question which has been argued on the floor over and over again, and I wish to point out only one thing more, that the amendment which I have here presented, while carrying the increases named, maintains every differential now existing as among the clerks to the various committees and the secretaries to Senators.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MOSES. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator mentioned differentials. I should like to ask if his amendment maintains existing differentials?

Mr. MOSES. Wishing to create as little dislocation as possible in the salary scale of secretaries, wishing to produce as few heartburnings as might be in connection with the amendment that I have proposed, I have undertaken to carry on the scale of salaries exactly as it now exists. In a case where a secretary to a Senator or the principal clerk of a committee has been obtaining more salary than that paid to the average clerk of the committees or average principal secretary to Senators, I have maintained that differential.

I suppose I can discern what the Senator from Massachusetts has in mind. The Senator from Massachusetts—and he will correct me if I am not reading his mind correctly—of course, is thinking of the differential, in the first place, of $300 which is paid to the clerk of the Finance Committee. He is probably thinking also of the small differential which exists in some of the minor places in some of the other committees. But, for example, at one period in the Sixty-seventh Congress there were two committees of the Senate whose chairmen were influential enough to have the salaries of their clerks increased. Those increases have been taken into consideration, although they were made individually and without any relation to the classification of secretaries and clerks. Those increases were taken into consideration and made the basis of the increases proposed in the bill reported by the joint committee, and also in the amendment which I have offered.

I have made no attempt to change the situation as I found it. If the Senator from Massachusetts wishes to criticize the situation as I found it and as I have continued it in my amendment, I shall not attempt to make retort to any such criticism, because I well know that there are committees of the Senate, notably the 10 so-called major committees of the Senate and some of the minor committees of the Senate, where there is an infinite drudgery to be done by the committee, and that drudgery, of course, is loaded upon the capable shoulders of the clerk of the committee. Yet even in those cases there is a dead level of salary that has continued to exist. If I were to criticize in general terms the bill which has been presented by the joint committee, it would be that, unlike the reclassification of the civil service, no attempt has been made in any particular to grade the salaries in accordance with the measure of work going to a committee; that is to say, the work which the clerk of the committee has to do.

My opinion is that the salaries which I ask for in the amendment are none too high, considering the amount and character of services required and the difficulty which every Senator has to retain in his service competent clerks in whom he has ample confidence.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator from New Hampshire will allow me——

Mr. MOSES. I yield the floor to the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. The matter of the arrangement of salaries can be based on two different systems. We can base it on the amount of public work of each committee. Notoriously there are some of the committees that have very heavy work, while others have much less. If we adopt that as the base we must make variations in the salaries. We can put all the salaries of the clerks on the basis of the work for the Senator who is chairman of the committee, and that personal work as well as public work would justify the system adopted here, though I think it is a poor system, but it would justify it in making the salaries all alike.

But what seems to me can not be justified is taking out of this long list one committee and making that one clerk an exception. No doubt there is a great deal of committee work to be done by that committee and no doubt a most competent man is doing the work, but he is no more heavily worked than the clerks of many other committees, and yet it is proposed to give him $300 more than any other committee clerk. They all ought to be on the same basis; that is, as to their value to the Senator who is chairman of the committee, or on the general basis of an equality of value to all Senators in the work of the clerk for him as chairman of the committee. But I do not think there is anything that can justify paying one committee clerk more than another if we adopt the uniform payment plan for all committees alike, as is proposed to be adopted here.

Now there is one other point which was suggested to my mind by what the Senator from New Hampshire said, and that is having the House fix the salaries for Senate employees. I do not think there is any defense whatever for that. We do not interfere and we never have interfered, of course, with the House appropriations for their own service and expense of administration, and we ought not to do it. When they send a bill here and tell us we can not make any amendments to it at all, the bill having been made in the House, I would much rather see the bill fail than to submit to that kind of a proposition. It seems to me intolerable that we can not be allowed to fix the pay, great or small, graded or ungraded, for our own employees, and that is what is proposed here, that we must not touch the bill because the House has already made it. To that I object as strongly as it is possible for words to do it.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. We have to meet the situation as it is. We can amend the bill as much as we please, but what is going to become of it? What will become of it if we go to amending it? This matter was settled by a joint committee to which the matter was referred in recess. We had a meeting with members of the committee representing the House of Representatives, a committee appointed by that body to meet with us, and we did the best we could. We may have made some mistakes, but if we did they can be hereafter corrected by another bill. But so far as this bill is concerned it is the result of the joint action of a committee of the House of Representatives and the Senate. Let us amend it if we want to and let us send it back——

Mr. LODGE. That is all I ask.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let us send it back to the House of Representatives and let it die. That is the condition that confronts us. We can do as we please.

Mr. MOSES. Of course it would die if the Senate conferees do not vote for it in conference.

Mr. KING. It ought to die anyhow.

Mr. OVERMAN. We will fight for it. We are going to give each clerk $240 bonus in addition to the salary. We increase the salaries 5 per cent in that way. We must look at the facts as they confront us.

Mr. LODGE. I am not quarreling with the amount.

Mr. OVERMAN. The House of Representatives voted it down because the Senate was getting so much more money than the House that the Members of the House were jealous and voted it down.

Mr. LODGE. I believe I have the floor, but I am not sure.

Mr. OVERMAN. I thought the Senator had yielded the floor.

Mr. LODGE. I did not yield the floor.

Mr. OVERMAN. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. LODGE. I only wanted to finish what I had undertaken to say. I know it was the work of a joint committee. The work of a joint committee does not bind the two Houses any more than the work of any other committee does. They are the creation of the two Houses. They bring in a report applying to salaries. The House makes its own salaries and we have not interfered with those salaries, but we are told that we must not amend the bill so far as our salaries are concerned, otherwise it will be lost.

Mr. WARREN. I beg the Senator's pardon—I have not said that.

Mr. LODGE. I did not say the Senator from Wyoming had said it.

Mr. WARREN. I do not know of anybody who has said it.

Mr. LODGE. It has been stated to me repeatedly, though not on the floor. That is the principle to which I object. If the House chooses to make changes in the report of the joint committee in the course of their own administration, nothing would induce me to vote against the bill for that reason. It is their right to say what their clerks and their officers shall have, and I think we have a like right. They do not undertake to fix salaries for us in the annual appropriation bills. They are just as anxious to pass the bill as we are. But I do not notice that they ever say a bill can not pass if we make a change. They expect us to make amendments. I think it is a wrong relation between the two Houses. I think we ought to have it understood that we do not interfere with their expenditures and we do not wish to have them interfere with ours. Let each House settle for itself its own expenditures. I yield the floor.

Mr. OVERMAN. Everybody knows that we can amend the bill and everybody appreciates the fact that if we do amend it the conferees, answering the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES], will stand for the amendment so far as they can.

We, as Senators, get about $3,000 more than each Member of the House for clerk hire, and the Members of the House of course may demand that they get as much as Members of the Senate. Members of the House only get $4,000 for clerk hire and that is the reason why they voted down overwhelmingly the proposed increase. It was called up again and Mr. MADDEN got mad because they wanted to amend it. He said the bill had to pass as it was, and I did not blame him. The joint committee of the House and Senate got together and prepared the bill. We tried to do justice to everybody. We tried to increase everybody's salary, giving a bonus in addition to the 5 per cent.

Where are we going to end up with these great expenses? Are we going to give this clerk $4,300 and that clerk $3,500 and the other clerk $5,000 and some other clerk $6,000? Where will it all end if we undertake to do that?

We are going behind now by reason of the great expenditures incurred in conducting the Government. We ought to economize if we can. I think we have done very well by our clerks in the pending bill, and I hope it will pass just as it has been reported from the special committee. It is not that we can not amend the bill, for we can amend it and everybody knows it; there is no use to tell us that we can not do so. So if the Senate wishes to amend the bill, let us do it, and we shall try to retain the amendments in conference.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I can speak only for my own office, but I am very conscious of the fact that it would be very difficult for me to operate my office without the very efficient secretary who is there engaged. I received on yesterday 2,500 telegrams from people south of Fourteenth Street in New York City who did not want any bonus for the soldiers. My office has an enormous correspondence. I am here to say that my secretary, by reason of his business capacity, could earn $12,000 or $15,000 a year in private employ. I think that the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] is a very reasonable one, and that we ought to provide for this increase in the salaries of our employees.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, we all realize that the work here is growing heavier and heavier as time goes on, but we also realize that it is necessary that we shall economize; that we shall stop spending so much money. There is no one here who has a higher regard for those who serve as our secretaries than have I. In order to fill such a position a person must have education, experience, and possess all-around, first-class ability. I do not know of any other place that is harder to fill than is the position of secretary to a Senator; that is, if it be filled efficiently, and as Senators have a right to expect it shall be filled.

I feel, however, Mr. President, that the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] should not have been offered, and that it ought not to be adopted. We are doing by our force of clerks as well as the condition of the country will permit. I feel it would be a great mistake now favorably to consider the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire. I am satisfied that too many clerks are employed in connection with some of our Senate committees, and those might be dispensed with. Under the conditions in which the people are now we should show to the country that we have their interest at heart, and also that we are not here to legislate for ourselves and for our own affairs alone, but that we are here to legislate for the people all over the country.

When we are reminded that many people are out of employment, that mills are being shut down daily, that people are walking the streets, it is no time to have the newspapers carry the information that we have legislated to increase salaries to any such extent as is proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire. I therefore trust, Mr. President, that the amendment may be defeated.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, I have not the least interest in what has been said about the action of the Members of the House in regard to this bill; it does not concern me at all; but I have been deeply impressed by what the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] has said, and I believe it is true. We have had a committee which has had this matter under consideration for weeks and weeks. It is a very delicate matter properly to arrange all of these different salaries and to make the proper discrimination, if there be discrimination, as to the pay of the clerks of the different committees.

I have employed office help for 40 years, and I think now I have as efficient office help as can be found in the city of Washington. I realize that what I now shall say will probably incur the enmity of every person who is engaged in office work in the Senate, in the House, and office buildings; but I am frank to say that every position occupied by our employees can be filled in 24 hours by somebody who is just as efficient as those we now have and on the present salary.

Most of the young ladies who are there engaged are taken from the different States; they have come from schools, commercial colleges, and from different occupations. They are here because they get higher salaries here than they could obtain elsewhere, and conditions are more favorable to their happiness here than they would be in any other place in the world. I believe we are paying our clerks amply, indeed highly, that we are paying them more wages than are paid in almost any commercial industry in the land.

It seems to me that, although we may not be interested in what the House may do, we ought to be interested in the taxpayers of this country and how they feel about this matter. Everybody comes to Congress except the taxpayers. We are increasing salaries; we are creating bureaus; we are building up departments; we are increasing the salary list all the time. When I came here there were about 60,000 persons in the employ of the Government; then the number went up to 128,000; and we have been trying to get it reduced, but with very little result.

I am in entire agreement with the Senator from North Carolina, who has had this matter under consideration. I believe that the salaries as decided upon in the report of the chairman of the committee are about what they ought to be; that they are sufficiently high; and I, too, am opposed to the amendment which has been offered by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] has turned the attention of the Senate in the right direction so far as concerns what we as the servants of the people ought to do. The people are demanding that expenses be reduced, and we are being commanded to lower them.

Since the beginning of the World War we have raised the salaries of our employees several times, and now in this instance we propose to raise the salaries of the clerks of Senators twenty-odd per cent. There are no employees either in the House of Representatives or in the District of Columbia or out through the country at large who have received such a percentage of increase as a whole.

I agree with the Senator from Maine when he says that if these employees, men and women both, should vacate their places plenty of others could be found who would take them; in fact, most of us have requests from time to time to find employment for others here in Washington at rates of compensation which are lower than we are paying.

The Senator from New Hampshire in his eloquent endeavor to have the salaries raised seems to me has been a little gratuitous in his aspersions as to what is assured and what is going to be demanded. I do not know to whom he refers. Possibly he may have referred to me. I shall not state that the bill can not pass if amended, but I say that I believe it would be unfortunate if we should undertake to amend it, because I think we will find ourselves in a better position on the other side if we do not do so. I am but the creature of the Senate, and the Senate, of course, may do what it chooses; but to increase the salary of our first clerks some 75 or 80 per cent I think would be an outrage, so far as that is concerned, when we consider what is paid to junior clerks, also what is paid to department clerks.

I know how ungracious it is for me to stand here and speak about keeping salaries down or to be enlisted against a greater increase of salaries in the Senate for all of our employees. I know how popular it is for Senators to appeal in behalf of their clerks and others for greater compensation for them. Probably such action gives them great personal credit, but I assume that the responsibility of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee is to try to consider these questions coolly and do the best he can to help make what may be considered reasonable provision for the employees of Congress.

Now, as to the variations to which the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Massachusetts have alluded. The Senator from New Hampshire says that he bases his amendment upon this bill, and yet he says this bill is absolutely wrong. If the Senate thinks it best to undertake to amend the bill by the various proposals which will be made by Senators on the floor, of course it will do so. I simply wish, as my own thought, to say that I think the best course to pursue would be to take the bill as a whole, and then later to increase any salaries which may be considered too low and to provide for any defects, if any there be, in the bill.

As to the clerks of the major committees, I have always been in favor of their having greater compensation, but I have not been able to convince others that that should be done. For instance, the last time we raised the salaries of our employees the increase was applied to the clerk of every Senator alike, barring, I think, the clerks of two committees.

With reference to the allusion to the higher-salaried clerks, I have nothing to say as to the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations, for that is a matter regarding which the Senate can do as it chooses.

As to the clerk of the Finance Committee, the salary in that case was adjusted as it was because on the House side similar compensation is provided for the clerk of the Committee on Ways and Means, and it seemed but natural that the compensation of the clerk of the Senate Committee on Finance should be the same as that of the clerk of the Committee on Ways and Means, for both committees consider the great tariff and revenue bills of all kinds. I may be wrong, but I myself think that I would rather increase the salaries of other clerks than to reduce the amount provided for the clerks of those two committees, respectively.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. WARREN. I do.

Mr. LODGE. If the compensation of the clerk of the Finance Committee is based on the amount paid to the clerk of the Ways and Means Committee in the House, there is no such basis of comparison in connection with the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House. The Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House has not the same work to perform as that which comes to the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate. For instance, the House committee has no treaties to deal with.

Mr. WARREN. That is true.

Mr. LODGE. So it seems to me that to take the House committees as our standard would be more misleading than to take simply the work of each committee.

Mr. WARREN. As the Senator knows, the House committee has perhaps a little over half of the work which is imposed on the Senate committee; but that has nothing to do with it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. The same observation as that made by the Senator from Massachusetts would apply to the Commerce Committee, for instance, of the Senate. In the House there are committees on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, Rivers and Harbors, and Flood Control, which have jurisdiction of subjects matter which in the Senate are dealt with by one committee, namely, the Commerce Committee. So that we can not very well gauge the work of the committees of the Senate by the work of the committees of the House.

Mr. WARREN. They have not been so gauged, and I spoke only of the one committee, because the clerks of the other committees on the House side are paid a less compensation than the clerks of the Senate committees.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. WARREN. For instance, if the Senator from Florida will allow me, admittedly the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House does not have any such amount of work as the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, but the clerk of the House committee does not get as high a salary as is allowed to the clerk of the Senate committee.

Mr. LODGE. I used that example, not on account of existing salaries, but to indicate that to take the House committees for our standard and fix the salaries of Senate committee employees on that basis seems to me to be misleading.

Mr. WARREN. I have denied twice that we have taken such a standard, and I will deny it again.

Mr. LODGE. I beg the Senator's pardon. He said that the reason the clerk of the Finance Committee was given a higher salary than the clerk of any other committee of the Senate was because the clerk of the House Committee on Ways and Means was given such a salary.

Mr. WARREN. That is one committee.

Mr. LODGE. That is taking the House standard, is it not?

Mr. WARREN. It is not taking the standard of the House committees generally; no.

Mr. LODGE. It is taking the standard of the one House committee, and I merely wanted to point out that to do so is misleading.

Mr. WARREN. I do not care to indulge in further remarks now, and I am perfectly willing that the vote should be had on the amendment.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I desire to submit a point of order against the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] on the ground that it is not reported by a standing committee and is to increase an appropriation without an estimate. The point of order is made under Rule XVI, which, in part, is as follows:

> All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law or treaty stipulation or act or resolution—

And so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from South Carolina that he does not think this is a general appropriation bill, and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I rise principally for the purpose of expressing my dissent from the proposition announced by the Senators from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES]. Both have challenged the right of the House to have anything to say concerning expenditures made by the Senate, or resulting from actions of the Senate, in so far as they relate to the salaries and employees of the Senate. In effect their position is that the Senate, in dealing with its own employees, is independent of the House; and that Congress, as defined by the Constitution, means only the Senate when legislation is sought affecting employees and officers of the Senate. Conversely, their position is that the Senate can have no voice in expenditures made by the House relating to its officers and employees. This position, Mr. President, I regard as unsound from every point of view.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator no doubt is about to say, and say very truthfully, that every appropriation bill, every dollar that is expended, has to be voted on by both House and Senate. It is true that we have a contingent fund, and we can use it as we please; but that fund has to come, in the first place, from the joint vote and support of both Houses.

Mr. KING. The Senator has anticipated me. I was about to observe that no money can be lawfully taken from the Treasury of the United States, except as a result of an appropriation made by Congress. Both the House and the Senate must concur, and their action must meet with the approval of the President of the United States. Both the House and the Senate are guardians, or should be, of the interests of the public. Each Member of the Senate and the House has a responsibility for every dollar taken from the Public Treasury. Both the House and the Senate are responsible for appropriations and neither branch can take refuge for an extravagant or illegal item carried in an appropriation bill, behind the proposition that the responsibility for it rests exclusively upon one branch of the legislative department. If the Senate arranges to pay its employees excessive or extravagant salaries or compensation, I submit the House may not escape condemnation by perfunctorily assenting to the same upon the pretext that the Senate alone is concerned in the matter; nor can the Senate escape criticism if it approves of unjust and improper items of expenditure incurred by the House in the payment of its employees and officials. I insist, Mr. President, that the House has a right to scrutinize items of appropriation which the Senate desires made for its contingent expenses or to meet the salaries of its employees, and I repeat that it is the duty of the Senate to examine the measures reported by the House which carry appropriations for House employees.

When the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] states that "it is no business" of the House what the Senate pays its employees, I respectfully submit that the position is not only unsound but it contravenes organic law and subjects the Senate to merited criticism. It seems to me that the position will be regarded as arrogant, and that it does not recognize the proper relations between the legislative branches of the Government.

May I say, Mr. President, that, in my opinion, too little attention is paid by Congress to appropriation bills, and the people are justly complaining of the extravagant appropriations which have characterized this as well as preceding Congresses, and which have added to the intolerable burdens of taxation from which the people are suffering. I have been amazed at the indifference of both branches of Congress to the increasing appropriations and the expanding powers of the Federal Government. Seldom is any appropriation challenged and our efforts seem to be to increase appropriations. The spirit of thrift and economy and retrenchment certainly does not rest upon the legislative branch of the Government, and Congress becomes a contributor to the tribulations and hardships which are visiting our country and carrying despair to the hearts of millions of the farmers of our land.

I have recently felt that the strength of Mr. Coolidge arises largely from the belief which the people have that he is an exponent of economy in government and is opposing extravagant appropriations emanating from the House and the Senate. May I add in parenthesis, that Mr. Coolidge does have great strength among the people, and if Democrats do not realize it now, they will be awakened from their dreams sooner or later. I have not time to analyze the facts to show whether there is foundation for the belief which the people entertain respecting Mr. Coolidge. In my opinion, his efforts in behalf of retrenchment and economy and efficiency in the public service have been greatly exaggerated by the press, and do not afford foundation for the belief of those to whom I have referred.

Mr. President, I regret that so few voices have been lifted upon either side of the aisle this session in favor of economy and in opposition to appropriation bills.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I always appreciate the pungent and scholarly remarks of my friend from Utah, and he is usually correct. The only place, however, where President Coolidge has manifested any desire to economize is to shut off a few pensions of old Civil War veterans and Indian war veterans and to shut off insurance policies for the soldiers of the Great War. Name any other place where economy has been talked about and I surrender.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I observed a moment ago that I would not stop to analyze the claims made for Mr. Coolidge or the basis for the belief of the people. That I shall do later. I was deploring that so little had been said or done in the Senate to lighten the burdens of taxation by reducing the expenses of the Government and excising from appropriation bills hundreds of millions of dollars which I feel the situation does not call for. My able friend from Arizona is a skilled legislator and one of the most valuable men in public life, but I do not now recall hearing his eloquent voice at this session in opposition to appropriation bills. I know, of course, that he does stand for economy, and will, at the appropriate time, lift his voice against extravagant appropriations.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me? I am going to vote against the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses].

Mr. KING. I thought the Senator would.

Mr. ASHURST. I believe in fair pay to secretaries and to clerks, but I believe that the arrangement that the committee has brought in is equitable and fair, and I am going to vote against this proposed increase. So I hope that upon my first experience of this kind the Senator will not strike me in the face as I come into the temple of reform. I am proposing now to vote against the increase, and yet I am rather rebuked by the very able Senator. That is the welcome I get when I start out to vote for decreases of appropriations.

Mr. KING. Well, Mr. President, I would not now have the right to smite my friend from Arizona. My ineffective efforts do not warrant me in criticizing him. However, may I say to the Senator with some levity, "So long as the lamp holds out to burn" the handsomest and ablest sinner may return, and I welcome him into the ranks of those who are trying to reduce the expenses of the Government.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not include me in his statement that no voice has been raised on this side of the Chamber for reform and economy. I tried here to save $4,000,000 to the taxpayers and the Senate voted it in overwhelmingly. It went to the House and, of course, was knocked out. I refer to the Customs Service and other things.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I appreciate what the Senator from North Carolina has done as a member of the Appropriations Committee in keeping down appropriations, and regret that he has not received stronger support. But I was about to state that whatever efforts have been made by Mr. Coolidge to limit expenditures they have evoked but little, if any, support from Republicans. The Republican Party, true to its past record, now disregards, as it always has disregarded, the admonitions of wise and courageous men, whether within or outside of its ranks. It came to power more than three years ago upon the false plea that it stood for economy and would conduct the business of the Government along sane, rational, and economical lines. It has utterly failed to keep its promises. Extravagance and waste have attended its administration, and the evidences of maladministration and corruption have shocked the Nation.

If Mr. Coolidge were to cry aloud for retrenchment, few sympathetic voices would be heard upon the other side of the aisle. The Republican Party has control of Congress and all branches and departments of the Government. It could have projected wise and salutary legislation and inaugurated reform measures and policies which would have resulted in economies. It has been weighed in the balance and found wanting.

We will have another appropriation bill before us within the next day or two, which will add from sixty to eighty millions of dollars annually to the tax burdens of the people. This bill deals only with increases in salaries. Congress is more concerned in creating bureaus and departments and executive agencies and increasing salaries than it is in promoting the welfare of the people and dealing with vital problems relating to agriculture and domestic and foreign affairs.

Mr. President, if the Democrats desire to win the next election—and they can, and I believe will win—they could have no better slogan than economy, retrenchment, reform in governmental affairs, and a reduction in the tax burdens of the people. When the farmers of the United States are earning a mere pittance, perhaps averaging less than $500 per annum, and they behold what is paid to employees of the Federal, State, and municipal governments, and when they feel the grinding heel of poverty, they can not be other than resentful toward their Government and would be justified in demanding the adoption of such measures as would relieve them from the crushing burdens under which they rest.

Mr. President, the Democratic Party here should stand for economy and should fight the extravagant appropriations which daily pass this body. But little help will be received from Republicans. I hope there will be unanimity upon the part of the minority in opposing measures which add so greatly to the sufferings of the people.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia offers an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The reading clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 24, strike out "$3,300" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,600."

On page 3, lines 1 to 23, both inclusive, strike out "$3,300" wherever appearing therein and insert in lieu thereof "$3,600."

On page 3, line 24, strike out "$3,600" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,900."

On page 4, lines 4 to 24, both inclusive, strike out "$3,300" wherever appearing therein and insert in lieu thereof "$3,600."

On page 5, lines 1 to 22, both inclusive, strike out "$3,300" wherever appearing therein and insert in lieu thereof "$3,600."

On page 6, line 4, strike out "$3,300" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,600."

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Georgia a question?

Mr. HARRIS. Certainly.

Mr. MOSES. This is a uniform change of $600, is it, in the amendment which I have offered?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes; it makes the compensation $3,000 for the first clerk instead of $3,300.

Mr. MOSES. And it is offered as a substitute for my amendment?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes.

Mr. MOSES. I accept it as such, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire accepts the amendment of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I am not going into the question of what the House has to say about employees of the Senate, or what the conference committee will do. I believe that the Senators on the conference committee will do their very best to carry out what the Senate votes for. I am going to discuss only the merits of this question.

The private secretaries to Senators have more work to do than the secretaries to the governors of States. The average salary of the secretaries to governors of the States of the Union is more than $4,000. This amendment provides for a salary of $3,600. Senators' secretaries have to spend large sums in going to and returning from their homes with their families in the holidays and in the vacation—in my State from $250 to $300—and that is deducted from their salaries.

I know of no men in the Government employ in Washington who do the secretarial work they do and get less than $3,600. I think we ought to increase this salary to at least that amount. It is unjust to pay them less than others receiving this salary for similar work.

I am not so fortunate as some of the other Senators, who can better afford to pay for extra clerical help out of their own resources. I have to do that, and I am not able to do it. If we lose our efficient secretaries, valuable men that they are, or if the salaries are put at so low a point that we can not hold those men, it will make the work of Senators harder. It is utterly impossible for a Senator to do in person all the departmental work and the other work that is asked of him. I want this salary to be more, because I want my secretary to give service to the people of my State, help look after the many claims of soldiers, and do many other things that require ability, character, and loyalty which it is impossible for a Senator to do and keep up with his committee and other work of the Senate. If the salary is so low that we can not hire efficient men, the people of the States—the soldiers, farmers, laborers, and business people—are going to suffer, and not the Senators. For that reason I hope this amendment will be adopted.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I think I should cut a poor figure to stand up here and argue against an increase of salary for a secretary or clerk to a Senator. If I may be pardoned for a personal reference, my secretary is a man of family and four children, and the salary heretofore has been insufficient.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield gladly.

Mr. HARRIS. What does it cost the Senator's secretary to go home and come back here?

Mr. ASHURST. A vast amount.

Mr. HARRIS. It means several hundred dollars out of his salary.

Mr. ASHURST. The salary has been heretofore, and is now, I think, $2,740. Under the pending bill a moderate and yet, I think, a substantial increase is proposed.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the present salary is $2,500. He gets $2,740 by reason of the bonus. The bonus is done away with now; and therefore, unless this bill is passed, he will get only $2,500.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes. Here is a substantial increase that I favor and for which I would vote; and I hope it will not be construed that my voting against the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire means that I want to begin cheeseparing with the salary of a secretary or a clerk. In fact, Mr. President, they are the last upon whom I should want to apply the knife of retrenchment.

It so happens, however, that we are confronted with a practical difficulty. Here is an increase, and it is a substantial one and I think a just one. If we amend this bill, it is my opinion that we may lose the bill.

Mr. President, I had in mind the proposing of an amendment on page 6 of this bill. Take, for instance, the upholsterer and locksmith, the cabinetmaker, and the carpenters—they get, respectively, $147 a month, $126 a month, and $116 a month. They make these desks. They upholster these chairs. There is not one in the carpenter shop but that could go out and get his $10 a day in private employment. They are men of the highest type of efficiency, and I think their compensation ought to be increased; and I would take pleasure in proposing the amendment now, but I am of opinion that if we amend this bill we will run the risk of losing what it does contain.

Legislation is a compromise; legislation is subject to many exigencies which in a practical way we can not overcome. Therefore I will withhold the proposed amendment, which I intended to offer, which would give the upholsterers and the cabinetmakers and the carpenters increases. I call upon every Senator here to witness that these carpenters and these upholsterers who take care of these desks and who make a great amount of furniture for the Senate are underpaid. But rather than run the risk of losing this bill I withhold the amendment. That is the only thing that keeps me now from voting for the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire—the practical difficulty in the way.

I agree with the Senator from Georgia; the secretaries must go home; they must pay their own railroad fare; they get no mileage, and it is a hardship—a great hardship, especially if they have families. But I fear, I repeat, we will run a risk of losing the substantial increases the bill grants if we amend it.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, it frequently happens that a bill is passed without a roll call. Thinking perhaps that may be the case with this bill, I desire to say just a word.

I am not going to make a plea for economy. That would take some time, and serve no good purposes here. I realize quite well that the Senate talks economy, and yet at every opportunity increases the expenditures of the Government.

The people of the country are burdened with high taxes. Pleas are coming from every section for a reduction of taxes, for relief from heavy burdens. We answer the letters, the telegrams, the personal pleas, and pledge ourselves constantly to an effort to reduce taxes, and yet, as I said, we are constantly increasing those burdens. Hardly a day passes but that the tax burden grows heavier.

I realize quite well that there are some cases where an increase of salary should be granted, but I believe firmly that we are making a mistake with regard to most of these matters. As I said, I do not expect to make a speech on economy, but I simply rose to announce my position, and to put myself on record on this proposition.

I do not believe there is any justification for the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire, nor do I believe there is any justification for many of the increases contained in this bill. For these reasons I expect to vote both against the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire and against the bill itself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] as modified by the proposal of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS.]

Mr. WARREN. Which I hope, Mr. President, may not be agreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Does the vote just taken dispose of the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does. The Senator from New Hampshire accepted the modification.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if he is thoroughly convinced that the adoption of one amendment having to do with the second assistant in the document room would actually threaten the life of this bill? Would the House be disposed to refuse to concur in an amendment of that sort, to take care of a situation which is notorious, and which affects our document room? I will accept the advice of the Senator from Wyoming or the Senator from Utah, but I want it given in public. Here is a situation which can not be defended. I want that man classified as he was formerly and as he should be to-day.

Mr. WARREN. I do not understand that the man's salary has been reduced.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The place was abolished in 1921. I think perhaps the Senator fails to understand some of the details of it. The place of assistant superintendent was established in 1906.

Mr. WARREN. None of these places were established by law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Just as this bill establishes positions and salaries.

Mr. WARREN. For the time being.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; for the time being. The next Congress can repeal this whole thing if it wants to, but it becomes the basic law regulating the salaries of the employees in the House and Senate.

In 1906 the position of assistant superintendent in our document room was established, a man was appointed, and he went to work. In 1921, in the drive for economy, the position was abolished by being unmentioned in the legislative act of 1921. Instantly the document room fell into such confusion and became so far behind in its work that the Secretary of the Senate had to secure authority to employ a man on the contingent roll and send him to the document room to do this work. His salary was only $1,200, and the same man who had been doing the work before volunteered to continue. Since that time the Secretary of the Senate has secured an increase of pay for that man of $300. He is now getting $1,500, plus the bonus.

Mr. KING. Why should they not just change him around and make him first assistant if he is so invaluable?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The place of first assistant is filled, and that man is working hard. This man is doing the work of a second assistant; has done it right along, and the Secretary of the Senate tells me that we can not get along without him. Why not have him classified as such, as he was formerly? I have not found a Senator but who says it ought to be done, except that the House of Representatives may defeat this measure because, forsooth, the Senate proceeds to name a second assistant in its own document room.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, that is going entirely too far.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is the question I ask. That is why I have been deterred from offering the amendment. I have not offered it yet.

Mr. WARREN. I have said to the Senate, and I will say it again, that in five or six days we shall have the appropriation bill here, and this matter and any other thing of the kind can be fixed. If the Senator wishes to offer his amendment now, as I said before, it is with the Senate; it is not with me.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I call attention to the fact that the bill carries for the document room a superintendent at $3,500; first assistant, $2,880; two clerks, at $1,770 each; and a skilled laborer, at $1,520; total, $11,440. That is carried in this bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is one less than was provided for years and years, prior to 1921. This provides for five employees altogether. Formerly there were six, and it is notorious that the document room does not serve Senators to-day as promptly as they should be served.

Mr. FLETCHER. This raises the present cost by $400. The present cost is $11,040, and this makes it $11,440.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The present cost?

Mr. FLETCHER. That is $11,040.

Mr. WADSWORTH. For the document room; yes. There are only four men actually working there, of whom one is this man, who is not carried in this bill. The two clerks do not work there. They are shifted off somewhere else at somebody's earnest request.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator should not hold us responsible for that. The Secretary has immediate charge of those. I do not know why he should detail them somewhere else, but if he does there is no reason why an authorization bill should be changed on that account.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not asking for it on that account, and the Senator knows that. The Senator leaves it to the Senate to decide whether this bill will be killed if an amendment is offered?

Mr. WARREN. I make no such assertion.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator left it to the Senate to be decided. That was the assertion the Senator made.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is not justified, and I think it should be resented.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is it the opinion of the Senator from North Carolina that the House would reject this whole thing?

Mr. OVERMAN. After considering the whole matter as it exists there, what was said by Mr. MADDEN on the floor, and what was done with the bill, I believe we can not get it up again in the House of Representatives if we amend it here.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now I have a direct answer, and I shall not offer the amendment; but my efforts to cure this situation will not cease from now on.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will help the Senator.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They will be made when every appropriation comes up here containing items for the support of the legislative employees. They will be made whenever the contingent fund of the Senate is under discussion. This thing ought to be fixed There is no defense for it in its present situation.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will help the Senator.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POSTMASTERS AND POSTAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I desire to make a motion, but before doing so I want to make just a very brief statement. I am going to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1898, which is a bill prepared by the joint committee of the Senate and the House to readjust the compensation of postmasters and reclassify and readjust the salaries and compensation of employees in the Postal Service. The bill affects 300,000 employees in the postal department in every State in the Union. I am very anxious that the Senate shall give it consideration. I understand, however, that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] desires to speak at 2 o'clock on the results of the inquiry of the special committee of which he was chairman, so that I will not attempt to discuss the bill, giving way to him.

I move now that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1898, to readjust the compensation of postmasters and reclassify and readjust the salaries and compensation of employees of the Postal Service.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah will State his inquiry.

Mr. KING. Is it permissible under the rules to offer as a substitute for that bill some other bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not. If the Senate votes down the motion to take up Senate bill 1898, of course a motion to take up another bill would be in order.

Mr. KING. It is debatable, I presume?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not until 2 o'clock. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading clerk will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Edwards	Jones, Wash.	Robinson
Ashurst	Ernst	Kendrick	Sheppard
Ball	Fernald	King	Shipstead
Bayard	Ferris	Ladd	Smith
Borah	Fletcher	Lodge	Stanfield
Brandegee	Frazier	McNary	Stephens
Brookhart	George	Mayfield	Sterling
Broussard	Gerry	Moses	Swanson
Bruce	Glass	Neely	Trammell
Cameron	Gooding	Norbeck	Underwood
Capper	Hale	Norris	Wadsworth
Caraway	Harreld	Oddie	Walsh, Mass.
Colt	Harris	Overman	Walsh, Mont.
Copeland	Heflin	Phipps	Warren
Dale	Howell	Pittman	Weller
Dial	Johnson, Calif.	Ralston	Wheeler
Edge	Johnson, Minn.	Ransdell

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] to proceed to the consideration of House bill 1898.

Mr. BORAH obtained the floor.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

CHILD LABOR CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, just prior to the close of the business of the Senate on yesterday I indicated a purpose to bring before the Senate for consideration Senate Joint Resolution No. 1, providing for the submission of an amendment to the Constitution in relation to child labor, reported to the Senate on April 15 last. On April 28 there came to us from the House, House Joint Resolution 184, identical in language, dealing with the same subject. I am desirous of having speedy consideration by the Senate of one or the other of the joint resolutions, but some Senators who are opposed to the resolution have asked that its consideration be deferred. I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday, May 27, one week from to-day, at the close of the routine morning business, the Senate proceed to the consideration of House Joint Resolution 184.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. EDGE. If the bill which I am seeking to make the unfinished business shall be made the unfinished business, then if the request made by the Senator from Montana is granted, would that displace the unfinished business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not until the time fixed in the Senator's request.

Mr. EDGE. After the time is reached, if the measure suggested by the Senator from Montana be taken up, would the unfinished business only be temporarily laid aside or would it lose its place permanently?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The unfinished business would be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. LODGE. The time asked for by the Senator from Montana would not possibly interfere with the bill of the Senator from New Jersey that it is now proposed to have taken up.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should not think so.

Mr. LODGE. I think we shall finish the postmasters' bill before that time. I mean it is quite safe so far as the Senator is concerned.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, we may have appropriation bills of importance before us at that time, or we may have before us farm-relief legislation which is of great importance. I think we had better wait until a later period before we take up the child-labor question, and I am therefore constrained to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah objects.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. As objection is made, I shall seize the first opportunity that presents itself to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the House joint resolution to which I have referred. I fixed the day which I did for the accommodation of Senators who had some objections to urge to it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Let me state in connection with the request of the Senator from Montana that there are absent now two Senators who want to be present when the joint resolution is taken up and who will return before the date he has mentioned. I myself would be glad to see an arrangement perfected for the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. In view of the objection made I give notice that, upon the conclusion of the consideration of the bill now about to be made the unfinished business, I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House Joint Resolution 184.

ALIEN PROPERTY TRADE INVESTMENT CORPORATION

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I would like to call the attention of the Senator from Montana to the fact that I gave a similar notice as to one of the farm-relief measures pending here that ought to be taken up, in my judgment, before we keep on increasing a lot more salaries. When the time came and I sought recognition in competition with some one who wanted to take up a bill to increase salaries, I could not get recognition. The Senator from Montana is in the same predicament that I am in. I want to give notice that unless some arrangement is made by which the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 121) to create a body corporate by the name of the "Alien Property Trade Investment Corporation" is taken up I shall move to take it up, and I shall take the time of the Senate to go into it while some other bill is pending. If those who want to consider some legislation of that kind are interested, they will have an opportunity to vote for it even if they do displace something else. We ought to be considering that measure now.

Mr. BORAH. If a vote can be taken upon the motion of the Senator from Montana without debate, I am willing to yield for that purpose.

Mr. KING. No; it can not.

Mr. BORAH. That is what I suspected.

Mr. EDGE. I understand the Senator from Montana has not made a motion?

Mr. BORAH. No; he merely gave notice that he would make it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho is entitled to the floor, and will proceed.

SENATOR BURTON K. WHEELER

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I ask that the Clerk may read the resolution which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Clerk will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of five Members of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore to investigate and report to the Senate the facts in relation to the charges made in a certain indictment returned against Senator BURTON K. WHEELER in the United States District Court for the State of Montana.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the unpleasant task which was assigned to the committee has been finished so far as the committee's work is concerned. Reports, both majority and minority, have been filed, and I now desire, preliminary to making a motion to accept the report of the committee and discharge the committee, to discuss more in detail than we did in the report the facts which we were authorized to investigate.

The statute under which the charges against Mr. WHEELER arise was known originally as section 1782 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and has later been carried into the Criminal Code under section 113. There is in my opinion no difference in legal import between the act as it originally appeared and as it appears in the Criminal Code so far as the charges against Senator WHEELER are concerned. There was a change in phraseology, some additional officers were included, and in some respects modification was had, but the statute as it originally existed and as it was construed by the Supreme Court of the United States in my judgment covers the entire work of the committee.

Mr. STERLING. It is agreed, on my part at any rate, that the import of the two statutes, so far as the Wheeler case is concerned, is the same. There is no dispute about it.

Mr. BORAH. Very well. I therefore direct particular attention to the statute as it originally appeared, because of the construction which has been placed upon it by the Supreme Court. There are two offenses designated and defined in the statute—one that of making an agreement upon the part of a Member of Congress to perform service before a department. That is one offense. The second offense is that of receiving compensation, regardless of whether any previous agreement had been made for the performance of services by a Member of Congress before a department. That was the original statute. That is the statute still.

The important feature, therefore, of the investigation appeared from the beginning to be whether Mr. WHEELER had made an agreement with anyone after his election to the Senate to perform any service before any of the departments at Washington; secondly, whether, regardless of any previous agreement, he had received any compensation for the performance of such service. I know of no way, the committee seemed to know of no way, to arrive at the facts which we were authorized and instructed to investigate other than to go directly to the question of whether or not such an agreement had been made or whether such compensation had been had.

The statute does not inhibit or prohibit a Member of Congress from performing services before a department provided he is not acting under an agreement for compensation or provided he does not receive compensation. As I stated upon yesterday, every western Senator particularly understands how almost daily he is called upon by his people at home to go before the departments, particularly the Department of the Interior, to render some service to some constituent. I take it in all probability that every western Senator would agree with me that that is a thing we are called upon to do almost every day and certainly every week that we are here. The statute does not prohibit that. It only prohibits the performing of a service under agreement or for compensation.

I digress to say that it would be a great convenience, to western Senators particularly, if the statute prohibited one from going before a department in those matters at all. It requires a vast amount of service which it is very difficult for us to decline to perform. We really owe it to our constituency to do it, and yet it is really a service outside of our duties as Senators. One who does not have the misfortune to represent a State largely, if not almost wholly, under control of the National Government can not realize the burden which it imposes upon a Senator. But daily we perform those services, and there is no inhibition, there is no impropriety in it, so far as any statute now obtaining defines our duties.

The most important figure perhaps in this controversy outside of Mr. WHEELER is Gordon Campbell. Mr. Campbell is a geologist; he has been for some time engaged in developing the oil fields in north Montana, which is known as the Kevin field. In January and February of 1923 he was engaged in a number of lawsuits in Montana, which lawsuits were in the State courts of Montana involving a large part of his property. The testimony discloses that at least 19 or 20 lawsuits were on the docket, and at one time I believe the number was as high as 40. Mr. Campbell became dissatisfied with the legal assistance which he had and concluded that he wanted to employ other attorneys. To that end he talked with a friend of his about whom he should employ. Among others whose names were suggested was that of Mr. WHEELER, of the firm of Wheeler & Baldwin, of Butte, Mont.

The first witness called by the investigating committee with reference to this matter was a Mr. Tom Stout. I call particular attention to his testimony. Mr. Stout has been for a number of years the owner and editor of a newspaper in Montana; he was twice a Member of Congress from that State, and is a citizen of prominence and standing in the State. He knew Mr. Campbell; he was somewhat interested in a friendly way in the work of Mr. Campbell or in his interests, and they talked over the question of the employment of attorneys. Mr. Campbell asked Mr. Stout if he would see Mr. WHEELER and talk with him about taking employment. Mr. Stout went to Butte and had a talk with Mr. WHEELER.

I am going to trespass upon the time of the Senate to-day to some extent by reading the testimony. I think it absolutely essential to a proper consideration of the matter that we take the time to do so. After reading the views of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] this morning and observing the construction which he placed upon some of the testimony I do not feel like trusting myself to place a construction upon the testimony as I see it. I think it better to read it as it was given. Mr. Stout testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Are you interested in any way in the oil matters in which Mr. Campbell is interested?

Mr. STOUT. None whatever.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. You may state the conversation which you had with him [Mr. WHEELER], as you recall it.

That was in December, 1922.

Mr. STOUT. Well, Mr. Campbell said that he desired, if possible, to employ Mr. WHEELER to represent him in some litigation that he had there in Montana, but that he did not know him. I told him that I was making a business trip to Butte in a few days and if he desired I would take the matter up with Mr. WHEELER, and he commissioned me to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you have any interest in the matter other than that of being acquainted with the situation of the two parties?

Mr. STOUT. None at all; no, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you afterwards take it up with Mr. WHEELER?

Mr. STOUT. Yes; I went to Butte, as I advised Mr. Campbell, arriving in Butte along about 8.30 or 9 o'clock, I think it was. I called up Mr. WHEELER. I do not remember whether I had previously telegraphed him or not, but at any rate he came down to his office that evening, and I met him there about 9 o'clock and we took this matter up. Do you desire me to just go ahead now, Senator?

The CHAIRMAN. Before you take that matter up, what was the business—the kind of business—law business, which you were delegated to speak to Mr. WHEELER about?

Mr. STOUT. About some litigation in the Montana courts.

The CHAIRMAN. Relative to what subject matter?

Mr. STOUT. Relative particularly to, I think, an application for a receivership which had been made by some parties to have one of Mr. Campbell's companies thrown into a receivership.

At the time Mr. Campbell concluded to employ additional counsel a suit for receivership covering a large portion of his property was pending, and the matter was coming up for hearing. This was a case in which Mr. Stevenson, a former associate in interest with Mr. Campbell, was seeking to have the property placed under the control of a receiver.

The CHAIRMAN. And in what court was this coming up?

Mr. STOUT. In the district court—the State court at Great Falls, Mont.

The CHAIRMAN. Now you may state the conversation that you had with Mr. WHEELER.

Mr. STOUT. Well, I advised him of Mr. Campbell's desire to retain him—his firm. We talked it over for some time. He stated finally the terms under which he would undertake the case. I told him that that was a matter that would have to be taken up with Mr. Campbell, and that I would telephone him; and during the course of that conversation Mr. WHEELER stated that, of course, he could not represent him except in the State courts there. In other words, assuming that Mr. Campbell might have some business in the public Land Department of the Government, he advised me at that time to so advise Mr. Campbell—that he would not represent him in anything except the litigation local to Montana and in the State courts.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you afterwards communicate with Mr. Campbell?

Mr. STOUT. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. By phone?

Mr. STOUT. I think I phoned Mr. Campbell that night.

Senator STERLING. Where was he at that time?

Mr. STOUT. Mr. Campbell was in Great Falls at the time.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you have any further conversation with Mr. WHEELER in regard to this matter of the employment?

Mr. STOUT. I do not recall ever having talked with him again, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. As I understand, Mr. WHEELER stated to you the terms under which he would be employed. I presume you mean——

Mr. STOUT. The retainer.

The CHAIRMAN. The retainer; the amount of the fee, etc.?

Mr. STOUT. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Who brought up the subject with reference to his employment being confined to court matters, etc.?

Mr. STOUT. Senator WHEELER himself brought that up.

The CHAIRMAN. When you spoke to Mr. Campbell over the phone in regard to the matter, did you say anything to him in regard to the terms which Mr. WHEELER had suggested with reference to the fee and the scope of his employment, etc.?

Mr. STOUT. I do not recall, Senator, that I spoke any further than with reference to the fee. I do not think that I did.

The CHAIRMAN. After you reported to Mr. Campbell in regard to this employment, I understand you to say that you never talked with either Mr. WHEELER or Mr. Campbell further in regard to it?

Mr. STOUT. No, no, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You had no further interest in it?

Mr. STOUT. None whatever.

The CHAIRMAN. Were there other attorneys talked of between Mr. Campbell and yourself?

Mr. STOUT. No; there were not.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any fact connected with this matter in any way that my questions have not called out, that you think has any relevancy to this matter?

Mr. STOUT. I think not, Senator. Of course, there have been many reports, but it is all hearsay and would hardly be relevant.

At the bottom of page 5 this question is asked by Senator SWANSON:

Senator SWANSON. Did Senator WHEELER state the amount of compensation he would expect?

Mr. STOUT. Yes, sir.

Senator SWANSON. How much was it?

Mr. STOUT. It was $10,000 a year retainer.

Senator SWANSON. And what was he to do for that $10,000?

Mr. STOUT. His firm was to look after Mr. Campbell's litigation there in the State of Montana.

Senator SWANSON. You recall that he distinctly stated that it was to be confined to that litigation—his employment?

Mr. STOUT. It was so very distinctly stated, Senator.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Stout, the statement which you have made with reference to Mr. WHEELER's raising the question of his inability to represent Mr. Campbell other than in the State courts is a very important feature of this testimony. Can you recall anything like the substance of the language which was used by Mr. WHEELER?

Mr. STOUT. No; I can not, Senator. The matter came up rather casually. We were talking about the terms of the agreement, and WHEELER said, "Of course, I can not represent him except in the State courts here"; and not being an attorney myself, the significance of it did not appeal to me until it was later explained.

Mr. President, that testimony relates to the making of the contract with Mr. WHEELER. The testimony comes from a witness who, so far as I know or as the record discloses, would have no interest in the subject matter other than the fact that he might be personally friendly to Mr. WHEELER. I assume he is friendly to Mr. WHEELER, although they were opposing candidates in the senatorial election. However, outside of that there is no relationship other than that which I have indicated.

It seemed to me at the time of the hearing, and it seems to me now, that the testimony of Mr. Stout must be disposed of and utterly disregarded, or we have the inception and making of this contract wholly disengaged and divorced from any possible dereliction of duty or of wrongdoing upon the part of Mr. WHEELER. I shall undertake to show as we proceed that the services performed, the acts under the contract, and all matters in relation thereto not only failed to contradict or impeach Mr. Stout but sustained the contract as he states it.

I wish to digress here to say, but not necessarily by way of harsh criticism, though worthy of observation, that it is a little difficult for me to understand that in none of the criticisms lodged against Mr. WHEELER by those who have seen fit to charge him with a violation of the statute, not even in the report of the able Senator from South Dakota, is any reference whatever made to the testimony of Mr. Stout or to the testimony of any other witness who was present at any time during the making of the contract. If I understand the report of the Senator from South Dakota, he even complains that we placed Mr. Stout upon the witness stand at all.

The testimony of Mr. Glosser, who was not present when the contract was made and who states he knew nothing about it except from hearsay, and the testimony of Mr. Rhea, who was not present and knew nothing about it except from hearsay, are referred to, adverted to, and discussed; but the witnesses who had knowledge of the making of the contract and who were the only ones who could give legal or competent evidence concerning it are never referred to. It is a peculiar state of affairs that requires primary and competent evidence must be put aside and appeal made to hearsay.

The next witness to whom I shall call attention is Mr. Campbell. I shall not take much time in reading his testimony, but I shall ask leave to insert in the RECORD excerpts from it.

Of course, Mr. President, Mr. Campbell is an interested witness. His testimony must be viewed in the light of an interested witness. He is under indictment for using the mails for fraudulent purposes, and those matters must be taken into consideration in weighing his testimony. There is another feature to it, however, which has its compensation against that fact, and that is that while Mr. Campbell is interested, and while he is under indictment, he was an exceedingly frank witness. He willingly waived immunity. He made no claim that he might incriminate himself, but stated that he was there to give the facts and all the facts and supply any documentary evidence that was in his possession. This had some weight with me in these days when there seems to be a great familiarity upon the part of a large class of people with that provision of the Constitution of the United States which enables them to claim privilege from incriminating themselves.

Mr. Campbell testifies as to these lawsuits, as to the fact that he felt that his property was being gradually taken away from him; that every time he had litigation it seemed to him, as he said, that while he felt he was in the right, the litigation wound up by giving the other party a piece of his land; and he said to Mr. Stout: "I want somebody who will fight. I want some one who will fight for me"; and finally it resulted in what I have already disclosed, Mr. Stout talking with Mr. WHEELER.

Mr. Campbell says that Mr. WHEELER stated to him several times, in discussing these matters, that he must understand that he could not attend to these matters in the land department or before the Government; and let me pause here to say, Mr. President, something which seems to me rather exceptional—that in all the career of Mr. WHEELER as a lawyer in Montana it appears that he never at any time had any practice or business before the land department in Montana or the Interior Department in Washington. As an active practitioner in a State situated as Montana is with reference to her land titles and the Federal Government, undoubtedly he was many times called into a position where it would have been advantageous for him to do so; yet he eschewed the practice, as I take it from what apepars, because it was not to his professional taste. If it does appear now that he appeared in the land office or before the Interior Department, it is the only instance in all his professional career in which he undertook to attend to that kind of business. In other words, throughout his professional career, when he could have done so with perfect legitimacy and without any criticism from anyone, he preferred not to take that kind of practice and eschewed it; but when it became dangerous, prohibitory, and illegal to do so, it would seem, according to the claim that is made, that he was inclined to take a chance at it.

I think it is worth remembering that it was not only by reason of the statute but by reason of his professional taste that he preferred the actual trial of cases, and it was for that kind of service and that kind of legal, professional work that Mr. Campbell employed him. Having some twenty-odd lawsuits in the State of Montana, as he said, he employed Mr. WHEELER to give his time and ability and fighting qualifications to seeing if he could preserve his property.

As to the fee of $10,000, I do not know but some might consider that a large fee. I have heard that comment. In my opinion it was an exceedingly reasonable fee when you take into consideration the fact that all the property of Mr. Campbell was involved, more or less, that his entire holdings and his entire work and the fruits of his years of effort were involved, and, the witnesses say, the values at that time were estimated in the millions. In view of the fact that he was to take care of all the litigation it was a reasonable compensation.

A line or two from Mr. Campbell's testimony, and I will insert the balance in the RECORD:

Senator CARAWAY. Mr. Campbell, I want to ask you a question. Did you have any understanding, either expressed or implied, for a consideration or without a consideration, under which Mr. WHEELER was to appear before any department of the Government to represent you?

Mr. CAMPBELL. No, sir.

Senator CARAWAY. Mr. WHEELER had no relation at all to any matter that was pending before any governmental agency?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Absolutely not, and that was understood between us, that he should not, and he was not employed for that. He was employed to handle my suits in Montana.

The testimony preceding that is quite in detail in regard to it, and I only read those few lines as the concluding sentences in regard to his testimony.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you have a conversation with anyone relative to employing Mr. WHEELER?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. With whom?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Tom Stout.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you recall about the date of this conversation?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Possibly about the middle of December.

The CHAIRMAN. 1922?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. This was after Mr. WHEELER had been elected Senator?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. State in a general way what the conversation was with Mr. Stout.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think Mr. Stout came to Great Falls, and we were quite friendly, and I used to talk my matters over considerably with Mr. Stout, being a friend, and I had told him, or practically he knew, about my lawyers, and how some of them had not treated me right, as I called it; so I said: "It is funny that I can not get a lawyer that will stand pat with me and will work for me and make a fight." Most of the lawyers, when I would take them in, would want to compromise with somebody and give them a lot more of my land—compromise instead of making a fight.

The CHAIRMAN. This is what you said to Mr. Stout?

Mr. CAMPBELL. To Mr. Stout. I said: "I don't know Mr. WHEELER, but it seems to me that he is a fighter, and I should like to get a lawyer that has got some fighting qualities." We talked along that line, and Mr. Stout said: "Well, I am going to Butte, and I will take it up with Mr. WHEELER," which he did.

The CHAIRMAN. Did he report to you?

Mr. CAMPBELL. He reported to me by phone that night or the next night.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you have litigation pending in the State courts at that time?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the nature of it?

Mr. CAMPBELL. My past associate had filed or had started a suit to call for a receiver on my company. He had instituted a suit a year before that in the Lewistown courts, and it was thrown out of court. Afterwards Mr. Wilson, my attorney, had settled with him and gave him a considerable portion of my field or part of my acreage for a complete settlement, simply to call off all litigation, so we could work.

Senator STERLING. Who was that past associate?

The CHAIRMAN. Did you, after talking over the phone with Mr. Stout, afterwards see Mr. WHEELER?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Where?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. WHEELER came down to Great Falls, in my office.

The CHAIRMAN. About what date?

Mr. CAMPBELL. About the 20th of December, I think—the latter part of December, 1922.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you have a conversation with him about employing him

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Where?

Mr. CAMPBELL. In my office.

The CHAIRMAN. Was this employment in writing? Did you reduce it to contract form?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not think so; no, sir; I do not recall any writing; I am quite sure it was not.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, then, you had a conversation with him about employment?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. State what it was—the terms.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. WHEELER asked me the character of these suits, and, in fact, I think Mr. WHEELER had known in a general way what they were, and I told him about the suits that were coming up and what I wanted to do in starting some other suits, which we did, countersuits, and I wanted him to handle all of my litigation on these suits; and we talked the matter over from his standpoint, and he informed me that, of course, he could not do anything for me if any land matter came up. I told him that Mr. Beaulieu was attending to all our land matters; that he was employed for that purpose.

Senator STERLING. Exactly what did you mean by "land matters" there?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, I had a permit, and some of our leases were in bad shape. We had to clear the title of them. There were a great many mortgages against this land and liens in different ways that had to be cleaned up.

Now, Mr. President, I come to the testimony of Mr. Beaulieu. Mr. Beaulieu is an attorney, and was located in the home town of Mr. Campbell. He has been engaged in the practice of law for some time in Montana. He is now located in Los Angeles, Calif. So far as I can see, he has no possible interest in this controversy. He might have a sympathetic interest, knowing the facts, perhaps believing in the innocence of Mr. WHEELER, but no interest which would have any bearing upon a man of any sense of right or any intellectual integrity in the coloring of his testimony. Mr. Beaulieu was the regular attorney for Mr. Campbell. He was what might be called his office attorney. He attended to his land titles and practically to the details of all his litigation. He states that all these matters passed under his supervision, no only with reference to the land-title matters, but he was also, of course, as general counsel, familiar with the litigation.

I undertake to say that it would be practically impossible for any contract to have been made, and certainly impossible for it to have been carried out, in which Mr. WHEELER's professional services included the kind of practice of which he is now accused without the general counsel being familiar with it. It would seem that he would be quite as familiar with it as incidental employees were, men who were not connected with the legal department, men who were simply in the field service. Mr. Beaulieu tells us that Mr. WHEELER had nothing to do with this part of the work for Mr. Campbell.

I read a line or two from Mr. Beaulieu, on page 44:

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know anything about the employment of Mr. WHEELER by Mr. Campbell with reference to some matters in Montana?

Mr. BEAULIEU. Well, I was not present when they made their agreement, but I do know that Mr. WHEELER did some law work for Mr. Campbell.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the nature of the business which Mr. WHEELER transacted for Mr. Campbell?

Mr. BEAULIEU. Why, he appeared as one of the attorneys in what we called the receivership case. The firm of Wheeler & Baldwin appeared in several cases in which I was also counsel in the State courts of Montana.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the nature of those cases?

Mr. BEAULIEU. One was an attachment suit brought by L. C. Stevenson to recover some money, I believe $14,000 or $15,000, from Gordon Campbell Kevin Syndicate No. 1.

Another was a receivership case to have a receiver appointed for the Gordon Campbell Kevin Syndicate No. 1.

Then some of them involved private leases from landowners to the syndicate and to Mr. Campbell.

I call particular attention to that statement. The titles were not only involved to a certain extent, so far as the National Government was concerned, but there was a controversy with reference to titles as between individuals. There are two kinds of titles referred to—those in which the Government is involved and those in which there might be a conflict of interests between individuals.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator give the page from which he is reading?

Mr. BORAH. Page 45.

I read further from Mr. Beaulieu:

The CHAIRMAN. What was your particular work, or what did your professional services cover, in your employment with Mr. Campbell and your work with Mr. Campbell as attorney?

Mr. BEAULIEU. I was chief counsel. I had control of all the litigation that was handed to me by him.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you have anything to do with titles?

Mr. BEAULIEU. Yes; I did. I examined probably all the titles he had, and drew the pleadings, and everything.

The CHAIRMAN. I believe you stated you were not present when the contract was made between Mr. WHEELER and Mr. Campbell?

Mr. BEAULIEU. Yes, sir; I was not.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you ever talk with Mr. WHEELER about the nature of that contract?

Mr. BEAULIEU. Yes; I think I did; on one occasion.

The CHAIRMAN. When was that; about the date of it?

Mr. BEAULIEU. Oh, I could not say. It was shortly after he was retained, and I believe before he went abroad.

The CHAIRMAN. Can you state that conversation? First, I will ask you, was there anyone else present besides you and Mr. WHEELER?

Mr. BEAULIEU. I believe not.

The CHAIRMAN. Can you state that conversation?

Mr. BEAULIEU. Why, in substance it was this: I asked Mr. WHEELER what he thought about a certain Government permit—some question of law; I forget just what it was; and, to use the exact words——

Senator STERLING. Now, Mr. Chairman, of course, it is understood, I suppose, that we go a little beyond the rule that would be applied in the trial of a case in court here.

And finally, after we settled that controversy, the following occurred:

The CHAIRMAN. You may state what this conversation you had with Mr. WHEELER was as fully as you can.

Mr. BEAULIEU. I asked Mr. WHEELER some question with reference to a law point concerning a certain permit, and Senator WHEELER had lived in Montana so long that he used pretty strong language sometimes—plain—and he said, "I don't know a ——— ——— thing about Government permits. I wouldn't know one of the ——— things if I saw it. Besides, I told Campbell I would not have anything to do with his Government land." That was his answer.

Mr. President, it seems singular to talk about the impressions which Mr. Glosser said he got, because he says that all he had was impressions, or to talk about the hearsay testimony of Mr. Rhea and to wholly disregard the testimony of Stout and Beaulieu, men who were in a position to know, and the duty of one of whom it was to know, who states that in the very beginning of this transaction Mr. WHEELER was careful to say:

Besides, I told Campbell I would not have anything to do with his Government land.

I say here that there is no conflict of legal evidence, so far as the making of this contract is concerned. So far as legal or competent evidence goes, I challenge anyone to show a conflict of evidence with reference to what the nature of this contract was. Every witness, interested or disinterested, who was in a position to know the facts, who helped to make the contract, or who knew of its execution, states emphatically that Mr. WHEELER was careful to confine his employment to the State courts of Montana. In addition to that, Mr. President, Mr. Beaulieu took up these titles himself, and each permit, each lease, or other thing which brought them in contact with the National Government, Mr. Beaulieu states he attended to himself; that he took it up directly with an attorney in Washington, whose testimony I will come to in a few moments, and that Mr. WHEELER was neither counseled nor in any way consulted in regard to the matters in any way whatever. Mr. Beaulieu and Mr. WHEELER did consult and counsel with reference to all State litigation, but when Beaulieu called the permit matter to his attention Mr. WHEELER informed him he knew nothing about it, and besides he [WHEELER] had informed Campbell he would have nothing to do with such matters. If Mr. WHEELER had considered himself employed relative to these matters, he would naturally have consulted many times with Campbell's regular attorney, and Beaulieu would have consulted with WHEELER. Now, is Beaulieu a perjurer? For what reason? Why should a reputable attorney and now no longer Campbell's ally and far removed from the State come here and swear falsely? His evidence is to me most conclusive.

I will ask to have inserted in the RECORD part of page 47 and part of page 48 of the record.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. You may state what this conversation you had with Mr. WHEELER was as fully as you can.

Mr. BEAULIEU. I asked Mr. WHEELER some question with reference to a law point concerning a certain permit, and Senator WHEELER had lived in Montana so long that he used pretty strong language sometimes—plain—and he said, "I don't know a ——— ——— thing about Government permits. I wouldn't know one of the ——— things if I saw it. Besides, I told Campbell I would not have anything to do with his Government land." That was his answer.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not think that is self-serving.

Senator STERLING. No; his answer is not.

Senator CARAWAY. He speaks the language of the West, does he not?

The CHAIRMAN. I object; don't you, Senator MCNARY?

Senator MCNARY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, did you have any other conversation in regard to his employment and the performance of his duty as attorney for Mr. Campbell?

Mr. BEAULIEU. Only in that same conversation he says:

"I told Campbell that I would appear for him in the State courts out here in Montana, and that is all I would do."

The CHAIRMAN. Did you ever after that assume to consult Mr. WHEELER about permits?

Mr. BEAULIEU. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you ever, as an associate counsel or counsel for Mr. Campbell, have any professional relationship with Mr. WHEELER thereafter with reference to any matter which was pending or to be pending before the land office in Montana or before the Interior Department here?

Mr. BEAULIEU. No, sir; I did not.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, you were in close touch with Mr. Campbell's business all the time, were you not?

Mr. BEAULIEU. Yes; I was.

The CHAIRMAN. You were practically in his office, were you not; or did you have a separate office?

Mr. BEAULIEU. Well, he furnished the office. I practiced generally in addition to doing his work.

The CHAIRMAN. Were your offices together—in the same building?

Mr. BEAULIEU. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You had supervision and charge and knowledge of all his legal business?

Mr. BEAULIEU. Well, I assume I did; that was, all he handed to me I took care of.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you ever know of Mr. WHEELER performing any legal services for Mr. Campbell in connection with any matters pending in the Land Office or in the Interior Department or before any of the departments here?

Mr. BEAULIEU. No, sir; I do not know of any matter at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Did Mr. Campbell employ, afterwards, an attorney here in Washington with reference to some matters—a Mr. Feely?

Mr. BEAULIEU. Yes; he did.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you communicate with Mr. Feely?

Mr. BEAULIEU. I did.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you communicate with Mr. Feely through letter or telegram?

Mr. BEAULIEU. I wrote him several letters and telegrams.

The CHAIRMAN. That was with reference to matters pending before the department?

Mr. BEAULIEU. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did Mr. WHEELER have anything to do with that?

Mr. BIEULEAU. No, sir; not that I ever heard of.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you consult him in regard to it in any way?

Mr. BIEULEAU. No, sir; not about that. In fact, I never saw Mr. WHEELER from before he went abroad until just the other day when I came to Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know of Mr. WHEELER ever performing any services for Mr. Campbell with reference to these public-land matters, or matters of any kind before the departments?

Mr. BEAULIEU. I have no knowledge of his performing any service with reference to these matters.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you any knowledge of any agreement on his part to perform such services?

Mr. BEAULIEU. I have not.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I want to call attention to the testimony of Mr. Baldwin. Mr. Baldwin is the law partner of Mr. WHEELER, and to that extent an interested party. But perhaps, while I am discussing the testimony of Mr. Beaulieu, it will be more logical to take the testimony of Mr. Feely, the attorney in Washington.

As I have stated, Mr. Beaulieu had charge of this matter of titles and permits and took up these several matters coming before the department in Washington with Mr. Feely. Mr. Feely is a practicing attorney here in Washington. He belongs to the firm of Vogelsang, Brown, Cram & Feely. He is a man of ability, and testified with clarity and candor. Their principal business seems to be that of practicing before the departments, two of the members of the firm having been at one time or other connected with the Interior Department.

I ask particular attention to the fact that all these matters which relate to the land matter passed directly from Mr. Beaulieu to Mr. Feely.

I read the following from the testimony of Mr. Feely:

The CHAIRMAN. What were the circumstances and the place and time where you met him?

Mr. FEELY. I met Mr. Campbell in March, and he was introduced by Mr. Booth. Mr. Campbell stated to me that he had matters pending before the department with reference to clearing up certain titles, and that he had heard of our firm in Montana, and he arranged with our firm through me to take care of all the matters that he had pending and in connection with which he was interested in the Kevin Sunburst field.

The CHAIRMAN. Can you give the date, about?

Mr. FEELY. I can not, Senator. It was some time in March; I am quite certain about that.

The CHAIRMAN. Was the contract of employment in writing?

Mr. FEELY. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The terms of the contract were, then, that you were to take charge of the matters concerning Mr. Campbell's interests before the department?

Mr. FEELY. That was it. Mr. Campbell told me he had several matters pending there respecting titles, and he had an attorney named Beaulieu in Great Falls who took care of matters there, and that he would refer all matters through Mr. Beaulieu to our firm, which he did.

The CHAIRMAN. With whom did you communicate in Montana as representative of Mr. Campbell?

Mr. FEELY. Mr. Beaulieu, of Great Falls, Mont., extensively.

The CHAIRMAN. By letter and by telegram?

Mr. FEELY. Oh, I imagine 50 or more telegrams passed between our firm and Mr. Beaulieu and more letters than that. We handled all those cases and were in constant correspondence with Mr. Beaulieu regarding all the matters that he referred to us.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you, then, take up the matters that Mr. Campbell had before the department?

Mr. FEELY. Yes; we took up all of the permits and all the applications for extensions and the various assignments of all those permits which were assigned to us by Mr. Beaulieu.

The CHAIRMAN. In your employment by Mr. Campbell, was your firm employed individually—or singly, I should say—or in connection or in association with somebody else?

Mr. FEELY. No, sir; our firm was employed as a firm here.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. FEELY. But we had no connection; that is, no financial connection or social connection with Mr. Beaulieu. Mr. Beaulieu, as I understood it, was Mr. Campbell's attorney in Montana, and Mr. Campbell sent everything in to us through Mr. Beaulieu.

The CHAIRMAN. Was there anyone else present when you were employed except Mr. Booth?

Mr. FEELY. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Are you acquainted with Senator WHEELER?

Mr. FEELY. I met Senator WHEELER during the summer of 1923, and I think it was practically after we had carried out all the business that was intrusted to us by Mr. Campbell through Mr. Beaulieu. I never met Senator WHEELER until during the summer of 1923.

The CHAIRMAN. You had no acquaintance with Mr. WHEELER, no business connection with him, then, at the time that the contract was made with Mr. Campbell?

Mr. FEELY. No, sir; I never saw Senator WHEELER before, and the only thing I ever heard about Senator WHEELER was that he beat Mr. Riddick, of Montana; and that is all I ever knew about Senator WHEELER.

Senator CARAWAY. You never had any connection whatever with him in this matter of Mr. Campbell?

Mr. FEELY. No, sir; I never wrote to Senator WHEELER in connection with anything, only in the summer of 1923 after I met Senator WHEELER personally.

Senator CARAWAY. But you never consulted with him about these matters?

Mr. FEELY. No, sir.

Senator CARAWAY. He had nothing to do with them?

Mr. FEELY. No, sir; I never addressed a communication to Senator WHEELER in Montana or to Senator WHEELER's firm.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. Just what interest did the United States have? Was there any controversy there with the United States in regard to that permit?

I ask some attention to this statement. In my opinion, if all the evidence in this case were taken against WHEELER, it would be very doubtful—I mean as construed by those who think it proves guilt—if Mr. WHEELER would be guilty under this statute at all. I read further:

Mr. FEELY. No; not in the Scott case, there was not a controversy. There was no controversy with the permittees or the assignees in any of those cases—that is, with the United States. Those permits were granted, as I stated, under the act of February 25, 1920, for compliance with the terms of the act; that is, within a certain length of time that they would place derricks, etc., upon the land, and within the first year they would go down 500 feet and the next succeeding year 2,000 feet. There was not any controversy between the United States and any of those permittees to whom I have referred. Of course, the United States, through the Commissioner of the General Land Office, decided all questions as to who was entitled to the assignments of those various permits; but I do not consider that as a controversy between the permittee and the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. What I was going to reach is, what financial interest or what interest would the United States have in the question of whether John Doe or Richard Roe held a particular permit?

Mr. FEELY. None whatsoever.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. In connection with any of these permits to which I have called your specific attention and which are mentioned in the indictment, or any other permit, what, if anything, did Mr. WHEELER have to do with you or you with Mr. WHEELER or your firm with Mr. WHEELER with reference to these matters, whatever they may have been, in which you presented the question to the department?

Mr. FEELY. Absolutely nothing.

So we have not only the contract as made by Mr. Stout and as affirmed by Mr. Campbell and stated by Mr. Beaulieu but we have that which is much stronger proof, more conclusive evidence, that in carrying out this contract Mr. WHEELER observed the declaration which he made to Stout and made to Campbell that he would have nothing to do with the presentation of these matters before the department, and the result of it was that Beaulieu took the matter up with Feely, and Mr. Feely put every single one of those controverted matters through the department, without consultation in any way with Mr. WHEELER. Neither Mr. Beaulieu in Montana nor Feely in Washington consulted or knew Mr. WHEELER in these matters before the departments. The matters passed through a wholly different channel.

I do not know how legal evidence could more thoroughly establish the fact that this was a contract outside the inhibition of the statute, and that Mr. WHEELER observed in good faith the terms of the contract as he understood it. If there was no agreement to accept payment, if there was no compensation made for the services, Mr. WHEELER had a right to do what every western Senator does every day, to make any suggestion with reference to his constituents which he thought was in their interest. I venture to say that if you will open the files of any western Senator, you will find evidence of such transactions going on from day to day. This entire matter turns upon the question of whether there was an agreement behind what he was doing, or compensation to come, and all legal and competent evidence disproved it. The testimony of interested and disinterested witnesses alike declares that no such contract as inhibited by the statute was made. You must find that Mr. Stout deliberately falsified his entire testimony. You must find that Mr. Beaulieu, a disinterested and reputable attorney at the bar, colored his testimony. You must find that Mr. Feely, a practicing attorney here in Washington, wholly disinterested, must have colored his testimony, or else you must conclude that the contract was clean, and that the parties carrying it out were clean from the beginning to the close. All legal or competent testimony must be disregarded, and all disinterested witness put aside in order to avoid the conclusion that Senator WHEELER stands clear of any wrongdoing.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. I feel impelled to call attention to the fact that this is a matter gravely affecting the integrity of one of the great executive departments of this Government. Not only does it involve the integrity of a great executive department of this Government but it involves the question, as some of us think, of attempted blackmail by that department through the forms of law. Yet when the chairman of the committee investigating the facts of this matter appears here to present the facts and to argue them we have on the other side of the Chamber not exceeding four Members, including that member of the committee who acted as prosecutor of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator excuse me for calling his attention to a word which I hardly think he is justified in using? The Senator from South Dakota does not act as prosecutor of the Senator from Montana in these proceedings. All the Senator from South Dakota was interested in was the truth, so far as it affected what I deemed the proper question in this case, and that is as to whether the grand jury were justified in finding an indictment even if we should go that far, and I object to the use of the word "prosecutor" in characterizing my connection with this proceeding.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I used the term as it has generally been used here to designate that member of the committee who has made himself especially active in seeking, apparently, to convict the Senator or person charged.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, again the Senator from Virginia misrepresents me. I am not seeking to convict the Senator from Montana. I should regret to see the Senator from Montana convicted.

Mr. GLASS. Well, I do not think you will see that. I meant the designation in no offensive sense whatsoever. I ventured to interrupt the distinguished Senator from Idaho in order to call the country's attention to the sort of proceeding we have here in a matter of this kind, as I said, gravely affecting the very integrity of one of the great executive departments of this Government, charged with undertaking to blackmail the Senate of the United States and to cause it to terminate its investigation of rascality by involving one of its own Members in a serious charge. There have been as many as four Senators on the other side of the Chamber to hear an exposition of the facts adduced by this investigation.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I now call attention to the testimony of Mr. Baldwin. Mr. Baldwin is the law partner of Mr. WHEELER. Of course we must take into consideration in weighing his testimony that he is his law partner and perhaps feels an interest deeply in his welfare. But Mr. Baldwin came before the committee and brought with him all the books of the firm that had any relation to the matter under investigation. I do not want anyone who is interested in besmirching the character of Senator WHEELER to forget for a moment that Senator WHEELER and Mr. Baldwin brought everything in their possession for the purpose of uncovering it before our committee. The docket as they kept it from day to day, the registry of their transactions in the office, the record of their lawsuits, any correspondence that they had, was at the beck and call of the committee.

Mr. Baldwin appeared and no one could hear Mr. Baldwin testify without concluding that he was stating with care and caution the facts as he understood them. He stated, in corroboration of the testimony already given by other witnesses, that their firm's sole duty and obligation under the contract was to look after the litigation in Montana. They opened the records and disclosed the proceedings, the number of suits pending, what they did in the suits, the motions filed, the demurrers filed, the motions argued, the demurrers argued. It was all thrown open to the committee. I shall not take the time of the Senate to read Mr. Baldwin's testimony, but it is clear covering all points, and conclusive and in complete harmony with the facts as developed by the acts of the respective parties in carrying out the contract.

I now read from the testimony of Mr. Baldwin:

The CHAIRMAN. Now, coming back to this $2,000 payment and contract, did that have anything to do with any matter other than the matters to which you have referred and in connection with the litigation in the State courts?

Mr. BALDWIN. Absolutely nothing. That was our retainer to care for his business in Montana in the courts for a period of one year.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, disposing for the moment of the receivership, did you bring other suits for him?

Mr. BALDWIN. We brought a number of suits, and also defended a number of suits. This record shows 19 cases.

The CHAIRMAN. Nineteen cases in which you appeared as plaintiff or defendant?

Mr. BALDWIN. For the Campbell interests; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. State generally, Mr. Baldwin, the nature of that litigation.

Mr. BALDWIN. Well, some of it was large litigation and some of it was not so large.

The CHAIRMAN. About what was the nature of the litigation? What did it have reference to?

Mr. BALDWIN. It had reference to—one case was a case for a libel involving $100,000. There were certain publications put in circulation for the purpose, as we thought, of damaging Mr. Campbell's company and ruining his reputation and the reputation of his concerns; and for the purpose of stopping further circulation of such matter we brought an action against L. E. Stevenson, as I recall it, for $100,000. There were suits brought against Mr. Campbell that would, if carried to a successful conclusion, put his companies out of business, and we defended in those.

There was a case brought by L. E. Stevenson against one of Mr. Campbell's companies for a number of thousand dollars—tens of thousands of dollars, I think—claimed to be due on account of percentages earned in financing one of the concerns.

There were smaller suits brought against others for the purpose of recovering amounts of money that we supposed they had abstracted improperly from the companies' funds.

There is an action pending in the district court at Shelby involving a transfer made by one of the Campbell companies to some one in Seattle. If you want the detailed information, I have the record here.

The CHAIRMAN. No; I do not think it is necessary to go into details.

Mr. CAMPBELL. But that is a general statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Was there anything pending in your office at any time relative to Mr. Campbell's affairs which required you to appear before the Interior Department or the local land offices in Montana?

Mr. BALDWIN. Absolutely nothing. I have never appeared before the Interior Department for anybody. So far as I know, the firm was never retained in any case to appear before that department.

The CHAIRMAN. Was there ever anything placed in your office to be looked after which would lead you to the land office either in Montana or in the Interior Department here?

Mr. BALDWIN. Absolutely nothing. Mr. Campbell and his companies had an attorney named Beaulieu who took care of all their records and titles. And when it did appear to be necessary—now, this again is hearsay with me; it was not placed before me—when it became necessary for Mr. Campbell to secure counsel before the Interior Department, he employed attorneys here in Washington, D. C. We were not consulted at all about that.

The CHAIRMAN. Did your firm ever communicate with the lawyer here in Washington with reference to these matters—with Mr. Feely?

Mr. BALDWIN. Certainly not. I do not think there was any correspondence ever had between Mr. Feely and our office. I have searched the files—or, rather, run through the files—and I never saw a letter of that kind.

Here I call attention to some letters which passed between Mr. WHEELER and Mr. Campbell. These letters are photostatic copies of documents which were impounded in Montana, part of the documents which, as has been stated in the public prints, were so damning to Mr. WHEELER. I shall only read some paragraphs, but in all references to the matter in this correspondence, where they were in controversy about the payment of the fee and the delay in paying the fees, there is not an intimation anywhere to the effect that the services of Mr. WHEELER covered anything other than the litigation in Montana. The letters refer to the fact that "You are employed to attend to the litigation in Montana." I pause to say also that there is not a piece of documentary evidence in the case that controverts that proposition.

Mr. Campbell said in one of these letters:

We are wondering what we are going to do about our lawsuits and cases. Mr. Beaulieu has left our organization and gone to California. We have not employed another attorney, and I do not want to do so at this time, but we wish to work through your office if we possibly can.

This was the time when they were having some controversy because the fees had not been paid. There had been $2,000 paid in January and $2,000 paid in February and the balance was unpaid. It was to be paid, as I understand it, $1,000 a month thereafter.

We do not know when these suits are set for trial, as this was all left to Mr. Beaulieu, and I did not get to see him before he left to get all the data.

Mr. WHEELER, in reply, said:

With reference to your litigation there is no reason why you should not handle it through our office. I am quite sure Mr. Baldwin would be glad to handle it, and, as I indicated to you before, if some of the litigation were of sufficient importance I might go to Montana myself and assist in the trial. But, Campbell, I can not handle this litigation without being paid.

Again, in a letter from Mr. Campbell:

We were under the impression that we were to pay you $10,000 a year for your services. I believe this was the understanding, that we were supposed to pay you originally $3,000. We have already paid you $4,000. We were under the impression that this would carry at least until our suits came to trial and something was done in regard to our litigation. But now, WHEELER, I want you to get me right. I am not trying to crawl out of any obligation or make anyone the goat except myself, but I really think enough money has been paid to our attorneys and that our cases should at least be taken care of.

Again he said in another paragraph:

I think Mr. Baldwin could well afford, on the money paid into your partnership, to carry on this litigation at least to the point where it comes to trial in the courts.

Mr. WHEELER, in reply, said:

The understanding that you speak of in your letter is not accurate. The understanding was that you were to pay $4,000 down, and that you were to pay each month until the sum of $10,000 was paid. However, I want to do everything I can to help you out, but you must in turn do something to try to raise the money also. I shall be glad to see you when you come East.

I think it more than significant—I think it convincing proof—that when they were discussing the matter with reference to the fees and where there was some impatience expressed upon the part of Mr. WHEELER that the fee was not being taken care of, that these parties in their correspondence, which must have been under circumstances in which they would not be supposed to be speaking other than that which they understood to be the fact, referred to the services as litigation in the State of Montana. It is much stronger to me, the almost unconscious expression of "litigation" as they had understood it from the beginning, than any oral testimony that could be given. So I repeat that the documentary evidence before the committee supports the contention of the oral testimony of those who made the contract. You must controvert, disregard, or disprove not only the oral testimony of those who made the contract but the written evidence of it as expressed between the parties from time to time when it was being carried out. Does not the direct testimony prove there was no illegal contract; does not the acts of the parties, such as Mr. WHEELER's statement to Beaulieu, prove there was no illegal contract; does not the letters referring to the litigation prove there were no illegal contract?

Now let us turn to another phase of the matter. I have already called attention to the services of Mr. Beaulieu and Mr. Feely. What do we find when we get to the land office? Particular stress is laid upon the fact by the Senator from South Dakota that when Mr. WHEELER came to Washington he called upon Mr. Edwin Booth, the presumption being apparently, as viewed by the Senator from South Dakota, that one acquaintance can not call upon another acquaintance from Montana without some sinister motive behind the transaction. Mr. Booth and Mr. WHEELER had been acquainted for 20 years. They had been in Montana politics on opposite sides of the fence. When Mr. WHEELER came to Washington he called upon Mr. Booth. If Mr. WHEELER had not called upon Mr. Booth until he was employed by Mr. Campbell, it might have been argued, and I presume would have been argued, and, indeed, is argued inferentially in the minority report, that he immediately sought him out for a sinister purpose. But Mr. WHEELER came down here in December, 1922, after his election and before he was employed by Mr. Campbell, and had no reason for calling upon Mr. Booth so far as Mr. Campbell was concerned, but it was then that he called upon Mr. Booth in the first instance. I think he went out to his home. If I remember correctly, their wives visited. They were acquaintances. He called upon Mr. Booth, and, as Mr. Booth said, no discussion whatever was had with reference to any matter touching business interests in Montana. So it is apparent that when Mr. WHEELER came here again in January he called upon Mr. Booth because of his acquaintanceship and friendship, which had caused him to call upon him in December prior to his employment by Mr. Campbell.

What happened when he called upon Mr. Booth? In the conversation, said Mr. Booth, who was a Republican appointee of the Department of the Interior, Mr. WHEELER stated that he had been engaged in some heavy litigation in Montana for Mr. Campbell, and that Mr. Campbell's business was in bad shape; that he was financially embarrassed; that some of his titles seemed to be involved, but that he thought he had helped to straighten him out some by winning his receivership case. He also said to Mr. Booth that if there was anyone Mr. Booth was acquainted with whom he thought might be interested in investing in oil properties in Montana he would like to get in touch with him, because he would be very glad to help Mr. Campbell in that respect. Mr. Booth spoke of a certain gentleman whom he thought might be interested in the proposition and the discussion proceeded along that line, such a general discussion as might very well take place between two gentlemen from Montana who were somewhat familiar, one of them entirely familiar and the other more or less familiar, with the situation.

When Mr. Booth is asked if Mr. WHEELER undertook to present any matter to him in which Mr. Campbell was interested in the way of asking his services as a solicitor of the department he states emphatically that he did not; that the most important feature of the discussion was with reference to finding some one to finance his situation.

I here read from the testimony of Booth:

Mr. BOOTH. Yes. I think, Senator, just to keep straight—my recollection is that the first day he came in and I was holding a conference. The boys from Montana were interested in the Crow Lake irrigation project, and that day he came in, and I think he went out, and I do not remember anything he said. I think he went away.

The following afternoon he returned and we had some conversation and we talked about some matters. He finally said to me—this is just my statement in a résumé, not the exact words—I am not trying to quote Senator WHEELER's exact language; I could not—the effect of his conversation was that he had very shortly before that been into quite a lawsuit in Great Falls in which Gordon Campbell's properties, or some portion of them, were involved. He talked with me about the lawsuit; told me that Campbell's properties were in very bad shape—that is, his condition—that the situation of his properties was bad; that it was rather complicated; that his financial condition was bad, and that he was desirous of assisting Mr. Campbell; that that lawsuit had in a measure, I think, done some adjusting, but Campbell had some difficulties with oil lands which he had, including some Government lands; and I asked the Senator if he knew what Government lands and he told me he did not. I asked him if he could give me the serial numbers of any of them and he said no; and I think I asked him if he knew anything about it, and he said he did not; that Campbell had that information and that he did not have it. I said that he would have to get it from Campbell in some way, and discussed the matter, and I think that the Senator said that it would probably be best if Campbell would come to Washington and take it up, and asked me if I would discuss it with Mr. Campbell if he did come here, and I told him I surely would, and would certainly help him in any way I could.

We discussed the matter of Mr. Campbell's finances, and during the conversation he asked me if I had met any men, or if I knew anyone who might likely be interested to the extent that Campbell might finance his property, and I told him of a gentleman in New York; and while we were talking my secretary may have been in there quite a portion of the time; but at any rate, if he was not, he came in and heard a part of this conversation, and he spoke up and said that Mr. Nyce was in the building, and that possibly some of the companies in which he was interested might be interested, and I said, "Step out and get him." He stepped out and got Mr. Nyce and brought him in and I introduced him to Senator WHEELER. Peter Q. Nyce is his name.

He talked to Senator WHEELER and asked him about what properties Mr. Campbell had, if he had a plat or description or anything about them, and Mr. WHEELER said he did not; and he wanted to know what the condition was, whether Campbell had title to the lands; and WHEELER, as I recall, told him that he did not know about that. He asked him whether there was some school land, and the different kinds, and I do not know who suggested it, but probably Mr. Nyce, as I recall, suggested that if Senator WHEELER would get a description of the lands and let him have that he would submit it to such people as he was interested with, and there might be something done.

Senator CARAWAY. May I interrupt you for just one moment? Mr. Nyce has nothing to do with the Government?

Mr. BOOTH. No, no; purely outside the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; that was all outside of the Government.

Mr. BOOTH. That was just the social side, and my trying to assist. The brief of it was that Mr. Nyce and Senator WHEELER and myself—I guess all of us took a hand in it—dictated a telegram to my stenographer requesting Mr. Campbell to send in a list of the properties; and it did come, and I got hold of it and forwarded it to Mr. Nyce.

The CHAIRMAN. This list of properties you were sending for was sent for as the result of this conversation with reference to financing the land?

Mr. BOOTH. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. That had nothing to do with departmental matters.

Mr. BOOTH. No, sir.

Senator CARAWAY. It was not for you at all; it was for Mr. Nyce?

Mr. BOOTH. Sure; for Mr. Nyce and this other gentleman in New York I spoke of. It was not anything to do with the department at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Was Mr. WHEELER ever at the Interior Department after that about this matter that you recall?

Mr. BOOTH. Not to my knowledge, ever. Let me say, Senator, that Senator WHEELER left my office that evening late; it was very nearly 5 o'clock when we left with Mr. Nyce, and that evening or the next morning he and his wife left, as I recall, for Florida, and he told me he expected to come back and then was going to Europe; and the next I heard my wife got a letter from his wife saying that they had changd their plans and gone to Europe, and I did not see Mr. WHEELER until during the Shrine convention, when he returned here to Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. Did Mr. WHEELER, to your knowledge, at any time appear before you in your department presenting the question of assignments of leases or anything of that kind?

Mr. BOOTH. He did not.

The CHAIRMAN. Did he solicit your aid or your help with reference to these assignments or anything connected with them?

Mr. BOOTH. Do you mean these cases?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. BOOTH. No, sir.

It has been said that Mr. Booth afterwards entered into correspondence with Mr. Campbell. Certainly he did. It was entirely natural that he should, because Mr. Campbell wanted his affairs attended to. Mr. Booth was in the department. He wrote to him and it finally resulted in what—not in Mr. Booth going to Mr. WHEELER and consulting WHEELER and taking his advice or counseling with him as to what he should do, but it resulted in Mr. Booth suggesting the employment of an attorney here in Washington for the purpose of taking care of the business before the department. Upon the suggestion of Booth, Mr. Campbell went, not to his Senator for his influence or as his attorney, but, upon the suggestion of Mr. Booth, Mr. Feely, of the firm of Vogelsang, Brown, Cram & Feely, was employed. The entire business after that time was transacted between Mr. Feely and Mr. Beaulieu with reference to the matter.

I called attention yesterday to the testimony of Governor Spry. I shall not reread it to-day, but I undertake to say that if Mr. WHEELER had been seeking to exert his influence or in any way to control the action of those who had to pass upon these questions it would have been practically impossible for the Commissioner of the Land Office not to have known it. Certainly it would have been impracticable and practically impossible for anything to have been consummated without the officials of that office knowing it. Commissioner Spry states that Mr. WHEELER came into the office one day, and, after a few pleasantries, it was stated by Mr. Booth that Mr. WHEELER had a client in Montana who was in the oil business; and WHEELER immediately spoke up and said, "The only interest I have is that he gets a fair deal before the department." Commissioner Spry said, "That he will get, as does everybody else." Commissioner Spry states that Mr. WHEELER's conduct before the department was the same as that of other western Senators, that apparently of suggesting fair play for his clients.

Now, reflect, Mr. President, upon the exertion of influence upon the part of the United States Senator with the Land Office! The only two men he ever came in contact with testified definitely and positively that he at no time sought to present these matters to them or to ask their influence in regard to it.

There is only one theory upon which Mr. WHEELER can be held responsible; there is only one theory upon which he can be condemned; that is, in the first instance, that he is presumed to be guilty; in the second instance, that every disinterested witness who testifies directly to the contrary is a perjurer.

The Senator from South Dakota said yesterday that a United States Senator under charge was upon a level with the humblest citizen charged with crime, and that he must take his position upon a level with the most humble citizen. Certainly so; nobody contends otherwise. Mr. WHEELER, in my judgment, would be the last man to contend it. I certainly do not contend that because a man is elected to the Senate of the United States he shall be tried in a court of criminal justice upon any other theory or under any other rule than that which is applied even to the vagrant upon the street. All are equal, or should be, before the bar of public justice, and each man's guilt or innocence shall be tested by the same rules and adjudged under the same law. If, however, you were trying a vagrant from the street you would give him the benefit of the presumption of innocence until the evidence established his guilt. Not only that, but if you were trying a vagrant from the street you would not go to the man who was testifying on impression or from hearsay and take his testimony against that of a reputable citizen who was standing at the source of authority and testifying to direct facts. Try Mr. WHEELER upon the same basis that you would try anyone else; take the witnesses who are familiar with the facts, who testify and give legal and competent evidence; give him the presumption of innocence that accompanies every man charged; and there is not a scintilla of testimony here which shows that he ever entered into a contract for or received compensation for any services which he performed before the Land Office or the departments.

Now, Mr. President, let us take up some of the testimony upon which some persons seem to think, if nothing more, that there was probable cause for the grand jury finding this indictment. Of course, I am not going to discuss the question of whether or not there was probable cause. I think, Mr. President, that you could indict anybody if you would withhold from the grand jury all the evidence which was legal and competent and only introduce hearsay and impressions; and, while I am not interested in what the grand jury did, the fact stands out that not a single witness who knew of the making of the contract or who could give legal and competent evidence of it was called before the grand jury. There was probably not a member of the grand jury who had any knowledge whatever of this transaction as it is narrated before the committee by witnesses who are familiar with the facts. No one could criticize the grand jury, not being familiar with the rules of the competency of the evidence, for taking almost any view.

Now we come to the evidence upon which the grand jury is supposed to have acted. I first call attention to the testimony of Mr. Glosser. I read from page 79 of the hearings. The first time he saw Mr. WHEELER nothing took place of any moment. The chairman said:

Fix the date when you next saw him.

Mr. GLOSSER. I would have to refer to the records of lawsuits and things like that. I have not got them with me. Mr. WHEELER was interested in the lawsuits, and he was up at Great Falls at the time a lawsuit was tried there.

The CHAIRMAN. The next time that you saw him, if you can recall, was there anything said about his employment as an attorney?

Mr. GLOSSER. Oh, yes; he was there working on cases.

That is, the litigation in Montana.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; he was there working on cases. But was there any conversation—did you have any conversation with Mr. WHEELER—about his employment?

Mr. GLOSSER. You mean with reference to his direct employment by Campbell?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. GLOSSER. Only in so far as Campbell's business was affected. I would never discuss with the Senator his deal with Campbell or anything like that. I talked of Campbell's business to the Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the nature of the business you talked of to him?

Mr. GLOSSER. We had discussed at various times various lawsuits, all the land titles, and Campbell's business generally in the prospecting field, and the outcome there. All of Campbell's business was at various times discussed, or a good part of it.

Senator STERLING. With Mr. WHEELER?

The CHAIRMAN. With Mr. WHEELER?

Mr. GLOSSER. Yes; with Mr. WHEELER.

The CHAIRMAN. Was there anyone else present when you were discussing this business of Mr. Campbell with him?

Mr. GLOSSER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was present?

Mr. GLOSSER. There were several at different times. Mr. Rhea was present several times and Mr. Campbell was present, and at other times I think Mr. Harvey was there.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the nature of the discussion? How did you come to discuss it with him? What was the nature of the discussion?

Mr. GLOSSER. We discussed the matters because WHEELER was representing Mr. Campbell and I was representing Mr. Campbell, too; and it was natural that we should discuss the business Campbell had. We had that common point in view, of arriving at the same thing; a lot of business—that is, all of Campbell's business.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand; but is there any specific subject matter in the business which Mr. WHEELER had charge of that you could now recall that you talked over with him?

Mr. GLOSSER. Yes; Mr. Campbell had a good many lawsuits, and they were discussed in a general way; and one lawsuit in particular that Mr. WHEELER was handling at that time was discussed a good bit. Other times the land titles were discussed, and Government permits, and everything that Mr. Campbell had anything to do with was discussed.

The CHAIRMAN. Were you ever present when Mr. Campbell and Mr. WHEELER talked over the terms of his employment?

Mr. GLOSSER. You mean his compensation?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. GLOSSER. No; I was never present when they talked that over.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you ever talk over with Mr. WHEELER the scope of his employment—what he was employed to do?

Mr. GLOSSER. No; I never discussed that point with Mr. WHEELER. I took it for granted; to represent Mr. Campbell.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the nature of these lawsuits in which Mr. WHEELER was acting?

Mr. GLOSSER. The lawsuits?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. GLOSSER. They were suits that Mr. L. C. Stevenson and his associated companies had filed against Campbell individually and Campbell's companies.

The CHAIRMAN. They involved the question of having a receiver appointed over Mr. Campbell's property?

Mr. GLOSSER. Yes; that was one particular——

The CHAIRMAN. Did that include all of Mr. Campbell's property; did they ask for a receiver?

Mr. GLOSSER. No; they asked for a receiver of the Gordon Campbell Kevin Syndicate.

The CHAIRMAN. Was that valuable property?

Mr. GLOSSER. Some of his land was very valuable. It was thought so at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. It was very important litigation?

Mr. GLOSSER. Yes; it was.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. WHEELER was brought into that litigation?

Mr. GLOSSER. I think he had more or less to do with handling the legal end of the suit; yes.

The CHAIRMAN. It had been begun before he was employed?

Mr. GLOSSER. You mean the suit had been filed?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. President, that is the distinguishing feature of Mr. Glosser's testimony. He says that he never talked over with WHEELER the terms of the employment; he did not discuss it with Mr. Campbell in the presence of Mr. WHEELER; but that he was under the impression that Mr. WHEELER was representing Mr. Campbell. Whatever he might say in regard to it would be pure hearsay.

He made two affidavits, one in Montana and the other in Colorado; and there is a wide difference in the affidavits. He testifies that he had an impression that Mr. WHEELER was representing Mr. Campbell in these land permits; but it was only an impression, only an understanding, and not arrived at by reason of anything that he ever heard WHEELER say or any agreement that he ever heard WHEELER discuss with Mr. Campbell. It would not make any difference what the testimony of Glosser was; it could not be anything but hearsay testimony. It would certainly not be considered against the testimony of those who made the contract.

Mr. Glosser's testimony is tied to Mr. Rhea's testimony. I read into the RECORD yesterday, Mr. President, Mr. Rhea's testimony; I shall not read it again to-day; but I will recount it in connection with Mr. Glosser's testimony. Rhea says that at the same time Glosser had his talk with Campbell and Mr. WHEELER or in their presence he also was present. Rhea was there for the purpose of discussing primarily the question of a new trustee. The property was controlled by a board of trustees. Mr. WHEELER had insisted that Mrs. Campbell retire as trustee, and Mr. Rhea had been called on to take the place of Mrs. Campbell. This conversation took place between Mr. Glosser, Mr. Rhea, Mr. Campbell, and Mr. WHEELER, Mr. Campbell and Mr. Rhea doing the principal part of the talking. What was this conversation? It was to this effect: Mr. Campbell said to Mr. Rhea, who owned the Philip McGowan permit:

I think Mr. WHEELER will be able to straighten that out in Washington, and if he is able to straighten it out, we ought to give him a pretty good slice.

When asked what Mr. WHEELER said, he replied that he said nothing. If Mr. WHEELER heard the conversation, he paid no attention to it. But how did it terminate? Mr. Rhea immediately said to Mr. Campbell that that permit belonged to him; that he had his own attorney; that he did not desire to employ Mr. WHEELER; that he did not employ Mr. WHEELER; that Mr. WHEELER did not attend to the matter for him; that Mr. Beaulieu did attend to it for him; that he paid Mr. Beaulieu for it; and that Mr. WHEELER had nothing whatever to do with it.

There is the testimony of Mr. Glosser, which is hearsay, and of Mr. Rhea, who wholly exonerates Mr. WHEELER, against the testimony of Stout, the letters between WHEELER and Campbell, the testimony of Beaulieu, the testimony of Feely, the testimony of Campbell, of all of those who testified directly. They are putting into this record against Mr. WHEELER the hearsay of one witness and the absolute exoneration of Mr. WHEELER by the other witnesses, and cry "Guilty."

I repeat, Mr. President, that so far as the making of the contract is concerned or the receiving of compensation, there is no conflict of testimony in the record. Upon the issue upon which guilt or innocence depends, to wit, the making of the contract or the receiving of compensation, there is no conflict of evidence. And we might stop right here. For if there was no agreement nor no compensation had, then any and all things which WHEELER might or might not have done before the department were proper, legal and in line with what every western Senator does year after year.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] asks me if Mr. WHEELER testified. Mr. WHEELER did testify. I am not going to discuss his testimony, because I hardly have time to go over it. He testified to all the facts and details with reference to his employment, stated what he did, and took up the several telegrams and letters and discussed them; and as his testimony is here, and doubtless will be read by all Senators who wish to know the facts, I have not planned in my line of discussion to go into it. I think the cause complete without the Senator's statement.

Now, Mr. President, I want to refer briefly to the documentary evidence. I have already taken up the letters which passed between these parties.

In the first place, I call the attention of the Senate to the documentary evidence in this respect: If you take the documentary evidence and look it over, upon its face there is no suggestion whatever of any improper conduct. Mr. WHEELER sent no telegrams and wrote no letters that he would not have a perfect right to send and write and with perfect propriety could send and write if we are correct in our construction of the evidence up to this point, that there was no agreement for compensation and no compensation paid for the services. This documentary evidence of itself does not disclose any agreement to receive compensation nor does it disclose the receipt of any compensation. Therefore, in order that the documentary evidence shall have any pertinency at all, or any condemnatory effect, you must relate it back to a contract or an agreement to receive compensation or the receipt of compensation. What I wish to impress upon the Senate is that the documentary evidence itself does not reveal a contract nor does it reveal compensation nor does it reveal any improper conduct upon the part of the Senator from Montana. They read these telegrams and letters which are in and of themselves proper and then assume or presume an illegal contract, although all who keep within the contract disclose it was not illegal.

I could undoubtedly find in my files plenty of correspondence—letters and telegrams to constituents—with reference to having looked after a matter before the Land Department, saying that "the matter has been closed up," or that "I will present the matter," or that "I have presented the case as best I could to the Land Department," and so forth; and that is far more than appears upon the face of these telegrams or the face of these documentary evidences, unless, as I say, you go back to the proposition of an illegal contract and base them upon that proposition, and that I think I have disposed of.

This documentary evidence should be read in the light of another outstanding and undisputed fact, and that is that Mr. WHEELER undertook to find some one who would help Mr. Campbell finance his undertaking; and that is particularly true with reference to the letter of March 8, to which reference is made by the Senator from South Dakota and to which much reference has been made in the public prints, found at page 134.

This is a letter written by Mr. WHEELER to Mr. Campbell under date of March 8, 1923. In this letter he says—I will come to another paragraph in a few moments—

On the train coming down I met Mr. Chisom, and he seemed quite taken up with your proposition, but stated that he felt that a million dollars should be raised, and I thoroughly agreed with him. Within the next day or two I will also take the matter up with some other parties here in the city, whom I think will be interested.

I call attention to that because that runs all through the telegrams and letters and documentary evidence—that one of the things that Mr. WHEELER was trying to do, a thing which he had a perfect right to do, in which the Government was in no wise interested, purely a matter between individuals, a private affair, was to help Mr. Campbell finance his undertaking, to find some one who would be interested in it.

Bear in mind that these telegrams referred to were called out by information desired with reference to financing the property. This is not only shown by oral evidence but is revealed by the telegrams and letters themselves, a portion of one I have just read. It is quite clear that they did not relate to matters before the department in which the Government was interested, because Mr. WHEELER never at any time—never at any time, I repeat—returned to the department or communicated with the department after he sent these telegrams or wrote any of the letters. All these matters passed through the department through Beaulieu and Feely.

I now read a paragraph from the letter of March 8:

I wish that you would have your office send me a detailed report of the condition of your permit that we discussed with the Standard Oil Co. of California, in order that when I take it up with the Department of the Interior that I will be able to intelligently discuss the matter.

The letter refers to the conversation which Mr. WHEELER had with the attorney for the Standard Oil Co. It seems that some time previous to his coming to Washington, upon one occasion when he was in Mr. Campbell's office, Mr. Campbell introduced Mr. WHEELER to the attorney of the Standard Oil Co., and the attorney for the Standard Oil Co. was complaining, as the evidence discloses, that in some sale of land or some sale of interest of Mr. Campbell to the Standard Oil Co. there was a misunderstanding, a misapprehension, or a mistake with reference to certain property, the Standard Oil Co., as I understand, not getting the amount of property to which they thought they were entitled. So Mr. WHEELER, in discussing this matter with Mr. Campbell, calls his attention to the fact that he would like to have him send the information with reference to that, so that when he took it up before the Interior Department he would know how to discuss it intelligently.

This was a controversy between Mr. Campbell and the Standard Oil Co. It does not appear that the Government had any interest whatever in the matter. It had to be adjusted between these two parties; but, as a matter of fact, Mr. Campbell never replied to the telegram or the letter. The matter was not taken up by Mr. WHEELER. If it was ever adjusted, it was adjusted by other parties, and if it had come to Mr. WHEELER he could have very properly taken it up and adjusted it without being within the inhibition of the statute at all. It was, as I say, a matter between private individuals.

Certain telegrams were sent by Mr. WHEELER to Mr. Campbell, and other telegrams were returned by Mr. Campbell to Mr. WHEELER, calling for a description of the permits and the matters concerning which it was necessary for Mr. WHEELER to be informed, both with reference to the matter of financing the proposition and with reference to straightening out such matters as related to the Standard Oil controversy. As I said a moment ago, these telegrams do not disclose any improper conduct upon the part of Mr. WHEELER. They do not disclose any compensation expected or received, or any agreement; and if, as we contend, the contract related to the litigation in the State of Montana, there was not the slightest impropriety in anything that he did with reference to the presentation of these matters before the Land Department. There were also some letters passed between Mr. Booth and Campbell after WHEELER went to Europe, but they in no possible way involve Mr. WHEELER.

Now, Mr. President, unless some on desires to ask a question, I shall conclude very briefly.

I want to say, in conclusion, that all parties to this contract of employment place one construction upon it. All parties who were familiar with its making or its carrying out place one construction upon it. There is no discrepancy in the testimony upon that point, no differences of opinion or understanding as to what the contract was. Such men as Glosser got an impression that it covered the permit. It was only an impression. He did not hear the contract. Rhea got the same impression, perhaps. It was only an impression. He did not hear the contract. The parties who made the contract, who were familiar with its execution, who were in a position where they had to know what it was, are all agreed—and there is no difference of view—that it related alone to the litigation in the State of Montana.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator has very clearly stated what the evidence did disclose when it came down to the question of what the contract was and what it was not, and before the Senator takes his seat I call his attention to this fact:

If the testimony of Mr. Glosser and the testimony of Mr. Rhea, with reference to the conversations that were had in the presence of Senator WHEELER should be given full value, they would be nothing more nor less than admissions in the nature of confessions; and that evidence, if given its full weight and full effect, never can establish an offense. When you go back to what the contract was, as the able Senator has so very clearly shown, it discloses the entire absence of any offense. I merely wish to direct the Senator's attention to that fact. It is relied upon in the minority report as the first premise upon which the action of the grand jury is justified. It is in the nature of a mere admission, however; and even if it is taken at its full face value and given full force and full effect this inquiry relates to what the contract was, but you never could establish it by that admission if it were made and undenied, and if it were made under circumstances that called for an answer by Senator WHEELER. I should like to direct the Senator's attention to the further fact that it is of the very nature of all confession evidence or admission evidence that no one is called upon to make a reply to a charge unless the circumstances demand it; and in this case Mr. Rhea himself relieved Mr. WHEELER of the slightest necessity of making any reply to the suggestion made by Mr. Campbell, because he repudiated the suggestion himself and said that he had an attorney and would not enter into any such agreement as that.

Mr. BORAH. So far as Mr. Rhea's testimony is concerned, I think it is a very conclusive piece of evidence in this case in favor of Mr. WHEELER. There was a contention, apparently, upon the part of those who were engaged in presenting this matter against Mr. WHEELER, that Mr. WHEELER was mixed up with the Philip MacGowan permit. Now the owner of the permit, the holder of the permit, comes in and says, in effect: "Mr. WHEELER was not mixed up in it at all"; that he declined to employ Mr. WHEELER; that Mr. WHEELER was not employed; that he had his own attorney; that his own attorney attended to it; that Mr. WHEELER never attended to it, and he never sought his help to attend to it. If there had been any question at all about the MacGowan contract or permit, the owner of the contract or the owner of the permit absolutely exonerates Mr. WHEELER from having anything whatever to do with it.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, not from having anything to do with it, I should say, but rather from having Mr. WHEELER as an attorney on his part to do anything in his behalf.

Mr. BORAH. Well, what did Mr. WHEELER have to do with the Philip MacGowan contract?

Mr. STERLING. I think that was one of the first permits that Mr. WHEELER gave his attention to after he came to Washington, if I remember correctly.

Mr. BORAH. Why, if the Senator from South Dakota will refresh his memory, there can not be any doubt at all about the proposition. Mr. Beaulieu says that he himself attended to it. Mr. Rhea says that Mr. Beaulieu as his attorney did attend to it. There is no evidence in this case that Mr. WHEELER ever touched the Philip MacGowan permit.

Mr. STERLING. There were two permits, the Philip MacGowan permit and the Lincoln permit, that were in controversy here before the department at Washington, to which attention was being given.

Mr. BORAH. Yes, exactly; and Mr. Rhea established beyond peradventure that Mr. WHEELER had nothing whatever to do with the Philip MacGowan contract.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, is the indictment based upon the dealings in reference to the Philip MacGowan permit?

Mr. BORAH. That is one of them, I believe. All you need to do is to take the testimony of Mr. Feely and Mr. Beaulieu. They take up these permits separately and individually, deal with them, and dispose of them, and say that Mr. WHEELER had nothing to do with them. Then comes Mr. Rhea, the owner of the permit, and says that while Mr. Campbell suggested that he might well secure the services of Mr. WHEELER that Mr. Rhea informed him that he did not want them, and he did not employ him.

So I say that all parties to the contract establish one fact, that Mr. WHEELER was to attend to the litigation in the State courts of Montana. In addition to that, all parties who had to do with passing these permits through the Land Office, every single one of them, disinterested absolutely, exonerates Mr. WHEELER from having anything to do with it.

First, we have the contract established by the witnesses who made it. Secondly, we have the people who put the permits through the department establishing the fact that Mr. WHEELER was not connected with it—Mr. Beaulieu, who took the permits up and passed them on to Washington; Mr. Feely, who put them before the Land Office; Mr. Booth, who says that Mr. WHEELER never presented them to him; Mr. Spry, who says he searched the records, and that Mr. WHEELER nowhere appears as the representative of these permits.

I repeat, Mr. President, there is not even a conflict of testimony here, and I have left out entirely the statement of Senator WHEELER. His statement adds conclusiveness, but leaving that aside, I submit the evidence seems conclusive.

I repeat, that upon the testimony of disinterested witnesses, Mr. WHEELER is perfectly clean of any condemnation under the statute.

I have felt that so far as this particular presentation is concerned, it was not incumbent upon me to go further and to call attention to the evidence. There is another feature of it about which I feel very deeply, but I do not think that relates to the duty of the chairman of the committee. After I feel that I have fully discharged my duty as chairman and brought the matter before the Senate as chairman of the committee and given the facts as they appeared to the committee, the views which I may entertain and thereafter express as a Senator disconnected with the obligations of the committee will be a matter for which no one will be responsible but myself, and that will come up for later consideration. I feel now I am speaking for the committee and should confine myself to the matters upon which the committee reported.

FARM LOAN BOARD

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, it might appear that I had upon my desk a long written speech, but such is not the case. However, as I wish to be accurate respecting certain charges which I shall make, the first portion of my statement will be from written pages.

The names of four nominees for the Federal Farm Loan Board are now on the Executive Calendar awaiting action by the Senate.

The candidates were selected by President Harding, and hence have been in office as recess appointees. Two have served approximately 15 months and the other two about 12 months and 11 months, respectively.

In short, these nominees have been a majority of and in control of the Federal Farm Loan Board for nearly a year, and to all effects and purposes, considering the circumstances, since March 4, 1923.

In view of these facts, I desire to call the Senate's attention to this proposition: Whereas the record of any candidate in office may not constitute conclusive evidence as to his fitness to continue therein, yet when misconduct is alleged, as is the case in connection with these nominees, such record then becomes a most important factor in deciding upon further incumbency and hence should be scrutinized with the greatest of care and deliberation.

Therefore in passing upon these nominees it should be kept clearly in mind that the Senate is not dealing with recent appointments but with appointees who have records as members of the Farm Loan Board. As a consequence, the question to be decided in considering these nominations is not one of mere personality but as to whether the Senate is justified—yes; can the Senate afford to put its stamp of approval upon these records?

For several months past the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency has had under consideration the nominations in question. Various persons have appeared for and against confirmation, and evidence has been adduced.

From the facts developed at such hearings, Mr. President, the Farm Loan Board—and hence these nominees, constituting a majority of the membership thereof—stands convicted, in my judgment, of the following charges, namely:

(1) Violation of a cardinal principle of public policy enunciated in section 6 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States, prohibiting a legislative officer from enjoying the emoluments of any office created during his incumbency. Prior to July 1, 1923, Charles E. Lobdell was a member of the Farm Loan Board and served as farm loan commissioner or chairman of the board. In addition, he performed the duties of fiscal agent of the land-bank system, as had all farm loan commissioners preceding him. His salary was fixed by Congress at $10,000 per annum. On June 12, 1923, at a meeting of the members of the Farm Loan Board and the 12 land bank presidents, the farm loan commissioner was relieved of the duties of fiscal agent through the creation of a new office to be known as fiscal agent, at a salary of $25,000 per annum. Of course, this was done by and with the approval of the Farm Loan Board both as to the creation of the office and the fixing of the salary.

On the same day it was arranged that Mr. Lobdell should become the new fiscal agent, and he assumed his duties some 20 days later; that is, on the date that his resignation as member of the board and farm loan commissioner took effect. Thus a member of a quasi legislative board became the beneficiary of a new office, with an increase in salary of two and a half times, for the performance of but part of his previous duties—a result rendered possible only by the approval of the board in question, of which he happened to be the chairman—an act utterly against that recognized principle of public policy that no legislative officer may enjoy the emoluments of an office created during his incumbency.

The second charge is as follows:

(2) Unlawful procedure in approving of the creation of a new official for the farm-loan system to be known as fiscal agent.

The Federal Farm Loan Bureau is the creature of Congress, and nowhere has Congress delegated authority to change the system or create additional officers. As a matter of fact, Congress has specifically named the list of officials and each year in the Treasury appropriation bill fixes the salaries of all officials of and within the bureau.

(3) Looseness and gross carelessness in the conduct of the affairs of the board, indicating incompetency. As incredible as it may seem, during a period of about six years the board has received and disbursed $881,000,000 and yet has never provided itself with books of account, its records consisting merely of deposit slips, check stubs, and correspondence. It recently took the Treasury Department, employing 10 accountants and working double shift, from March 12 to about May 1, or nearly seven weeks, to compile a mere statement of receipts and expenditures from the Farm Board records. Moreover, the accountant in charge of this work testified that he would have been unable to make up the statement from the records afforded him without the aid of the memories of several of the employees of the board.

Mr. COPELAND. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOWELL. Certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator mean this year?

Mr. HOWELL. Yes; just recently made.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator said recently.

Mr. HOWELL. It was finished on the 1st day of May.

Mr. COPELAND. 1924?

Mr. HOWELL. Yes. The fourth specification is as follows:

(4) The unlawful withdrawal of funds from the United States Treasury and the disbursement of such funds without the authority of Congress. Between $65,000 and $70,000 have been drawn from the Treasury without authority and expended for various purposes. An unofficial opinion of the Comptroller General declares these funds to belong to miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury. Moreover, under date of May 13, 1923, the Undersecretary of the Treasury has called upon the farm loan commissioner for reimbursement of a part, if not all, of this money immediately.

(5) Looseness and neglect in the disbursement of funds. Public moneys have been expended without vouchers or receipts. Mr. Lobdell, the fiscal agent, admitted on the stand that he could not tell to whom money had been paid that had been secured by cashing certain checks. He also admitted that he had received certain sums of money for the expenditure of which he could account only in a general way.

(6) Misapplication of public funds. On September 22, 1922, Mr. Lobdell as farm loan commissioner opened an account with the Franklin National Bank by depositing $5,000 drawn from the Federal Treasury, part of the $65,000 to $70,000 referred to above. From that time down to February 16, 1924, further similar deposits in this bank had been made totaling more than $37,000. This account was drawn on from time to time by the farm loan commissioner, so that the balance remaining in the bank on the last day indicated—February 16, 1924—was $86.53. The deposit in this bank was treated as a sort of petty cash fund, except that the expenditures therefrom were made without vouchers or receipts. Presents to employees were made from this fund, likewise what must be considered either loans or advances to employees. In another case one of these nominees had succeeded in drawing some $2,000 from the Treasury on account of salary for which Congress had made no appropriation. As a consequence he was called upon to put it back—a simple matter—as Farm Loan Commissioner Lobdell gave him a check on this fund.

I have read these statements that I might be explicit, and each and every one of the statements is subject to proof.

I will now take up the first specification of the charges, "violation of a cardinal principle of public policy enunciated in section 6 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States, prohibiting a legislative officer from enjoying the emoluments of any office created during his incumbency."

It should be remembered that the farm loan commissioner from the time of the inception of the Farm Loan Bureau has acted as fiscal agent, and during that period has handled in the neighborhood of $800,000,000. Judge Lobdell for a number of years has been that fiscal agent. The testimony elicited before the Committee on Banking and Currency was to the effect that some time in the spring of 1922 it was rumored that Judge Lobdell had received a proposition of $25,000 a year, or such a matter, from some bank in the South. Subsequently in testimony by Judge Lobdell he stated that he did not receive any such proposition at that time. However, that rumor was abroad.

In August, 1922, there was a meeting of the 12 farm-loan presidents together with the Farm Loan Board here in Washington. At that meeting, at which Judge Lobdell was in attendance, a resolution was passed appointing a committee of three to wait upon Judge Lobdell and determine what arrangement might be made that he might be retained in the Farm Loan Bureau. It was testified that he talked with the committee at that time and agreed that he would take no steps toward separating himself from the bureau until he had again discussed the matter with that committee. Remember, this meeting took place in Washington. He was chairman of the board. He was present at that meeting. Therefore there is significance in his subsequent testimony respecting the matter:

Q. As far as the business conduct of the transaction is concerned, I have not questioned that.

Judge LOBDELL. I notice you did not.

Q. I did not refer to that.

Judge LOBDELL. Now, Senator, I think I should not be frank with you if I did not state that I did anticipate that if any proposition were to be made to me by these people—

Referring to this committee—

it would be along those lines. I have told you in perfect frankness all that took place, but I want to say more than that and tell you what I had in mind. It was in my own mind that if they had any proposition to make, if it was any service that I could render, it would be along the lines of general adviser and financial representative.

In other words, when the committee met with him that was the thought in his mind. He was en rapport with the committee. That was in their minds. The committee was continued. Congress met in December of 1922. Legislation was proposed by the Farm Loan Board, but nothing in that legislation concerned the creation of the office of fiscal agent at $25,000 a year, which, however, was evidently in the minds of the committee and of Judge Lobdell at the time that Congress was in session.

But what took place following that? On May 27 Judge Lobdell called a meeting of the presidents of the farm-loan banks to be held in Washington, at which he and the other members of the Farm Loan Board were present. On the 12th day of June the office of fiscal agent was created with the approval of the Farm Loan Board, at a salary of $25,000 a year, and on the same day that Judge Lobdell's board approved the creation of the office and the salary the arrangement was made that he should be the fiscal agent. As a consequence, when his resignation took effect 20 days later on the 1st day of July, he stepped out from the office of the farm-loan commissioner and fiscal agent of the farm-loan system at $10,000 a year and immediately became alone the fiscal agent at $25,000 a year, with an assistant, clerk, messenger, and an office of his own. These are the facts. They are substantiated by the testimony.

Now, as to the second specification, "unlawful procedure in approving of the creation of a new official for the farm-loan system to be known as fiscal agent." The Farm Loan Bureau is a creature of Congress. Congress has fixed the number and has designated the officials of the Farm Loan Bureau. There is no authority on the part of the Farm Loan Board to create an office or approve the creation of an office. That is the duty and the privilege of Congress alone. Moreover, it will be recalled that every year Congress makes an appropriation or provides for the expenses through an appropriation, the money to be collected from the land banks in proportion to their resources, and fixes the salaries that are to be paid out of that appropriation. Neither the Farm Loan Board nor the presidents of the banks had authority to create an office of this kind. It is provided in the law that the land-bank presidents shall constitute a bond committee, provided consolidated bonds are issued, but consolidated bonds have never been issued. Therefore there was no authority for the creation of this office. The authority to create the office was alone in Congress, and no effort was made by the Farm Loan Board to secure the creation of such an office, because it must have known and did know that Congress would not approve a salary of $25,000 a year when the rates of salaries now paid to public officials are such as these: Fifteen thousand dollars a year to the Chief Justice of the United States; $12,000 a year to the chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, in control of all the great Federal reserve system of the country; $12,000 a year to the Secretary of the Treasury; $12,000 a year to the Comptroller of the Currency, who has 8,000 national banks under his supervision.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. DIAL. May I ask the Senator where the salary of $25,000 comes from?

Mr. HOWELL. The salary has been paid out of the United States Treasury.

Mr. DIAL. Is it not paid by the separate banks? Does not each separate bank contribute $1,000 and does not each intermediate credit bank contribute $1,000 to the salary?

Mr. HOWELL. The 12 Federal banks up to the time of this accounting of which I speak have not contributed $1 to the payment of Judge Lobdell's salary. It has come from the United States Treasury through the misapplication of funds.

Mr. DIAL. I do not think that is a correct statement. However, I am not prepared to disprove it.

Mr. HOWELL. I will come to that shortly in the order in which I am proceeding.

Mr. DIAL. Very well.

Mr. HOWELL. The third specification is "looseness and gross carelessness in the conduct of the affairs of the board indicating incompetence." Hearings have taken place before the committee for some time. Finally my attention was challenged by certain statements made before the committee. I went to the office of the Federal Farm Loan Bureau and asked to see their books. I was informed that the Treasury Department kept the books. I then took the matter up with the Treasury Department, and the Treasury Department stated that they kept no books except the record of receipts and disbursements; that they were merely a bank for the Federal Farm Loan Board. Thereupon I discovered what to me was a most startling fact, the most remarkable thing of this character that has come to my attention—that this institution that had handled $881,000,000 had no books of account. When, in discussing the matter with the Treasury Department, I asked for the source of certain items, they informed me that the only way that the information could be obtained would be by an analysis of this account, which might take three weeks.

I waited a little while, and then I introduced a resolution asking the Secretary of the Treasury to forward the Senate a statement of the receipts and disbursements of the Farm Loan Board, including the source of the funds, and those to whom disbursements were made. Immediately a force was put to work upon the records of the Farm Loan Board, and I think it would be of much interest to the Senators here to consider some of the testimony. I am not going to read the testimony at length. I shall merely read excerpts from the testimony of Maj. Walter O. Woods, who is employed in the office of the Undersecretary of the Treasury, and who was placed in charge of the Treasury's analysis of the Federal Farm Loan Board's account as the result of Senate Resolution No. 190, of March 11, 1924:

Q. Were you directed to analyze some of the accounts of the Farm Loan Board?

Major WOODS. Yes, sir.

Q. What were those accounts?

Major WOODS. I assume the Senator refers to the resolution of the Senate. When the Senate resolution was passed the Undersecretary directed me to prepare a plan and submit to him for approval. * * *

Q. And you were directed to secure the information requested by that resolution?

Major WOODS. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you do in performing this service?

Major WOODS. I called on the Farm Loan Board and asked to see the data and consulted them as to what would be the proper procedure. * * *

Q. What was the total amount involved?

Major WOODS. About $881,000,000. I believe. * * *

Q. You visited the Farm Loan Board office, did you?

Major WOODS. Yes, sir.

Q. What records did you find in the Farm Loan Board office?

Major WOODS. I did not see any ledger account or register of those accounts. I got out their check books and their certificates of deposit. The first step was to get their file of certificates of deposits of money that had been spent in the Treasury, and to learn something of their procedure. * * *

Q. You were then afforded records of the Farm Loan Board as follows: Deposit slips?

Major WOODS. Yes, sir; I might say that I first received them from the Treasurer of the United States.

Q. This first form of record that you referred to is deposit slips?

Major WOODS. Yes.

Q. Then the check stubs?

Major WOODS. Yes, sir.

Q. And then correspondence?

Major WOODS. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any other data afforded you?

Major WOODS. Well, it was from correspondence that I learned these things and not from books. None were laid before me—no ledgers or registers of account. There was a young lady who had a wide acquaintance with these things in the Farm Loan Board, and I requested that she be sent to my office to assist me by explaining these items. She did so, and worked continuously, and we first determined what the items were and the amount of money involved.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask from what is the Senator from Nebraska reading?

Mr. HOWELL. If the Senator will pardon me, this is the testimony that was taken before the Committee on Banking and Currency respecting the confirmation of these four nominees.

Q. Now, what you were furnished by the Farm Loan Board or secured through them were deposit slips, check stubs, correspondence, and a young woman?

Major WOODS. Yes, sir; and, of course, the various officials were there. I discussed the subject with them and requested that they place the employees at our disposal in order to carry this out, and they responded to it.

Q. Suppose you had simply been afforded the deposit slips, the check stubs, and the correspondence, without any assistance, could you have analyzed those accounts?

Major WOODS. No, sir; I do not think I could.

Q. In other words, you had to have somebody with a memory who knew something about what had gone before?

Major WOODS. Oh, yes; I had to have somebody explain what those items were for. I could not have done it from data I had before me.

Q. In other words, they had no records from which you would have been able to make an analysis of this account without the aid of human memory?

Major WOODS. They did not provide me with books of account from which I could have audited the accounts; no. * * *

Q. In other words, then, the data that they used or you used were this correspondence?

Major WOODS. Yes, sir; I would say it was correspondence.

Q. Did you find any set of accounts with each individual bank?

Major WOODS. No, sir.

Q. No books of that kind were kept?

Major WOODS. I was not provided with them. If there were such, I did not know it. I was not informed of it, and did not see them.

Q. This statement that you have afforded is merely a cash statement, is it not?

Major WOODS. Yes, sir; it is not an audited account. * * *

Q. But it is merely a cash statement, is it not?

Major WOODS. Yes; that is what it is.

Q. How long did it take you to make this cash statement from these data?

Major WOODS. From the 12th of March until about the last of April; about six weeks.

Q. How many people did you have working at it?

Major WOODS. The same number were not working all the time. I should judge about 9 or 10.

Q. Did you work double shifts?

Major WOODS. Yes, sir.

Q. You did not inquire into the propriety of any of these payments, did you?

Major WOODS. No, sir; I did not.

Q. And that was not the nature of your audit?

Major WOODS. No, sir.

Q. Your work was simply to analyze and determine where the funds came from and where they went?

Major WOODS. Yes, sir; it was simply to comply with the Senate resolution. The Secretary of the Treasury was to provide the Senate with a statement of each item of receipt and disbursement of the Farm Loan Board from its inception down to the 1st of March.

I wish to say here, Mr. President, that in making up excerpts from this testimony I have omitted certain portions of the answers when they were deemed irrelevant.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question in that connection?

Mr. HOWELL. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. Did the committee investigating the method of accounting of the Farm Loan Board inquire into it of the members of the board? Were the members of the board asked about that?

Mr. HOWELL. No, sir. I asked that they be put on the stand, but it was decided to close the hearings, and I was not given an opportunity.

Mr. ROBINSON. Was any explanation given of the method of accounting which has been adopted and pursued by the board? Was that developed during the hearings before the committee?

Mr. HOWELL. A remarkable position was taken, for instance, by Farm Loan Commissioner Cooper that he did not see why, if the 12 banks were satisfied with what they got, it was necessary for the board to keep any accounts other than correspondence, check slips, and check stubs.

Mr. ROBINSON. That was what I wanted to direct my inquiry to, namely, whether or not the method of accounting adopted by the board in respect to its dealings with the several banks is an improved system; and if not, the reason for the failure to adopt an approved system of accounting. I want to know the facts about that. It seems to me to be pertinent, particularly in view of the statement the Senator is making.

Mr. HOWELL. I regret very much that after two months of time spent in working up the data the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency only allowed me to interrogate Major Woods and Judge Lobdell; in other words, they closed the hearing in one day after all this work had been done.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. HOWELL. I do.

Mr. GLASS. I will say in response to the inquiry of the Senator from Arkansas that the Banking and Currency Committee went fully, in detail, into these accounts, and satisfied itself thoroughly that there had not been a penny of misappropriation of public funds, and satisfied itself thoroughly that there had been full accounting for every penny. At the proper time, Mr. President——

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I allowed an interruption, as I supposed, for a question.

Mr. GLASS. No; I did not care to question the Senator; but the Senator is now speaking in open session about a matter that ought to be discussed in executive session, because it relates to the confirmation of nominees to the Federal Farm Loan Board. I have not sought to make the point of order which clearly lies against this sort of procedure, and do not intend to do it now, but I do not think the Senator ought to be permitted, or ought to be willing, to state in open session for the RECORD circumstances that do not, in my view, properly represent the case; and I was about to say that in executive session when these nominations shall be considered members of the committee will discuss, I think to the entire satisfaction of the Senate itself, all of these transactions and show to the satisfaction of the Senate itself that they were satisfactorily explained to the committee, and that the committee was unanimous in acquitting the members of the board of any misappropriation of funds or any irregularity in the transaction of business.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Virginia if it is not a fact that after the analysis of this account, covering $881,000,000, I was allowed but five hours to examine witnesses; and is it not a further fact that although I wrote a letter to the chairman of the committee and asked that the members of the Farm Loan Board be present, and that I be allowed to put them on the stand, the committee closed its hearings without giving me an opportunity to examine one of them?

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, as a matter of fact, I venture to say that no committee of any legislative body on the civilized globe ever exhibited the degree and amount of patience that the Banking and Currency Committee has exhibited with respect to this investigation. Since last January the committee has been called into session after session to consider the nominations of these members of the board, and I have sat there session after session and seen the time of the committee consumed in matters that had no earthly relation whatsoever to the fitness of the members of this board. It is true that after the time of the Farm Loan Board for six weeks had been occupied with a perfectly useless investigation of every item of expenditure of the system since its foundation in 1917 up to the present time, we declined to permit the Senator from Nebraska to repeat time after time item after item of identical nature. The committee declined to waste its time any further in that sort of childish transaction.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. HOWELL. I will yield in just a moment.

Mr. President, I wish to state that I was treated with great courtesy by the Committee on Banking and Currency. I had the feeling, however, during the whole period of the hearings that there was a reluctance to go into this matter. The hearings did begin in January, and they occupied 26 hours and 45 minutes—I think that was the period—down to the time when it was developed that the Farm Loan Board had no books and when I put in the Senate resolution. Furthermore, of that 26 hours and 45 minutes I occupied in questions 3 hours and 38 minutes, approximately. Finally certain facts were adduced that indicated that we should go to their records. I attended to the matter. The hearings ceased. For about two months we were investigating the records. The committee allowed one day for hearing afterwards, although involving $881,000,000 of items. They refused—I say "refused"—rather they did not, as I requested, call the members of the Farm Loan Board to the stand.

I will present for the RECORD a letter from me to the chairman of the committee, indicating the course that I believed this investigation should follow; but after this one day, when I developed the facts that I have read to you here, the committee closed the hearings, only allowing me to ask questions respecting less than 20 items, involving but $7,000; and I am surprised that the Senator should say that the committee went fully into this matter.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, the Senator is not surprised, because the Senator knows that I, as well as other members of the committee there, avowed our judgment that we had gone fully into the matter, and said to the Senator from Nebraska that if he would ask any new questions, if he would present any evidence that had not time and time again already been traversed, we were willing to sit there and hear him; but it was the same old thing over and over and over again, and we claimed to be men of ordinary intelligence. We do not think our time should be consumed in that sort of fashion—at least, we did not—and the committee unanimously reported these nominees.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. HOWELL. Just a moment, Mr. President. It would seem that there is a difference between the judgment of the senior Senator from Virginia and also that of the committee and my judgment respecting this matter.

Mr. GLASS. Yes; I gather that.

Mr. HOWELL. But, if I may be allowed, I will proceed to present to the Senate further facts that I believe will make it very clear that there was reason to go into these matters—questions which I had asked for the first time and, moreover, that we should have gone further.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, if the Senator presents here reasons why we should go further, we will go further. It was his misfortune, and not our fault, that he failed to present to us any reasons why we should go further.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, will the Senator be kind enough to tell us what was the result of the audit? Did the account balance, or not?

Mr. HOWELL. There was no audit. There was merely an analysis of the account. A mere statement that they had paid out so much money and had received so much money.

Mr. DIAL. Did that balance?

Mr. HOWELL. Why, yes; you can make an account balance very easily. The question is, how did it balance?

Mr. DIAL. I hope the Senator does not mean that they forced a balance?

Mr. HOWELL. No. I should like to make it very plain, Mr. President, that I am not charging dishonesty here; but I want to state this fact:

In response to my first request the Farm Loan Board sent me a statement, and I have it. It would not balance. I sent it back and asked them to balance the statement. It took them two weeks before they could balance that statement. That is the kind of statement that was afforded me.

Mr. DIAL. Then they did balance it to a cent, did they not?

Mr. HOWELL. No. Why, you can balance any account. If you mean that they had a set of double-entry books, and they balanced; no—not in any sense. When a man merely states to you, "I have received so much money and I have spent so much money," it is easy for him to have a balance.

Mr. DIAL. I understand, but I was trying to get at the audit of the account. When the auditor got through with his investigation, did the account balance?

Mr. HOWELL. This was merely a statement of receipts and expenditures, and this statement of receipts and expenditures does balance, but you can not tell why it balanced unless you go into the account.

Mr. DIAL. I just wanted to know whether it balanced.

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HOWELL. I do.

Mr. GOODING. I will ask the Senator from Nebraska if he thinks it would have been possible to make it balance and to give an intelligent report without the young lady who had such a remarkable memory?

Mr. HOWELL. In my opinion, absolutely not. It is one of the most remarkable state of affairs that I have ever encountered in a business institution. I was once appointed receiver for an institution, and that is what I found—check stubs, canceled checks, and correspondence. You know what that means in untangling a skein, and that is all this Farm Loan Board had.

Now, Mr. President, I will continue reading the Treasury accountant's testimony, because it goes right to the point:

Q. And that was not the nature of your audit?

As to the propriety of expenditures.

Major WOODS. No, sir.

Q. Your work was simply to analyze and determine where the funds came from and where they went?

Major WOODS. Yes, sir; it was simply to comply with the Senate resolution. The Secretary of the Treasury was to provide the Senate with a statement of each item of receipt and disbursement of the Farm Loan Board from its inception down to the 1st of March.

* * * * * * *

Q. In other words, if the Comptroller General had control over the disbursements of the Federal Farm Loan Board he would have compelled them to keep a set of books, would he not?

Major WOODS. Yes, sir; he would. He would compel them to state the account once a month or once a quarter, whichever would be the established rule, and the account would be kept on the so-called cash-book, which would be a statement of receipts and disbursements, and the transcript made from that would be submitted with the vouchers—canceled vouchers—to the Comptroller General for compensation.

* * * * * * *

That is the trouble with this institution—it has no auditor.

Q. Now, Major, as I understand it, it took about six weeks and 10 employees to prepare this analysis in the form of a statement.

Major WOODS. Yes, sir.

Q. Suppose that you were called upon to set up a set of books such as the Comptroller General required of a department subject to his audit; how long would it take to write up such a set of books, notwithstanding the work which you have done here?

Major WOODS. Well, that would involve an audit of the account looking into each item. To check it up, I should say it would take about two months. I do not know; somewhere about that, I should judge. It would depend somewhat upon the number of employees I had to assist me; but if I were to be told to do it I would take about three months. * * *

After all this work, covering nearly two months, it would take him three months more to set up a set of books so that you could find out the state of the account of one of these 12 banks during the time it has been dealing with this institution.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. HOWELL. I do.

Mr. GLASS. Does not the Senator know perfectly well that it could be found out in three seconds from one letter from the farm loan commissioner to any given bank? Let me ask the Senator further, with his permission, while I am on my feet, if he is reading all the testimony—the interruptions of members of the committee and the answers of this expert—with respect to the fitness of these nominees whose names we were considering?

Mr. HOWELL. No, sir; I stated here that I was not reading all the testimony. As I have stated, I am reading excerpts from the testimony, but what I am reading is what was testified to.

Mr. GLASS. Yes; but not all that was testified to. I suggest to the Senator that he is proceeding now in open session, contrary to the rules, and inferentially aspersing the integrity and honesty of men high in public life, and he is not giving all of the testimony as he proceeds.

Mr. HOWELL. I am not misrepresenting this testimony in any way. I am reading what was stated.

Mr. GLASS. But not all that was stated.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, more than half the time was taken up by the members of the committee interjecting their views respecting this matter.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the Senator does not mean to exaggerate, but nine-tenths of the time was taken up by the Senator himself.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to his colleague?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. So that silence may not be taken as concurrence in the view expressed by the Senator from Virginia about this being taken up in public session, if the condition as disclosed is the actual condition existing in this governmental commission, legislation by Congress will be required by Congress to rectify it. I have been thinking of the legislative part of it, rather than of nominations pending, and I supposed that my colleague was addressing himself to a resolution now pending in the Senate asking for an investigation with a view of getting legislation that would remedy what is claimed, at least, to be a lack of efficiency in governmental service. It is proper to discuss that phase of the question in public session, and it ought to be dicussed.

Mr. HOWELL. I have a resolution lying on the table to that effect, which I propose to ask to have taken up as soon as I finish this statement, and that is the reason why I am making the statement at this time.

Mr. GLASS. I understood the very premise of the Senator's remarks to be the statement that there are now pending these four nominations of members of the Federal Land Bank Board, and that what he is presenting he is presenting with the design of convincing the Senate that it should not confirm those nominees.

Mr. NORRIS. I did not hear that statement. I came in just after my colleague had begun, and as I knew that he had such a resolution, I have been going on the theory that he was discussing that resolution.

Mr. GLASS. I am not making any point, because at the proper time all of this matter will be discussed.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. I understood the Senator to remark a moment ago that it was his intention to call up a resolution which was on the table at the conclusion of his remarks. I might remind the Senator that there is now pending a motion, which is the business before the Senate, and I had hoped that we might dispose of that motion before taking a recess or adjourning to-night. Of course, in any event, it would not be possible, under parliamentary procedure, to consider the Senator's resolution while that motion is pending.

Mr. HOWELL. I propose to finish shortly, Mr. President. I continue the reading of Major Woods's testimony:

Senator HOWELL. Major, suppose a set of books had been provided in accord with the requirements in other departments by the Comptroller General—had been established at the outset by the Federal Land Bank Board, and this work had been done as he suggested, would it have required any additional help to what they now have?

Major WOODS. Let me see if I understand the question. Do you mean in response to the Senate resolution would it require anything additional?

Senator HOWELL. No; I mean suppose they had set up a set of books at the outset as is required by the Comptroller General where he has authority, and that the employees in that office had written up these books every day as each transaction occurred, would it have required any additional help in that office?

Major WOODS. I think not. I think they have the employees that are competent and capable to do it. Yes, sir; with what they have I think so.

Mr. DALE. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. DALE. I am very much interested not only in what the Senator from Nebraska is discussing, but I am particularly interested in what the Senator from New Jersey has in mind, and I would like to make this suggestion, if the Senator from Nebraska will permit. Why would it not be convenient for the Senator from Nebraska to let the Senator from New Jersey dispose of this matter? It will not take two minutes. Then the coast will be clear for the matter the Senator from Nebraska is discussing.

Mr. HOWELL. I do not want to yield the floor.

Mr. DALE. I do not suggest that the Senator yield the floor, but that he simply yield for the disposition of this matter. There will be no discussion of it—simply a vote—and then it will be ended and out of the way. It seems to me this matter will impede the Senator when he comes to his resolution, because the motion will have the right of way over his resolution.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. Supplementing what the Senator from Vermont has stated, I assure the Senator from Nebraska that a number of Senators wish to go to their offices, and if the motion can be put and settled by the Senate at this time, we will all appreciate it. Under the parliamentary procedure the Senator would be compelled to give up the floor pending action on the motion, but if I secure recognition by the Chair I will gladly yield, and will make no effort to press the bill to-night, so that the Senator can conclude his remarks.

Mr. HOWELL. What is the motion?

Mr. EDGE. The pending motion is that the Senate proceed to consider the Senate bill providing for a reclassification of the salaries of employees in the Postal Service, which has been pending for some time. It is the work of a joint committee of the two Houses after two months' rather laborious consideration. My object, as the chairman of the subcommittee, is simply to have it disposed of, and before the Senate, as the unfinished business.

Mr. STERLING. Then, if the motion prevails, the Senator from New Jersey will immediately ask to lay aside the bill?

Mr. EDGE. It will be laid aside, permitting the Senator to continue his debate. It is merely a matter of convenience.

Mr. HOWELL. Why could not this be taken up after I finish?

Mr. EDGE. Of course, the Senator has the floor, and it is entirely as the Senator elects. There are a number of Senators who are interested in having it disposed of who simply hope that it may be done at this time.

Mr. HOWELL. I do not wish to be discourteous, and if it would be of any advantage, I will yield. However, I do not wish to give up the floor and be deprived of the opportunity of going on this evening. If I can be assured that——

Mr. EDGE. I can only give the assurance of an individual Senator, that being the proponent of the motion, if I can be recognized, as I assume I will be, after the decision, I will yield the floor at once to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HOWELL. I think probably I had better go on.

Mr. President, I wish to call attention to this fact, that these four nominees have been a majority of the Federal Farm Loan Board for nearly one year; that this condition of affairs has continued during this period; not only were three of these nominees involved in the creation of the office of fiscal agent and the elevation of Judge Lobdell to that office, but that the four members had been in control of the Federal Farm Loan Board for about one year, and this is the condition of affairs in which we find the accounts of that institution.

In my opinion, they have simply been riding. They have taken things as they found them. They have gone on in this loose manner, and they would have continued in this loose manner if this investigation had not taken place.

As a consequence, they are not men who can be said to be familiar with this sort of work, and that is one of the failures of our governmental institutions, the placing of men in positions of this character who are unfamiliar with that sort of activity, and as a consequence, when things are going at loose ends, they do not recognize the fact, and it goes on until the crash comes or a scandal is exposed.

If they did know, self-preservation alone would have dictated an immediate change in their method of handling the affairs of the Farm Loan Board, because anyone who has been concerned in public affairs realizes that whereas one may be careless about his own affairs and the expenditure of his own money, when he is careless in public affairs he takes his reputation and sometimes even his liberty in his hands and risks them.

So the Senate is to be confronted with this question, in view of these facts, of these conditions: Can it afford to put its stamp of approval upon the methods which have been in practice right up to the present time by approving and confirming these four nominees?

The fourth specification is, "Unlawful withdrawal of funds from the United States Treasury and the disbursement of such funds without the authority of Congress." As a result of this analysis and the investigations of the committee it was developed that between $65,000 and $70,000 had accrued through the use of Government credit, and that the funds belong to the United States Treasury, and yet the Farm Loan Board drew out these funds and expended them for various purposes. As to the method by which these accruals took place: Suppose they sold $730,000 worth of Omaha land bank bonds to a customer in Chicago. They would send the bonds, with a draft attached, to Chicago with instructions to collect the face of the bonds, plus the accrued interest, up to, say, the 7th day of June. When the 7th day of June came the customer to whom the bonds had been sold would call for them and pay the face, plus the interest, to the 7th day of June. But, mark you, on the 5th day of June they would ask the Treasury to telegraph the Federal reserve bank in Omaha to pay to the Omaha land bank the face of the bonds, plus accrued interest, only to the 5th day of June. By this method, as the interest upon the bonds would amount to about $100 a day, the Treasury would collect through the Federal bank in Chicago $200 more than it was compelled to pay the Federal land bank in Omaha. Through these methods there accrued to the Treasury between $65,000 and $70,000 as determined by this analysis, and these funds have been drawn out of the Treasury by the farm loan commissioner and expended for various purposes. In an unofficial opinion from the Comptroller General we learned that he holds that those funds belong to the United States Treasury and should have been included in the miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury.

Mr. GLASS. May I ask the Senator if he does not know that in an official opinion by the Undersecretary of the Treasury, he contends that they do not belong to the United States Treasury?

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I know that on the 13th day of May last the Undersecretary of the Treasury wrote a letter to the farm loan commissioner, and I want to read the closing paragraph of that letter. Speaking of an adjustment of the Treasury's claim for these funds, he said:

> When I speak of a proper adjustment I appreciate that the argument can be made that all of the profits should inure to the Treasury, since its facilities made the profits possible. It is my understanding, therefore, that unless the adjustment is made promptly with the Treasury on the basis above outlined, my views shall not prejudice the Treasury's recovery of the full amount of the profits.

Mr. GLASS. Yes; but what are the views "above outlined"?

Mr. HOWELL. The views above outlined are that he is willing to compromise with them on a basis of 2 per cent for the use of the money.

Mr. GLASS. In other words, there is a controvery between the Treasury and the Farm Loan Board as to this particular fund, which the Senator should explain is merely constructive interest. It is what the bankers know as the "float," the constructive interest upon a certain sum of money for which credit is given at this end of the line and which is not collected at the other end of the line for several days. As a matter of fact, the Treasury was never out a dollar in the transaction.

Mr. HOWELL. I must take issue with the Senator from Virginia. Is it not a fact that the Treasury gets interest on its daily balances?

Mr. GLASS. Not altogether. It gets interest on its daily balances in recognized depositaries.

Mr. HOWELL. Is it not a fact that all these bonds were delivered through recognized depositaries?

Mr. GLASS. After all is said, the Senator is not charging any misappropriation of funds. He is pointing to the fact that the Treasury claims a part interest in the fund and that the Farm Loan Board denies that the Treasury has any interest in it, as I do not think it has, because the United States Government does not own these banks and the banks are not operated for the benefit of the United States Government. The Treasury puts its facilities at hand for the banks, and now it is proposing, through the Senator, to appropriate this constructive interest which accumulated through a system of that sort.

Mr. HOWELL. If I have the use of tremendous amounts of Government funds for two days, of course, I can make money. But consider, those bonds were sent to Chicago for delivery on the 7th day of June. On the 5th day of June the Farm Loan Board prevails upon the Government to pay the party who owns those bonds par value plus accrued interest. As a consequence the farm-loan bank in Omaha gets its money two days before the Government gets its money, and the Government money is used during the two days. Now, what was the situation? The Government had practically owned the bonds during that period of two days and was entitled to the interest accruing during those two days. It was the result of the Government paying that money two days before it is due, therefore the $200 interest belongs to the United States Treasury. There is no question about that.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, there is a very grave question about it. The Undersecretary himself says there is a question about it, and he wants to compromise it, so grave is the question about it.

Mr. HOWELL. But a few moments ago the Senator suggested that he had stated there was no claim for it.

Mr. GLASS. Was not that the testimony before the committee?

Mr. HOWELL. Absolutely, but I did not intend to bring it up. That letter was written the day before such testimony was given by Chairman Cooper of the board.

Mr. GLASS. I was speaking to the testimony and I have not yet seen the letter from which the Senator quotes.

Mr. HOWELL. I have it here and shall be glad to let the Senator have it. The letter was written on Tuesday, mailed to the Farm Loan Board on that day, and on Wednesday afternoon Governor Cooper made the statement that the Undersecretary of the Treasury had told him that this money did not belong to the United States Treasury. I was amazed at the statement and immediately called up the Treasury. I say immediately, but it was next morning. He said he had made no such statement—he had written Governor Cooper a letter. I said, "Will you send me a copy of that letter?" I have the copy here as a part of this evidence.

Mr. FLETCHER. Who wrote the letter?

Mr. HOWELL. The Undersecretary of the Treasury.

Mr. FLETCHER. What is his name?

Mr. HOWELL. His name is Winston.

Furthermore, I wish to state that the whole question came up last July. It was discussed and the Undersecretary informed the Farm Loan Board that they would no longer pay money in advance of the date of receipt, and there have been no such accruals since July last year. And yet, although these facts were known to the members of the Farm Loan Board, to the four nominees under consideration, they have continued to draw out that money and have spent in the neighborhood of $30,000 since that time. Their attention was challenged to what they were doing, but the trouble is that the Farm Loan Board has gotten in the habit of doing just exactly as it pleases. It has felt that it can run on as it sees fit. What it needs is control by some auditing authority.

Mr. President, I wonder, in view of these facts, inasmuch as the four nominees have been in control of the board for about one year, if the Senate of the United States can afford to put its stamp of approval upon these transactions by approving these nominations?

I come now to the fifth specification, "Looseness and neglect in the disbursement of funds." Public moneys having been expended without vouchers or receipts.

Take, for instance, Mr. President, the $65,000 or $70,000, heretofore referred to, that have been withdrawn from the Treasury without authority and expended without taking a voucher or a receipt. I have never before known of such a procedure in connection with a public enterprise.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. DIAL. But the expenditure was a proper one, as I understand the Senator?

Mr. HOWELL. Indeed, I am going into that later, I will say to the Senator from South Carolina. First, I am calling attention to the fact that they have expended funds for which they have no vouchers; they can not tell for what the money was expended except as disclosed by stubs of check books and canceled checks; that is as far as they can go.

Take, for instance, Mr. President, the first question that I asked Judge Lobdell before the Committee on Banking and Currency last Wednesday:

> Q. Judge Lobdell, who established that Franklin National Bank account?

I wish to state in this connection that for some time they drew on the Treasury for various amounts on the $65,000 or $70,000 of which I have spoken until in September, 1922, when they seemed to think it would be handier to have a private bank account in the name of the farm loan commissioner, and at that time they transferred to the Franklin National Bank $5,000, and from that time on and down until the 16th day of February, 1923, they had transferred some $37,000 to that account and expended it.

> Q. Judge Lobdell, who established that Franklin National Bank account?
> Judge LOBDELL. It was established pursuant to a conference of the board when I was farm loan commissioner in the name of the Farm Loan Board and subject to the check of the commissioner or the acting or deputy commissioner.
> Q. That was while you were commissioner?
> Judge LOBDELL. Yes, sir.
> Q. Judge, is that a copy of the statement that was submitted to this committee as representing receipts and expenditures in connection with the Franklin National Bank account [handing paper to Judge Lobdell]?
> Judge LOBDELL. Senator, I could not tell at a glance; but a copy of the Franklin account down to a given date was read into the record here, and that record is correct.
> Q. That is a copy.
> Judge LOBDELL. I assume so.
> Q. I just want to identify it; that was all. Judge, I will ask you to refer to your vouchers respecting a check issued on that bank on the 6th day of October, 1922, amounting to $563.

I might interpolate here that this $563 was stated in one item in the account rendered, whereas it was represented by two checks, one for $545 and the other for $18.

> Judge LOBDELL. That was for $545; Elsie Wilkinson.
> Senator HOWELL. $563.
> Senator PEPPER. $545.
> Judge LOBDELL. There is $545 on the stub book.
> Q. Very well. Who was that paid to, Judge?

Judge LOBDELL. The notation here would indicate that.

Senator HOWELL. Who was the check made payable to?

Judge LOBDELL. Elsie Wilkinson.

Q. Elsie Wilkinson. What was that for?

Judge LOBDELL. The notation here is, "Expenses incidental to bond sale." I could not give you the detailed items that enter into that. It would be some bonuses to employees for overtime, extra work, and other incidental expenditures of a sale that had just taken place.

Q. Who paid the expenses?

Judge LOBDELL. Miss Wilkinson disbursed them upon memoranda furnished by myself.

Q. Who were they disbursed to?

Judge LOBDELL. To employees.

Q. Will you give me the names, please?

Judge LOBDELL. I can not without—I do not know that I could at all. These memoranda were made at the time and were there until the account was audited by the auditing committee of the land bank presidents, which audited the accounts on the occasion of each meeting, and were not in the form of permanent vouchers.

Q. Do you mean to say that a check for $500, and how much have you got it there, $45?

Judge LOBDELL. $45.

Q. Do you mean to say that a check for $545 was drawn on this account payable to Miss Wilkinson and that you do not know what it was expended for?

Judge LOBDELL. All I can say is that I do not now know what it was expended for, but I did then, and it was properly expended.

Q. And you have no records whatever as to who got that money?

Judge LOBDELL. I would not say that. I could not say that I have had at any time. I can not tell you now, but I know that the record was only on memoranda to collect and disburse so much money to these various people.

Q. I asked you to bring over any data you had in reference to this matter?

Judge LOBDELL. You never asked me to bring anything.

Q. Can you give us something in reference to the expenditure of that money?

Judge LOBDELL. You did not ask me to bring anything.

Q. Well, I called you up over the telephone.

Judge LOBDELL. And I doubt very much if there could be found in the office of the Farm Loan Board now that memorandum which I then made.

Q. Very well. So you can not tell us who got that money?

Judge LOBDELL. No, sir; I can not.

This was the second Franklin National Bank item; $563 was the amount of these two checks. There is nothing, Judge Lobdell states, in the office of the Farm Loan Board that indicates who got that money; but the money was drawn and paid to a young woman in the office, and she expended it. Judge Lobdell says that he can not tell to whom she gave it. Mr. President, that is an example of the way they have been conducting the affairs of the Farm Loan Board.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. HOWELL. I do.

Mr. GLASS. I wonder if the Senator thinks that is exactly a fair statement of that item and that Judge Lobdell did not know, and the Farm Loan Board did not know, what that $563 was drawn for and what disposition was made of it. Is not this the explicit fact, as testified to there, that periodically the Farm Loan Board, without any statutory obligation upon it but as a matter of service to the system, undertook to sell for the 12 land banks a certain aggregate amount of bonds the proceeds of which would thereafter be distributed to the 12 banks; that periodically when that should happen it was necessary to require the regular force of the Farm Loan Board to work over hours, night and day, because the board had no other facilities for the transaction of this particular business; that these regular employees for a period of 10 days or more would work overtime, night and day; that the chief clerk would keep a memorandum of the persons that were working over hours, night and day, and of the amount of overtime to which they were entitled; and that at the end of the period of bond sales a check would issue to the chief clerk, in the aggregate, and that the chief clerk would pay to the various employees their overtime? So that there was no question and never has been and could not be as to what the money was drawn for and as to the disposition of the money. The fact that Judge Lobdell several years afterwards can not state the names of the persons and in detail the amount that each person received is not of any significance.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, it may be that the distinguished Senator from Virginia thinks that it is perfectly proper to draw funds from the Public Treasury and disburse them and not take a receipt or a voucher and furthermore be utterly unable to tell who got the money.

Mr. GLASS. Well, the Senator from Virginia does not think that that is a fair statement of the case; that is all.

Mr. HOWELL. That is exactly what took place. Judge Lobdell says he can not tell to whom that money went. But, Mr. President, let me continue further with the testimony of Judge Lobdell respecting this item of $563:

Q. No, sir; I went there for this purpose, to go into this matter. Now, Judge Lobdell, will you kindly tell this committee how much of that money you got?

Judge LOBDELL. Personally not one cent. Now, it is very possible that in the course of the bond sales I had advanced money to pay for meals for somebody and was reimbursed. I can not answer for that. But for my own account, not one penny ever.

Q. Is it not a fact that you received $55 of that amount?

Judge LOBDELL. Very probably so, sir, as I have stated.

Q. Do you know what you used that money for?

Judge LOBDELL. If I received it, I had advanced it to Mr. Field, who has charge of the feeding operations, for the purpose of securing meals. Occasionally it became necessary when we had to ship bonds out after the Treasury closed or on Sunday to hire taxicabs and guards to take them to the down-town office. We paid those expenses. I know at different times I did advance money.

Q. Who would you advance it to?

Judge LOBDELL. Ordinarily to O. J. Field.

Q. I asked you to whom you advanced this $55.

Judge LOBDELL. I do not remember that I got money in that connection. It would be beyond peradventure to whom I did advance it.

Q. Didn't you state to me that you did receive that amount of money?

Judge LOBDELL. Probably so. When I wrote the memorandum it probably was included in the memorandum.

Q. And you can not state what it was used for?

Judge LOBDELL. I say it was advanced for somebody who was paying these expenses and that accrued.

Q. Is that as far as you can go in that explanation?

Judge LOBDELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. President, I think I have made it plain in what I have said before that I am not here charging dishonesty. I have only touched the edge of these affairs; but I am here to say that a public official who conducts in this manner the affairs under his trusteeship is subject to the severest criticism. I am not going to tire the Senate with other matters that I went into. There were hundreds of items, and the committee allowed me to go into less than 20, on just one afternoon. Why, the very next item that I had on my list was $1,000 paid to Judge Lobdell for personal expenses. I only had the opportunity, in these transactions involving $881,000,000, of asking him about $7,000 of items.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator has disclosed the fact that out of a total expenditure of $881,000,000, covering a period of nearly eight years, he wanted the committee to sit there and hear him discuss with Judge Lobdell questions as to whose meal ticket he paid when those bond transactions were in progress.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, when a public official draws money from the Treasury he at least owes it to the public to secure a receipt or a voucher, and when you assume the position that it is unnecessary for him to do so you have taken a tremendously dangerous position in respect to public affairs.

I have been a public official for years. I would not think of expending a dollar without taking a receipt or a voucher. In fact, although I managed the gas, water, and ice plants in Omaha for years, and our income was three and a half million dollars, I would not expend a dollar in actual money. Everything had to be paid by check, with a requisition and voucher. It is the only safe way to proceed.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the logic of the Senator's position is that because Judge Lobdell did not take a receipt for these meal tickets, therefore these four gentlemen are not fit to be confirmed as members of the Federal Land Bank Board.

Mr. HOWELL. Did he take receipts for any of these payments?

Mr. GLASS. I have stated to the Senate just exactly what the process was. The stubs of the checks showed just the aggregate amount that was paid on these occasions. Judge Lobdell stated to the entire satisfaction of the Banking and Currency Committee just exactly what these comparatively trivial amounts were used for—paying regular employees for overtime work, night work, at these occasional periods of excessive activity—and Judge Lobdell, as to his own account, testified to the committee that it frequently occurred that he would advance a trivial sum out of his own pocket to pay for the meals of these employees after bank hours. I think Judge Lobdell manifested extraordinary self-control and patience when a Senator was pounding the desk and asking him, "What did you do with that $4.66 three years ago?"

Mr. HOWELL. When I asked the judge such questions, he said: "I did not take a receipt for it and I can not tell you what I did with it, or whether it is in my pocket or not." That is the fact. Judge Lobdell admitted that there had been drawn from that account $37,000, and that they had no vouchers or receipts; and this $565 was the second item on the Franklin National Bank account, and the committee only allowed me to go into 20 items all told, and then said, at the close of the afternoon, "We do not think it is a good idea to go on," and closed the hearings.

Mr. GLASS. Were they not 19 repetitions of the first item? Were they not of the same nature exactly?

Mr. HOWELL. I wonder if the Senator thinks that because you find that one item has been treated improperly it is useless to go into other similar items that have been also treated improperly?

Mr. GLASS. Oh, no. What I did think—and the committee agreed with me—was that when we found that one item was treated properly, that there was no imputation whatsoever, implicitly or otherwise, of wrongdoing, we did not want to sit there all day long, day after day, listening to repetition of the same sort of testimony.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, let me make it clear to the Senate again that after spending nearly two months going into these accounts this committee generously gave me one day to present the facts, and that I had the opportunity granted me of asking questions respecting not to exceed 20 items, involving not more than $7,000 of these tremendous transactions. Then the committee considered that they had had enough.

Mr. GLASS. Just let the Senate for a moment consider this aspect of the case: There we were, called together textually to pass upon the fitness of four nominees as members of the Federal Land Bank Board, and the Senator was traversing thousands upon thousands of cash items that were entered from five to seven years before these gentlemen were nominated to the Senate for positions on this board. If the Senator will tell me what a cash item entered as far back as 1917 had to do with the fitness for membership on this Land Bank Board of four men appointed in 1923, perhaps he may induce me to agree with him.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, the trouble is this: These were not new appointees. These men had served for about a year, and these men promoted Judge Lobdell from a position of $10,000 a year to one of $25,000 a year.

Mr. GLASS. And the Senator thinks that because these four men who had served a year could not tell what became of a meal ticket seven years theretofore they are unfit to be members of that board.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I hold in my hand the statement of the Franklin Bank account. That account alone comprises 212 items. I was allowed to question Judge Lobdell alone—not the farm-loan commissioner or another member of the board—respecting these items. He was the only man; and when we got down to July 1, 1923, Judge Lobdell said: "Well, now, Senator, I can not tell you anything about what occurred after that time, because you know I was not then farm-loan commissioner." Did they put on the stand Governor Cooper, as I had asked? No; they went into executive session and then adjourned. They refused to go further. Did they put these nominees on the stand? No; the committee did not allow me to ask any one of them a question.

Mr. GLASS. I wonder if the Senator thinks he is just accurate there; that we would not go further. Read the record and see what it shows. It shows that I made the motion that unless the Senator had evidence of a new nature to present that we close the hearings. He did not ask that Governor Cooper or any member of the board be put on. He did not venture to say that he had anything of a different nature to prove than that which he had already presented. Had he done that the committee was perfectly willing to go on. That was the very prelude to the motion I made.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, at the opening of this the last hearing, May 14, 1924, I presented a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency. That letter indicated just whom I wanted to call to the stand, but when the distinguished Senator from Virginia, a member of that committee, proposed to close the hearing, I called the committee's attention again to the letter, and I think you will find that included the last word I said; that I wanted to go on, yet the Senator from Virginia says I had nothing further to show.

Mr. GLASS. I do not say the Senator had nothing further to show.

Mr. HOWELL. That is true. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. GLASS. What I distinctly did say was that if the Senator had anything of a different nature to show, I was willing to sit there and hear him.

Mr. HOWELL. But when I had asked that the other members of the Farm Loan Board be put on the stand, does not that indicate that I must have had something else to show?

Mr. GLASS. That letter had gone in at the first moments of the hearing.

Mr. HOWELL. No; I beg the Senator's pardon. I just offered it the other day when you started—May 14.

Mr. GLASS. As a matter of fact, you mailed it to us. I had a copy of it before the meeting was opened.

Mr. HOWELL. I sent it to the chairman, but as we proceeded I called the attention of the committee to that letter, and asked to have the witnesses there. When the committee decided not to allow me to go any further into the matter, I again called their attention to that letter and indicated my desire to proceed. They stopped me. They were reluctant to proceed. In fact, closed the hearings.

Mr. GLASS. That, Mr. President, I feel compelled to deny. The committee did not stop the Senator. The committee offered the Senator every opportunity in the world to present any new evidence, but the committee was not willing to sit there interminably and listen to a repetition of the meal-ticket proposition, and things of that description.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I regret very much that the testimony taken at these hearings has not yet been printed, but I think my memory is quite accurate with reference to the last thing I said at that hearing. I did insist that I should have the privilege of going on and calling these witnesses to the stand, and the committee refused—I state this now—to go on with that hearing.

Mr. GLASS. If the Senator will recall, his recollection during the hearing was not particularly accurate, because he expressed a willingness to go on the stand and testify under oath that the signature of a young man to a check was affixed within a few days theretofore, since he had originally seen that check, but the young man himself went on the stand and testified that he had indorsed that check months and months ago, perhaps years ago. The Senator will remember that, will he not?

Mr. HOWELL. The Senator is quite right, Mr. President——

Mr. GLASS. If I may intervene right here——

Mr. HOWELL. May I continue just a moment. I have given a great deal of attention to this matter. I could not get at all the records, but there were some few records that I examined. My memory was that certain checks were not in the condition in which they were when I had examined them before, I expressed my doubts at the time. Subsequently, however, I would not say positively, and if the Senator will remember, I said I would not then go any further respecting the checks, that "I will make no statement at this time." I became satisfied afterwards that I was mistaken.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator just said this, in terms; he took the check and examined it, and then he threw it down on the table and said, "I would go on the stand and take oath that that second signature was not on that check when I examined it several days ago."

I had no conception that these matters were to be discussed in the open Senate here. Evidently no other members of the committee had, because no other member of the committee is here. But I ask the Senator to let me insert in the RECORD, or if the Senator will, to insert in the RECORD, the letter of the Undersecretary of the Treasury from which he was willing to read only the last sentence a while ago with respect to this accumulated float.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I beg the Senator's pardon. I do not think the Senator wishes to place me in an improper light. I have had a great deal of territory to cover here, and I did not wish to read the entire letter. I read the latter portion of that letter.

Mr. GLASS. But that did not indicate the true import of the letter. The letter itself sustains my position absolutely, that the Treasury gave its facilities to the Federal Farm Loan Board for these bond transactions. There was no statute that compelled the Treasury to do it. There was nothing to authorize the Farm Loan Board to demand that the Treasury should do it, but the Treasury gave its facilities to the Farm Loan Board. And now, after this float has accumulated, there is a controversy as to the ownership of a part of that fund. I would not think the Senator could have any objection whatsoever to printing in the RECORD at this point the letter of the Undersecretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HOWELL. Absolutely not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE UNDERSECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, May 13, 1924.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR COOPER: Major Woods, who made an analysis of the account of the farm-loan commissioner for the Treasury, which account has been submitted pursuant to a Senate resolution to the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate, is now preparing for me a statement showing the actual amount of credit given by the Treasury from time to time to the farm-loan commissioner in connection with the sale of farm-loan bonds and intermediate-credit debentures. The original practice of the Treasury was to give the farm-loan commissioner immediate credit when he deposited with the Treasurer of the United States a draft drawn on a purchaser of farm-loan bonds. In the usual course the draft was presented a day or so later and carried with it necessarily the extra day or days' interest on the farm-loan bonds which were being sold. This additional interest increased the farm-loan commissioner's account and was received only because of the immediate credit given by the Treasury. Since July, 1923, this practice of giving immediate credit has been changed, and at present the Treasury's relations with the farm-loan commissioner provide that the credit shall be available only when the draft representing the sale of the bonds is paid, so that since July none of this accretion has come into the accounts of the farm-loan commissioner.

The farm-loan bonds sold carried interest at from 4¼ per cent to 4½ per cent per annum, and the accretions to the farm-loan commissioner's funds by reason of the credit given by the Treasury were, therefore, at this rate. The farm-loan bonds, however, at no time belonged to the Treasury, and, in my opinion, the rate of interest that these bonds bore is immaterial. Had the Treasury not given you the immediate credit you could probably have arranged similar credit with commercial banks. The question between the Treasury and you is therefore confined solely to the value of this immediate credit facility which could not exceed what you could have had a similar facility elsewhere for, and in my opinion should not be lower than what the Treasury would have received on bank balances on deposit with commercial banks. Since the Farm Loan Board is one of the Government facilities, the Treasury should make no profit out of transactions between the Treasury and the farm-loan commissioner.

I therefore feel that the proper adjustment between the Treasury and the farm-loan commissioner during the period that immediate credit was given should be interest on the amount of credit extended at the rate of 2 per cent, being the same rate paid on Government deposits by commercial banks, the relation in respect to this immediate credit between the farm-loan commissioner and the Treasury being considered that of banker and customer. When I speak of a proper adjustment I appreciate that the argument can be made that all of the profit should inure to the Treasury, since its facilities made the profit possible. It is my understanding, therefore, that unless the adjustment is made promptly with the Treasury on the basis above outlined, my views shall not prejudice the Treasury's recovery of the full amount of the profit.

Very truly yours,

GARRARD B. WINSTON,
Undersecretary of the Treasury.

Hon. R. A. COOPER,
Farm Loan Commissioner,
Federal Farm Loan Board, Washington, D. C.

Mr. HOWELL. I wish to call the Senator's attention to this fact, that whereas the distinguished Senator from Virginia suggests that this credit was given to the Farm Loan Board, yet the Treasury is now trying to get back part of it, at least.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, yes; but the Undersecretary states precisely there that the facility could have been gotten by the Farm Loan Board, very likely, from the banks of the country, and it was not doing it any very great service to tender the facilities of the Treasury to a newly established credit facility for the relief of the farmers of the country. Because a float has accumulated, somebody has suggested to somebody to put in a claim for a part of the money. I do not think they are entitled to a dollar of it.

During the delivery of Mr. HOWELL's speech,

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6357) for the reorganization and improvement of the foreign service of the United States, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6207) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to transfer to the jurisdiction of the Department of Justice all that portion of the Fort Leavenworth Military Reservation which lies in the State of Missouri, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5325) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in any claims which the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes; requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. SNYDER, Mr. DALLINGER, and Mr. HASTINGS were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 21 to the bill (H. R. 8350) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes; receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 22 and 23 to the said bill, and concurred therein, each with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ORDER FOR THURSDAY EVENING ON THE CALENDAR

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Nebraska to yield in order to allow me to present a request for unanimous consent and let whatever debate occurs under it be placed either before or after the Senator's remarks.

Mr. HOWELL. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business on Thursday afternoon next it shall take a recess until 8 o'clock in the evening and that at the evening session, between 8 and 11 o'clock, the calendar shall be taken up under Rule VIII, beginning where we left off at the last call of the calendar, which was, as I recall, Order of Business 464.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MOSES. And unobjected bills only to be considered.

Mr. SMOOT. Just a moment. The Senator left out the reference to unobjected bills.

Mr. CURTIS. To consider only unobjected bills on the calendar.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to say to the Senator that the Committee on Agriculture is meeting at night now, as well as during the day, and I want it understood that there will be no other business transacted.

Mr. CURTIS. I confine my request to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator whether we are likely to have an opportunity for the consideration of bills on the calendar to which there may be objection or which, probably, not being objected to, may require longer debate than can be had under the five-minute rule.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, it was my intention, if we could get through the calendar of unobjected bills on next Thursday night—and I think we can do that—then to ask for an adjournment each evening for several days so that there may be two hours in the morning to take up bills on motion.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to say to the Senator and to the Senate that there are two or three bills on the calendar that are quite important. I do not anticipate that there will be objection to them, or that it will be desired to discuss them to any considerable extent, although as to one of them a Senator, while not opposing the bill, wishes to take about a half hour to discuss it. Those bills are of considerable importance, however, and I want to say that I want them considered and acted upon before this session is over.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I will even add, further, that if these unobjected bills are completed I should be willing to ask for a night session to consider bills on the calendar when the committees get through holding their night sessions.

Mr. SMOOT. That does not apply, however, to Thursday?

Mr. CURTIS. No; Thursday night, unobjected bills under the five-minute rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I want to say just a word further. I do not want to coerce anybody, or anything like that; but there are, as I say, two or three of these bills on the calendar that I am going to insist so far as I can on having disposed of before the Senate quits for the summer.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I want to make this announcement: The Committee on Interstate Commerce has reported a bill which forbids the collection of what is known as the Pullman surcharge. There have been introduced in the body at the other end of the Capitol some 80 or 90 bills, and there have been introduced in this body some 10 or 15 bills to the same effect. I desire to move at the first opportunity that the Senate proceed to the consideration of this bill if objection is made when it is reached on the calendar under the order that the Senator from Kansas suggests. I have no objection to the request for Thursday evening submitted by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. This is only unobjected bills.

Mr. ROBINSON. Only unobjected bills.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will state frankly that one of the two bills I have in mind is the bill amending a couple of sections of the shipping act, to which I anticipate there will be really no objection, and which I have not had any time with yet. We have not reached it. The other bill is a very important measure relating to the fisheries in Alaska. That bill ought to be passed very, very soon. I shall not object to this request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the agreement is entered into.

The agreement was reduced to writing, as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business on Thursday afternoon, May 22, 1924, it take a recess until 8 p. m.; that at the evening session the Senate shall consider only unobjected bills on the calendar under Rule VIII, and at not later than 11 p. m. take a recess or adjourn until Friday.

ORDER FOR RECESS

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I make the request that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it take a recess until 12 o'clock noon to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

After Mr. HOWELL had yielded the floor for the day,

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE STATE AND JUSTICE DEPARTMENTS, ETC.

Mr. JONES of Washington submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8350) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

W. L. JONES,
CHARLES CURTIS.
H. C. LODGE,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
WM. J. HARRIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

MILTON W. SHREVE,
GEO. HOLDEN TINKHAM,
W. B. OLIVER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is not a complete agreement?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is a complete disagreement, and I am going to ask that the amendments made by the House to the two Senate amendments be agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that the action of the House be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives, which was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
May 20, 1924.

Resolved, That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 21 to the bill H. R. 8350, entitled "An act making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes," and concurs therein.

That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 22, and concurs therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "each, whose aggregate compensation shall not exceed $30,000."

That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 23, and concurs therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language inserted by said amendment insert the following: "but the Attorney General may fix the compensation of not to exceed six persons at not to exceed $10,000 each."

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move that the Senate agree to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 22 and 23.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator explain briefly the effect of agreeing to his motion?

Mr. JONES of Washington. As the Senate passed the bill we provided for two attorneys, who might be paid only $10,000 a year. The House inserted an amendment so that the aggregate of the two should not exceed $30,000.

In the other case the Senate provided for eight; that the Attorney General might fix the salary up to $10,000. This limits it to six.

Mr. ROBINSON. I see no objection to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. EDGE. Will the Senator from North Carolina withhold that motion for a moment?

Mr. OVERMAN. I will withhold the motion for a moment.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. EDGE. Is it not entirely parliamentary now for the President to put the motion which is now pending to make Senate bill 1898 the unfinished business? Can not that be done?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion made by the Senator from North Carolina can be made at any time, and it does not disturb the motion of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. EDGE. I appreciate that my motion is still pending, but I am wondering if we can not call it up to-night, inasmuch as the Senator from North Carolina withholds his motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate can dispose of the motion of the Senator from North Carolina by a vote. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from North Carolina that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and the Senate (at 6 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.), under the order previously made, took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, May 21, 1924, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, May 20, 1924

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God of mercy and forgiveness, do Thou hear the unexpressed voices of our breasts and accept us again as Thy needful children. May we strive to become worthy, even in some little way, of Thy countless blessings. Imbue us thoroughly with a lasting devotion to all the essential needs of our country. Come from behind the clouds of uncertainty and unwisdom and be the beacon light on our pathways. If either stress, strain, or storm is our portion may we realize that God is good and blessed forevermore. In the name of Jesus our Savior we pray. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Welch, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2327. An act to amend section 4 of the interstate commerce act.

The message also announced that the Senate having proceeded in pursuance of the Constitution to reconsider the bill (H. R. 7959) entitled "An act to provide adjusted compensation for the veterans of the World War, and for other purposes," returned by the President of the United States to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, with his objections, and passed by the House on a reconsideration of the same, it was passed, two-thirds of the Senators present having voted in the affirmative.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2169) to amend in certain particulars the national defense act of June 3, 1916, as amended, and for other purposes.

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV Senate bills and and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 2327. An act to amend section 4 of the interstate commerce act; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 2928. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to accept certain lands in the vicinity of Pensacola, Fla., to assure a suitable water supply for the United States Naval Air Station at Pensacola; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

S. 933. An act to provide for the examination and registration of architects and to regulate the practice of architecture in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 588. An act for the relief of Daniel A. Speight and others; to the Committee on Claims.

S. J. Res. 95. A joint resolution to authorize the American National Red Cross to continue the use of temporary buildings now erected on square numbered 172, Washington, D. C.; to the Committee on the Library.

S. 830. An act for the relief of Elizabeth Wooten; to the Committee on War Claims.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire leave of absence for the day to undergo a slight medical operation.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request is granted. There was no objection.

DEPARTMENTS OF STATE, JUSTICE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILLS

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Speaker, I call up conference report on the bill (H. R. 8350) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls up a conference report which the Clerk will report.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8350) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

MILTON W. SHREVE,
GEO. HOLDEN TINKHAM,
W. B. OLIVER,
Managers on the part of the House.

W. L. JONES,
CHARLES CURTIS,
H. C. LODGE,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
WM. J. HARRIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8350) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes, submit the following statement:

Senate amendments Nos. 21, 22, and 23, upon which the two Houses have not agreed and upon which the committee of conference have not agreed, relate to the number and salaries of attorneys under the appropriation for the investigation and prosecution of war frauds.

MILTON W. SHREVE,
W. B. OLIVER,
GEO. HOLDEN TINKHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur on amendment No. 21.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the House recede and concur on amendment No. 21——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, let it be reported, please.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 33, line 5, strike out the words "one person," and insert in lieu thereof "two persons."

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. SHREVE. Will the gentleman withhold that, please?

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I can not withhold anything, brother, unless it is a personal matter. I will withhold anything that is personal.

Mr. SHREVE. We desire very much to get these conference reports out of the way, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I know; but we could have done that last night. Unless it is a personal request I will have to make the point.

Mr. SHREVE. Then I will make it personal, and I am sure the gentleman will grant me that courtesy.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I will if you make it personal.

Mr. SHREVE. I will make it a personal matter.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask indefinte leave of absence for my colleague, Mr. PERLMAN, on account of illness in his family.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request will be granted. The Chair would suggest that when gentlemen wish to request leave of absence, it is better to put it in writing.

There was no objection.

CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Speaker, I call up amendment No. 22.

Page 33, line 7, after the word "annum," insert the word "each."

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to recede and concur with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SHREVE moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 22 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "each, whose aggregate compensation will not exceed $30,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The next amendment in disagreement is No. 23, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 33, line 7, amendment No. 23: Strike out "Provided further, That the compensation agreed to be paid to any person by the Department of Justice shall be definitely fixed at the time of employment" and insert "But the Attorney General may fix the compensation of not to exceed eight persons at not to exceed $10,000 each."

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendemnt.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman grant me two minutes on that?

The SPEAKER. The clerk will first report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SHREVE moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "But the Attorney General may fix the compensation of not to exceed six persons at not to exceed $10,000 each."

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas two minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, we have in the Department of Justice former colleagues who are some of the ablest lawyers in the United States. They served their country well here in the House at a salary of $7,500, but now you are arranging for this big army of lawyers in the Department of Justice to be continued on and permit salaries to be continued at outrageous sums. This ought not to be allowed. There is no necessity for the six at $10,000 a year. There is no chance to beat it; it is going to be passed. If there were any chance on earth to stop it I would do everything possible, but I realize there is no way to stop it. You are going to pass it, but I could not let it pass without my protest.

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that the conference committee have worked along the line suggested by the gentleman from Texas. We have reduced the number from eight to six, and I hope another year we may be able to make another reduction.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. At the present time they are employing 10 and we have reduced the number to 6.

Mr. McKEOWN. Are these special assistants for the Attorney General?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes; they are employed in the fraud cases.

Mr. McKEOWN. What salary do the regular assistants to the Attorney General get?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Seven thousand five hundred dollars a year.

Mr. McKEOWN. Does not the gentleman think that the regular assistants do more hard work than any special assistants?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes; but the special assistants are called in only for a short time and may not be occupied during the year.

Mr. McKEOWN. At the rate of $10,000 a year instead of a lump sum?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. WATKINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes.

Mr. WATKINS. What has been done in respect to the assistant attorneys general and employees whose compensation is to be fixed?

Mr. SHREVE. They are to be paid not exceeding $10,000.

Mr. WATKINS. None of them to get over that?

Mr. SHREVE. No.

Mr. WATKINS. What has been done in respect to fixing the compensation at the time of employment?

Mr. SHREVE. It must be fixed on the date of the employment.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the conference report if he will yield me five minutes to speak out of order. I will state to the gentleman what I have in mind. I have here a statement from an ex-service man——

Mr. SHREVE. I will yield to the gentleman five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to speak out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, there is always a time in every man's life when he is called on to take stock or make a mental trial balance for the purpose of seeing whether or not his conscience approves his conduct in the past. I am told that in less than a stone's throw from the United States Capitol there is a great building which is used by our Government to house one of its departments, that was given back to our Nation by a man while on his deathbed because he had stolen the material from the Government and constructed this building therefrom. Realizing that he was soon to die, and fearing to meet old St. Peter with the knowledge that he had defrauded the Government, he decided that the time for him to take stock had arrived and he deeded the same back to the United States Government.

Out in western Oklahoma, in the district which I have the honor to represent, lives a country boy who, while traveling about in the Army waiting for his salary check, took advantage of the absence of the man in charge and yielded to the temptation of taking some of the canteen funds. He was broke; without some of the necessities of life; and did not feel that this act would wrong any person.

The war was concluded and he returned to his home. Later he got religion and then he wrote me a letter calling attention to the fact that he had wrongfully taken this money while in the Army. He stated that his conscience hurt him so badly that he could not sleep, and he wanted to know what to do in order to right the wrong. I hold in my hand a postal money order for $25. In his letter he asks that I take this and put it in the right place, so he can have peace of mind in the future.

I think any lad who is willing to voluntarily do that which is right, and more especially when no individual has been wronged, must have a case of real religion, and I am glad to pay tribute to this young farmer boy by calling his way of making amends to the attention of the United States Congress, as I feel his attitude is commendable from every standpoint.

Now, Mr. Speaker, my attention was called this morning to a letter which came in the mail from some firm in New York, and especially the last paragraph, which is addressed to the President of the United States, as follows:

For Congress to pass this bonus bill on top of the Veterans' Bureau scandal, in my judgment, would be adding one scandal to another. I have no doubt the voters will make their sentiments known when the time comes, and you will profit at the expense of the Members of Congress. Many a man has paid the penalty of treason for a less offense against the country than this bonus bill constitutes.

The writer of this letter disguises his business and no one can tell by his stationery whether or not he follows an honorable occupation. The fact that his address is in the principal business part of New York City is sufficient to class him with the plutocrats, and I am not surprised that he is against doing anything for the men who fought for this Nation while there was a class of profiteers who systematically robbed the fathers and mothers of these same soldiers during the war. I want to say to this Congress, if the great horde of high financiers who profiteered, defrauded, and robbed the American people during the war would follow the example of this poor, honest, ex-service man who got religion, and pay back into the conscience fund of our Government the money that had been wrongfully taken from our people, it would not be necessary for anyone to complain of the cost of bonus legislation, for the reason there would be sufficient money to take care of the same without adding to the taxpayers of the Nation an extra burden. [Applause.]

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, before that vote is taken I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that upon the return to the Hall of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. MADDEN], he be given five minutes in which to give me the name, which he promised to give me, of some one man in a penitentiary of the United States, sent there as the result of the $6,000,000 which we have appropriated for the prosecution of war grafters.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 8262) to fix the compensation of officers and employees of the legislative branch of the Government.

REORGANIZATION OF THE FOREIGN SERVICE OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 6357) for the reorganization and improvement of the foreign service of the United States, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendments be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts calls up the bill providing for the reorganization of the foreign service, with Senate amendments thereto, and asks unanimous consent that the Senate amendments be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, lines 8 and 9, strike out "as ambassador or minister" and insert "to some other position in the Government service."

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 19, after the word "gathering" insert: "Provided further, That the Secretary of State is authorized to prescribe a per diem allowance not exceeding $6, in lieu of subsistence for foreign service officers on special duty or foreign service inspectors."

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 22, strike out the figures "50" and insert the figures "75."

M. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next Senate amendment.

Page 17, line 17, insert a new section as follows:

"SEC. 22. The titles 'Second Assistant Secretary of State' and 'Third Assistant Secretary of State' shall hereafter be known as 'Assistant Secretary of State' without numerical distinction of rank; but the change of title shall in no way impair the commissions, salaries, and duties of the present incumbents.

"There is hereby established in the Department of State an additional 'Assistant Secretary of State,' who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall be entitled to compensation at the rate of $7,500 per annum.

"The position of Director of the Consular Service is abolished and the salary provided for that office is hereby made available for the salary of the additional Assistant Secretary of State herein authorized."

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I understand the gentleman's contention is that the effect of this amendment is to make the former chief of the Consular Service Assistant Secretary of State, and to raise his salary. I understand the gentleman contends that his salary has already been in effect raised by the reclassification act.

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The salary has already been raised, beginning July 1 next, in accordance with the method laid down by the classification act. The conference report on the State Department appropriation bill, which the House has just adopted, also has the effect of fixing Mr. Carr's salary at $7,500.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. And the only real effect of this amendment is to change the designation of his office?

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes. The change here proposed is necessary in order to comply with the other provisions of this act.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. From that of chief of the Consular Service to that of Assistant Secretary of State?

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes. That is the effect and the sole effect of this Senate amendment.

Mr. LINTHICUM. What does the wording mean that the salary provided heretofore for the Director of the Consular Service shall be available for the salary of the additional Assistant Secretary of State, after we have already provided a salary of $7,500?

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. That is on the theory that this bill may become a law after the State Department appropriation bill becomes a law.

Mr. LINTHICUM. That will only necessitate the appropriation of an additional $3,000?

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Which appropriation the House and Senate have already provided. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 18, line 7, strike out the figures "22" and insert "23."

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDING THE NATIONAL DEFENSE ACT

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I submit a conference report for printing under the rules on the bill S. 2109, to amend in certain particulars the national defense act of June 3, 1916, as amended, and for other purposes.

CLAIMS OF CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW INDIANS

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 5325) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in any claims which the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 5325, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed the following conferees: Mr. SNYDER, Mr. DALLINGER, and Mr. HASTINGS.

FORT LEAVENWORTH MILITARY RESERVATION

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6207) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to transfer to the jurisdiction of the Department of Justice all that portion of the Fort Leavenworth Military Reservation which lies in the State of Missouri, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 6207, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the same. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION ACT

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 7877) making appropriations for the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Army appropriation bill, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to all of the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask the gentleman from Kansas whether we can arrive at some understanding as to separate votes that we may be permitted to have when the conference report comes back here?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say to the gentleman I do not know of any matter in the bill in which there is the desire on my part or the part of any of the conferees to foreclose the judgment of the House upon, and I would be willing to give the gentleman every reasonable opportunity.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. With that understanding I do not object.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I inquire whether the Senate struck out the provision of the House bill relating to the enlistment of minors?

Mr. ANTHONY. They have stricken out that language and proposed new language which modifies it to some extent, but to what extent I am unable to say, as I have not given it careful study.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Is the gentleman prepared to say that the House will have an opportunity to vote on the concrete question before the conferees agree to surrender the House provision in reference to that matter?

Mr. ANTHONY. It would be my idea to adhere to the language adopted by the House, and we will certainly give the House an opportunity to express itself.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. And vote on the same proposition in the bill as when it left the House before they agree in conference to the Senate amendment.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think so.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I do not want any think so; I want to know.

Mr. ANTHONY. I told the gentleman——

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Unless the gentleman will do that, I shall object.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have told the gentleman there is nothing in the bill upon which I would want to foreclose judgment of the House and would give the gentleman from Kentucky or any Member of the House every reasonable opportunity to get the sentiment of the House.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I know the gentleman said reasonable opportunities and reasonable so and so, but the concrete question is that I want to know if the gentleman will bring back that particular provision and give this House a chance to vote on it before the conferees agree to surrender entirely the position of the House on that matter. The gentleman knows whether he will do that, and if he does I think he ought to say so.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have told the gentleman in pretty broad language.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. If the gentleman will permit, the conferees on the naval bill were informed, the gentleman from Texas has been consulted, with regard to the amendment agreed upon, which we were informed was entirely satisfactory to the gentleman from Texas and in conformity with the amendment offered to the military bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will give the gentleman every reasonable opportunity to get the expression of the House on any language agreed upon in conference.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Does not the gentleman think my request is reasonable?

Mr. ANTHONY. What does the gentleman want?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Before the conferees agree to the Senate amendment, to come back and give the House a chance to vote on that matter.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not think the conferees ought to come back and consult the House——

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I did not think the gentleman felt so, therefore I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill H. R. 6355 and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York calls up the bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6355) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue certificate of citizenship to Indians.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if he is not willing to let this go over for a day or two?

Mr. SNYDER. I am perfectly willing.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not know there will be any objection, but I would like to look into a phase of it.

Mr. SNYDER. On the request of the gentleman from Tennessee I am perfectly willing.

CONFERENCE REPORT—NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 6820, the naval appropriation bill, and ask for its consideration. I would like to have the report read.

The conference report was read, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6820) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 9, 10, 18, 21, 32, 41, 46, 47, 49, and 64.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 4, 5, 7, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 23, 26, 27, 33, 34, 35, 37, 38, 39, 42, and 61, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,550,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$62,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$17,550,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 20: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,100,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "plant appliances as now defined by the 'Navy Classification of Accounts'"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "in all, $50,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 56: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows: "No officer of the Navy or Marine Corps, while on leave of absence engaged in a service other than that of the Government of the United States, shall be entitled to any pay or allowances for a period in excess of that for which he is entitled to full pay, unless the President otherwise directs"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 57: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 57, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$8,911,800"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 58: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 58, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$8,911,800" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 62: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 62, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "and limiting the number of officers and enlisted men"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 63: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 63, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "and that no part of the moneys herein appropriated for the Naval Establishment or herein made available therefor shall be used or expended under contracts hereafter made for the repair, purchase, or acquirement, by or from any private contractor, of any naval vessel, machinery, article, or articles that at the time of the proposed repair, purchase, or acquirement can be repaired, manufactured, or produced in each or any of the Government navy yards or arsenals of the United States when time and facilities permit, and when, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy, such repair, purchase, acquirement, or production would not involve an appreciable increase in cost to the Government"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed on amendments numbered 8, 25, 28, 30, 31, 40, 43, 44, 45, 48, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 59, and 60.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6820) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report, as to each of said amendments, namely:

On Nos. 1 and 2, relating to the appropriation "Pay, miscellaneous": Increases the limitation on account of communication expenditures from $175,000, as proposed by the House, to $200,000, as proposed by the Senate, and appropriates $2,550,000, instead of $2,500,000, as proposed by the House, and $2,600,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 3: Strikes out the provision proposed by the House prohibiting the payment of compensation to officers of the Navy attached to the office of Chief of Naval Operations and engaged upon work not specifically assigned by law to such office.

On Nos. 4 and 5, relating to naval training stations: Appropriates $250,000 for Newport, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $215,000, as proposed by the House, and appropriates $260,000 for Hampton Roads, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $215,000, as proposed by the House.

On Nos. 6 and 7, relating to the Naval Reserve Force: Appropriates $3,900,000 instead of $3,570,000, as proposed by the House, and $4,000,000, as proposed by the Senate; makes specific provision for reserve aviation and limits the amount which may be expended for maintenance, operation, and repair of vessels and aircraft.

On Nos. 9, 10, and 11, relating to the Naval War College: Appropriates $100,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $130,000, as proposed by the Senate, and fixes the limitation on expenditures for classified employees at $62,500, instead of $50,000, as proposed by the House, and $70,278.56, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 12 to 17, inclusive, relating to the Naval Home: Appropriates $1,200 for the superintendent of grounds, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $1,080, as proposed by the House; strikes out, as proposed by the Senate, a store laborer at $660 and a matron and office assistant at $720; appropriates for a seamstress at $360, as proposed by the Senate; appropriates $600 and $540 for two assistant cooks, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $540 and $480, respectively, as proposed by the House, and appropriates $600 for head waitress, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $480, as proposed by the House.

On No. 18: Appropriates $300,000 for personal services in the Hydrographic Office, as proposed by the House, instead of $311,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 19, 20, and 21, relating to the appropriation "Engineering": Appropriates $17,550,000 for "Engineering," instead of $18,012,300, as proposed by the House, and $16,550,000, as proposed by the Senate; makes available immediately $2,100,000, instead of $2,562,300, as proposed by the House, and $1,100,000, as proposed by the Senate, and makes $600,000 available for developing and testing submarine motive power, as proposed by the House.

On No. 22: Restores the limitation proposed by the House with respect to the number of cargo ships, transports, and ammunition ships which may be maintained in commission, amended so as to permit the return of any greater number of such vessels to the port of decommissioning.

On No. 23: Appropriates $313,000 for personal services in the Bureau of Construction and Repair, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $305,000, as proposed by the House.

On No. 24: Makes the appropriation "Ordnance and ordnance stores" available specifically for the acquirement of plant appliances, as proposed by the Senate, amended to restrict such appliances to those at present defined by the "Navy classification of accounts."

On No. 26: Appropriates $850,000 for the purchase and manufacture of torpedoes and appliances, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $500,000, as proposed by the House.

On No. 27: Provides for an allowance of two midshipmen from Porto Rico appointed on nomination of the Resident Commissioner, as proposed by the Senate, instead of one midshipman, as proposed by the House.

On No. 29: Denies counting time spent at the Naval or Military Academies after March 4, 1913, in computing for any purpose the length of service of any officer of the Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, or Public Health Service, in language as proposed by the Senate, instead of as proposed by the House.

On No. 32: Strikes out the amendment proposed by the Senate changing the punctuation of the appropriation "Care of the dead."

On Nos. 33 to 39, inclusive, relating to public works, Bureau of Yards and Docks: Appropriates $10,000 for circulating pumps for heating system, navy yard, Portsmouth, N. H., as proposed by the Senate; changes the designation of the foundry building to be reroofed at the navy yard, Boston, Mass., as proposed by the Senate; strikes out under the navy yard, Philadelphia, Pa., the appropriations proposed by the House and Senate, respectively, of $22,000 for acetylene gas plant, extension and remodeling, and $30,000 for continuing paving; appropriates $50,000 for replacing caisson, Dry Dock No. 1, navy yard, Norfolk, Va., as proposed by the Senate; appropriates $30,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $20,000, as proposed by the House, for dredging at the navy yard, Charleston, S. C.; and appropriates $57,500, as proposed by the Senate, for plant renewals, naval coal depot, Tiburon, Calif.

On No. 41: Strikes out the appropriation of $15,000, proposed by the Senate, for certain reroofing work at the Naval Academy.

On No. 42: Appropriates $14,000 for fresh-water tank at the naval station, Guantanamo, Cuba, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 46: Strikes out the appropriation of $200,000, proposed by the Senate, on account of the submarine and destroyer base, Columbia River, Oreg.

On No. 47: Strikes out the appropriation of $100,000 proposed by the Senate for extending the distributing systems, submarine base, Pearl Harbor, Hawaii.

On No. 49: Strikes out the appropriation of $15,000 proposed by the Senate for paint and oil storehouse, naval base, San Diego, Calif.

On No. 56: Restores the provision proposed by the House denying pay or allowances to officers of the Navy or Marine Corps while on leave of absence in excess of accrued leave, amended so as to apply only where the absence is on account of the absentee being engaged in a service other than that of the Government of the United States.

On Nos. 57 and 58, relating to the Marine Corps: Appropriates $1,385,000 for clothing for enlisted men instead of $1,325,000, as proposed by the House, and $1,450,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 61 and 62: Extends the provision with respect to another conference on the limitation of naval armament to include such other Governments besides Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan, as the President may deem proper, as proposed by the Senate, and also to include within the scope of the conference the question of limiting the number of officers and men, instead of men only, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 63: Retains the provision proposed by the House with respect to having work performed in navy yards instead of by private contractors, when a money saving would result, amended (1) so as to provide that Government arsenals, as well as navy yards, shall be taken into account, (2) by partly defining the work embraced by the provision, (3) by making the provision subject to the availability of time and facilities, and (4) by providing, in lieu of the condition that there should be a money saving, that an appreciable increase in cost to the Government, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy, would not be involved.

On No. 64: Strikes out the paragraph proposed by the Senate with respect to former officers of the Navy or Marine Corps who joined or left such services in order to join the Confederate forces.

The committee of conference have not agreed upon the following amendments of the Senate:

On No. 8: Relating to the Volunteer Naval Reserve and the Naval Militia.

On No. 25: Relating to the care and operation of schools built at ordnance stations.

On No. 28: Relating to enlistments under the age of 21 years.

On No. 30: Relating to the establishment of a special working fund to finance miscellaneous transactions.

On No. 31: Providing for reimbursement on account of issues made for relief of sufferers in Japan following the earthquake which occurred September 1, 1923.

On No. 40: Appropriating $400,000 for certain public works at the Puget Sound Navy Yard.

On No. 43: Appropriating $55,000 for certain public works at the naval station, Pearl Harbor, Hawaii.

On No. 44: Appropriating $77,000 for certain public works at the naval station, Tutuila, Samoa.

On No. 45: Appropriating $60,000 for storage for war heads at the naval fuel depot, San Diego, Calif.

On No. 48: Appropriating $175,000 for certain public works at the naval station, San Diego, Calif.

On No. 50: Appropriating $500,000 for constructing a building for use as a supply depot of the Marine Corps at San Francisco, Calif.

On No. 51: Appropriating $560,000 for public works at certain naval air stations.

On No. 52: Providing for the settlement of damage claims growing out of the operation of naval aircraft.

On No. 53: Providing for the acceptance, without cost to the United States, of lands required for providing a water supply for the naval air station, Pensacola, Fla.

On No. 54: Relating to civilian professors or instructors at the Naval Academy.

On No. 55: Relating to the transportation on foreign vessels of naval and civil personnel.

On Nos. 59 and 60: Relating to the construction of a submarine.

BURTON L. FRENCH,
GUY U. HARDY,
JOHN TABER,
JAMES F. BYRNES,
W. B. OLIVER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, a very short statement I think will explain the effect of the Senate amendments to the naval appropriation bill and the effect of the conference report. Let me say that the Senate was very generous toward the action of the House on this bill, and, while numerous amendments were made, generally speaking, the bill was not markedly different in most respects when it passed the Senate from what it was when it passed the House. As the bill passed the House it carried $272,012,867, and as it passed the Senate it carried $274,941,067, a Senate increase of $2,928,200. The Senate placed 64 amendments on the bill, 29 of which affected the amounts of money carried in the bill. As to these money amendments the House conferees have receded either outright or for a reduced amount on 21, involving an increase over the bill as passed by the House of $535,200. The action which I shall propose with respect to the remaining eight amendments will add to the bill as passed by the House the further sum of $2,557,000, so that, if the proposals which I shall make are agreed to, the bill will carry $3,092,200 above what it carried as passed by the House, but, even with this increase, the bill will carry $19,351,461 less of direct appropriations than the appropriation act for the current fiscal year. It will be observed that the increases that the House conferees have agreed to, and those which I shall propose exceed, in the aggregate, the Senate increases by $164,000.

This is because the Senate actually added to the bill $4,412,500 and at the same time proposed reductions totaling $1,484,300, making a net increase of $2,928,200. Of the reductions proposed by the Senate, the House conferees insisted on and the Senate conferees agreed to the restoration of $1,000,000, so that, as a matter of fact, leaving out of consideration the reductions proposed by the Senate, the Senate conferees have agreed to yield back $836,000 of the increases which the Senate put into the bill.

The major items comprising the total increases over the House bill, as agreed to in conference including amendments brought back for disposition, are as follows:

Naval Reserve Force	$330,000
Purchase and manufacture of torpedoes	350,000
Repair and fitting out pier, Puget Sound	250,000
Storage for torpedoes, naval station, San Diego	140,000
Supply depot, Marine Corps, San Francisco, Calif.	500,000
Public works, aviation	560,000
Increase of the Navy	950,000

If, then, the conference report and the proposals I shall make shall be agreed to, the naval bill for 1925 will carry $275,105,067 of direct appropriations, and indirect appropriations of $22,500,000, making a grand total of authorizations in the bill of $297,605,067.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Is there any provision in this bill for money to repair the warships and cruisers which we are told are in such bad shape and needing necessary repairs at the present time?

Mr. FRENCH. Let me say to the gentleman that the current law provides appropriations under which three of the battleships will be put into better shape than they were when they left for Panama. There is pending in the House at this time a bill providing for radical changes in the engine power of these several battleships, and it was thought on the part of the committee that we ought not to provide for changes that would exceed in cost $300,000 each. That is the limit under which we have been operating. More than that the department has not during the last three years called for an amount from our committee for any ship in excess of $300,000.

Mr. SNELL. Is that the law or a rule of the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. FRENCH. The House has never construed it so, and the committee has never construed it; but on the other hand we did not feel we should bring in an item for a battleship in excess of that amount, except in pursuance of a specific estimate of appropriation. For the six battleships in most serious condition we have reported approximately $200,000 each. The estimates did not contemplate the provision of a larger sum. I think that we have carried in the bill an ample amount for the ordinary upkeep of the several ships to which the gentleman refers, barring only the rehabilitation of the ships to the extent of replacing coal burners by either new coal burners or oil burners if that shall be directed by the Congress. This authorization is embodied in a bill pending in the House from a naval legislative committee.

Mr. SNELL. You do not think we could make all the repairs necessary to put those ships in shape without special legislation at this time?

Mr. FRENCH. Not in the best shape. We could put them into workable shape, but not into the best shape, as the department would like to have them.

Mr. SNELL. Do you not think it is incumbent on the Navy to keep the ships in the very best shape possible?

Mr. FRENCH. That is my judgment, and that is the judgment of the members of our committee. When we reported the bill to the House we brought in an amount of $1,982,000 for general improvements of the ships of the Navy in excess of the amount recommended by the Budget; and the full committee, as well as this House, looked upon that item as a very wise expenditure of money, and in the light of developments during the last several weeks my judgment in the matter is confirmed.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Will the Speaker be kind enough to inform me whether the proceeding now in the hands of the House is superior to the proceeding ordered by the Rules Committee to consider the Agricultural bill at this hour?

The SPEAKER. This report is of the highest privilege.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. It is of the highest privilege?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. FRENCH. In my judgment it will not take us long to dispose of the several items in the bill.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Agriculture can wait. That is all right.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit an inquiry? On the Pacific coast 900 miles are unprotected, especially the mouth of the Columbia River. I want to ask the gentleman whether any appropriation or anything at all has been done to take care of Tongue Point base, or is it left to float alone for another year? Or did the House agree to the Senate amendment providing for an appropriation? What was done with that?

Mr. FRENCH. The Senate added an amendment to the bill providing $200,000 for further improvements and development work at Tongue Point, to which the House conferees were not able to agree, and the Senate conferees receded.

Mr. WATKINS. So that this Tongue Point base will not have any appropriation or anything to maintain it for another year?

Mr. FRENCH. There is no specific appropriation.

Mr. WATKINS. No specific appropriations; none at all. There is none at all, is there?

Mr. FRENCH. The general appropriation for maintenance of yards and docks would have regard for the station at Tongue Point as well as other stations, and therefore there would be to some extent moneys expended at that point.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. In order to protect the cause of agriculture I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. FRENCH. Will not the gentleman withhold that point of order until we dispose of this bill? I think this House can dispose of it very shortly.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. The gentleman from Nebraska will always yield on personal request, but you have got to give me specifications. I make the point of no quorum, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. FRENCH. Will not the gentleman withhold it until we get through with this bill?

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. The gentleman is not helping agriculture by his action.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I want agriculture to have a run for its white alley, and it is not getting any.

Mr. FRENCH. Will not my friend from Nebraska withhold his point of order until we dispose of this bill?

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I yield, Mr. Speaker, at the request of a gentleman; but I serve notice that I did not come here to be bulldozed or browbeaten by anybody on any side of the House, and I refrain from taking personal action now, but I make no promises for the future.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman from Nebraska yield?

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I have already yielded. I withdraw the point of order that no quorum is present.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman from Idaho yield?

Mr. FRENCH. I shall be glad to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I have endeavored to listen to the colloquy that went on between the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] about appropriations to put the fleet in good condition. If I mistake not, I saw a statement in the press a few days ago from the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, in which he said that under the arms limitation treaty and under the present condition of the Navy the navies of the world ranked 5-4-3—Great Britain 5, the United States 4, and Japan 3. Now, if that is true—and it comes from the Navy Department—I want to know why the Naval Committee or the Appropriations Committee does not appropriate sufficient funds to bring our fleet up to an equality with that of Great Britain and recondition any of the battleships that need reconditioning in order to make the fleet effective. Can the gentleman answer that question?

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, in my judgment the Congress has appropriated constantly money adequate to maintain the Navy of the United States in the ratio which was assigned to it by the Limitation of Armaments Conference. The Assistant Secretary of the Navy a few days ago issued a statement in response to a general criticism by Mr. W. B. Shearer, in the New York Times, wherein Mr. Shearer stated that the ratio had been reduced from 5-5-3, with the United States one of the major factors, to 5-3-1, with the United States the 1. The statement of the Assistant Secretary of the Navy characterizes the estimate of Mr. Shearer as "greatly exaggerated." Without attempting to read the Assistant Secretary's whole statement, let me call your attention to about four lines in which Assistant Secretary Roosevelt referred to battleships. Secretary Roosevelt says this:

> The battleships Florida, Utah, Wyoming, and Arkansas required boiler repairs in order to maintain their speed. Until this could be done the speed of these four ships was reduced and they had to drop out of the battle line. This reduced the ratio to 5-4-3.

The Assistant Secretary referred to the breaking down of machinery in four of our battleships some four months ago, which temporarily has taken them to the navy yards for repairs.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Who was this Mr. Shearer?

Mr. FRENCH. Well, Mr. Shearer is a man who is represented as an engineering expert, an inventor, and a torpedo expert.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Represented by whom? Represented by himself?

Mr. FRENCH. Probably so.

Mr. LONGWORTH. On what authority does he speak?

Mr. FRENCH. He speaks, as I understand, with no other authority than his own judgment. He is not connected with the Navy.

Mr. LONGWORTH. He admits he is an expert and he is the only person who does.

Mr. FRENCH. Well, I do not like to be critical. The statements of Mr. Shearer are so exaggerated that they fall of their own weight in large degree. I understand Mr. Shearer to be a designer and inventor of mechanical devices having to do with appliances of the Navy—particularly torpedoes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does the gentleman mean the selling of appliances to the Navy?

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FRENCH. In just a moment. In response to the query of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] let me say I understand that Mr. Shearer is an inventor. I do not care to say anything that would reflect upon him; but he seems to speak for those who are engaged at this time in propaganda to inflate the size of the Navy, the direct result of which would mean the purchase of more equipment, the expenditure of incalculable millions of dollars, the building of multiplied types of machinery, of ships, and of munitions of all kinds in another wild race for competition in world armaments. I want to say this, further, with regard to Mr. Shearer: His statement that the United States occupies the ratio of 1 to 5 with respect to Great Britain and 1 to 3 with respect to Japan is thoroughly unfounded, thoroughly unsound, and has just as much to substantiate it as though he had said that we occupy the ratio of 1 to 5 with France upon the sea, because it happens that from the standpoint of airplanes alone the French Government has to-day five times as many airplanes as has the United States.

The fact is Mr. Shearer has limited himself to a few factors. You have got to take into consideration a multitude of factors to arrive at the ratio. That is precisely what was done by the gentlemen at the Limitation of Armament Conference. They did not count on battleships alone, they did not count on cruisers alone, they did not count on oil supply alone, they did not count on bases alone, they did not count alone on submarines or upon destroyers, but they took into consideration the entire establishment, ships and guns, bases and supplies, munitions and facility to mobilize—in fact, all the facilities of the United States in comparison with those of Great Britain and those of Japan, in some of which we are outranked by Great Britain, in some of which we are outranked by Japan, but in all of which we measure up to what we ought to measure up—the ratio of 5–5–3. [Applause.]

I yield now to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I just want to say, in addition to what my colleague on the Committee on Appropriations has said, that after Shearer made the statement that the United States has one unit in some things connected with the Navy against five units of other nations, when you go to check that up you find that we have five of those units and the other nations have one. Is not that true, for example, in storage-space for oils and fuel?

Mr. FRENCH. You find the comparisons adverse to them in some cases. For instance, take it in submarines; we have the strength of the combined submarine forces of both Great Britain and Japan, and the same is true of destroyers.

Mr. MADDEN. And in the matter of storage space for the fuel supply we have five times the storage space of any other nation, have we not?

Mr. FRENCH. No; I would not put it that strong. I do not think that is quite an accurate statement when applied to storage owned by the Government; but, on the other hand, private interests own vast storage facilities which in event of war would be at the command of the United States. Let me say that the United States is a compact, great Nation. The heart of the British nation is in the British Isles. Great Britain needs storage there. If the home storage should be cut off or if the isles should be cut off from the outlying possessions, Great Britain would be on her back, and the same is true of Japan. The United States, however, compact as she is, with her immense resources of fuel and fuel oil at home, with the storage capacity of private institutions along both our coasts and in the interior, is incomparably rich from the standpoint of fuel oil in comparison with either Great Britain or Japan.

Mr. MADDEN. And the statement which Shearer made was absolutely untrue in respect of all those things.

Mr. FRENCH. It is untrue and it is misleading.

Mr. LAZARO and Mr. LAGUARDIA rose.

Mr. FRENCH. I yield first to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LAZARO].

Mr. LAZARO. Does the gentleman know that upon the recommendation of the Navy Department we appropriated $6,500,000 to raise the elevation of the guns on certain battleships of our fleet? Why was this money returned to the Treasury and why was not the range of these guns increased to meet the range of other ships of other nations?

Mr. FRENCH. I made a statement on that point during the general consideration of the bill and I will repeat it briefly. When the representations were made by the department to the committee, upon which the Congress a year ago appropriated $6,500,000, it was with the understanding on the part of the Navy Department that the guns of the British Navy would outshoot our guns 5 or 6 miles, and further it was understood that the British had made changes in gun elevations following the armament conference. After the appropriation had been made the Navy Department discovered that the statements just referred to and upon which it thought it had the right to reply were not accurate; that no alterations in gun elevations had been made subsequent to the conference, and that although some of the guns could outshoot some of our guns to the extent of 2 or 3 miles, the situation was not as extreme as it had been represented. The Navy Department did not expend the money, and the Secretary said that he did not propose to expend it without coming to the Congress and receiving a fresh authorization upon the basis of the best information they had before them.

Mr. LAZARO. Then you admit they have a range of between 2 and 3 miles more than our guns, do you not?

Mr. FRENCH. Some of their guns; yes. Five of our ships have a superior range to the British ships, while, on the other hand, they outrange us on 13.

Mr. LAZARO. Why should that be the case?

Mr. FRENCH. Were that the only factor, it should not be. They had that range prior to the Limitation of Armament Conference. That was one of the factors that we must assume was not overlooked by those who were members of the conference commission that drafted the treaty.

Mr. LAZARO. Is it not true that some of the battleships are coal burners and lack the speed that the other ships have?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes; we have six coal burners; but let me also remind the gentleman that from the standpoint of battleships a few of the British ships probably outclass ours, but the bulk of ours outclass the British battleships; and the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Colonel Roosevelt, when he was before our committee made the statement to us that on the whole he regarded the battleships of the United States as superior to the battleships of Great Britain.

Mr. LAZARO. What about plane carriers? How many have we?

Mr. FRENCH. We have one plane carrier completed. We have two others in course of construction.

Mr. LAZARO. Suppose we should divide the fleet between the Atlantic and the Pacific. You would only have one plane carrier.

Mr. FRENCH. We have two that are being built.

Mr. LAZARO. They are being built; yes.

Mr. FRENCH. Let me refer further, if the gentleman will permit, to a statement quoted by Colonel Roosevelt to our committee referring to the state of our battleships in comparison with the battleships of Great Britain. I asked Colonel Roosevelt this question:

> Mr. FRENCH. Is it true that on an average our capital ships are more modern and are a better ship in every way than the British ship?
> Colonel ROOSEVELT. Yes; on an average.

Quoting Colonel Roosevelt further:

> I remember the expression used by Admiral Chatfield (British officer) at the time we were talking about that. He said: "The tail of your column is not as good as the tail of our column, but the body of your column and the head of your column are very much better than any of the rest of our column.

And if the gentleman will go further and if he will read the judgment of experts on the British side, those experts will insist that we got the better of the bargain in the arrangement that was made. Gentlemen must remember that there are those in Great Britain who are urging larger and still larger naval budgets. British critics contend that on an equal parity with the United States as to ships and munitions and fuel the United States would be twice as strong as Great Britain, because she is far flung and we are compact.

Mr. LAZARO. I will be frank; I will say that we got the little end of it in the Conference on the Limitation of Armament.

Mr. FRENCH. Now I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I ask this question not in any sense of criticism of Colonel Roosevelt. I do not believe this man Shearer—I do not know him and do not care anything about him. My statement is directed to the fact that the Assistant Secretary of the Navy had given a public statement that the ratio of the navies at the present time were 5 for Great Britain, 4 for the United States, and 3 for Japan. Now, I want to know whether that fact is attributable to the fault of the Navy Department or to the fault of the Appropriations Committee of this House in not making appropriations. I, for one, took some little part in urging the disarmament conference being called. Now that we have a treaty, I want to see the United States Navy maintained at the highest possible efficiency under that treaty. I want to know why it is—whether through the Department of the Navy, the Appropriations Committee, or Congress—we have permitted the Navy to deteriorate until it occupies a place of 4 to Great Britain's 5.

The gentleman from Idaho said a moment ago that the Assistant Secretary said it was true as to battleships. Well, we all know that Japan and Great Britain both excel us in the number and quality of cruisers, so that if we are deficient in fast cruisers and only occupy a place of 5–4–3 in battleships our Navy can not be equal to that of Great Britain. That is my only interest. I am not trying to make capital out of this matter. I think we should keep the Navy up to the highest point of efficiency, and Great Britain or Japan or no other country ought to be permitted to maintain a Navy superior to ours, because that is the whole theory of the disarmament conference. [Applause.]

Mr. FRENCH. The gentleman from Texas does not differ from the members of the Appropriations Committee in that regard.

The fact is that Congress has appropriated money to maintain the ratio as provided. I quoted Colonel Roosevelt awhile ago when he referred to the breakdown of the four battleships, and after he had discussed that he said "this reduces the ratio to 5–4," or, in other words, by taking the four battleships out of the line.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Does that mean that it is going to be corrected?

Mr. FRENCH. Surely; and it is being corrected. The money is in the Treasury for the repair of three battleships which will be in line by the 1st of July. As to the other one, the Florida, the repairs are being postponed until we can see whether or not the Congress will pass the bill reported from the legislative committee, in order that we may not spend money in bringing the ship back into condition when within six months we may have to tear out the machinery and replace it again with oil burners or coal burners, as the case may be. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], I wish to make a brief statement in reference to the bill now under consideration, and to read some excerpts from the hearings which the committee held on the 1924 naval appropriation bill. As to the bill before us the subcommittee went out of its way in search of information as to what money was needed to put the fleet in condition over and above the amount recommended by the Bureau of the Budget. Inquiry of Admiral Robinson discloses that additional funds were necessary, and you will recall that the House approved the action of the committee in recommending an appropriation in excess of the amount allowed by the Bureau of the Budget for ship repairs. In preparing the appropriation bill for 1924—the present year—the committee likewise were very careful to inquire of the Secretary of the Navy, when he appeared before the committee with the heads of the different department bureaus, whether any additional funds were needed to put the fleet in condition, and I invite your careful attention to some questions which I asked the Secretary at that time, and which you will find on pages 10 to 14, inclusive, as reported in the printed hearings on the 1924 bill. Let me here read some of the questions asked the Secretary at that time and the substance of his replies:

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Secretary, in your general statement you referred to the fact that while you acquiesced in the Budget estimates, yet perhaps you had reluctantly acquiesced, and I recall that press reports indicated that your reluctance might have been interpreted as being somewhat of a protest at the time you had the discussion. Now, I am interested to know what special items in the estimates you feel are really too small in order for the Navy to be maintained on an efficient basis.

Secretary DENBY. Well, I should hate to endeavor to give that, because there would be a considerable number of items. There were certain items involving policy which, while reluctant to see go, I acquiesced in eliminating. I do not want to have you understand that my reluctance went to the extent of actual failure to meet the mind of the Director of the Budget. I did meet his mind and acquiesced in this bill because of the very great pressure from all sides to economize to the utmost extent possible, otherwise I certainly should not have acquiesced in the report of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget. I did acquiesce in it for the reason that the country seemed to be so very, very deficient in money, and from this committee and from other sources there has come the stern demand that the Navy, as well as other departments of the Government, should cut down.

Mr. OLIVER. I think that, of course, is entirely commendable and proper; but I was interested to know if, in your judgment, there were any items on which you did finally yield about which you entertained very grave doubts as to the propriety of your having yielded from the standpoint of naval efficiency during the coming year.

To this question his reply was "no," and he made some objection to the word "propriety" included in the question.

In using the word "propriety" in my question I intended to have it carry the significance of wisdom, whether or not it was wise to acquiesce in that, and I was led to ask you these questions simply because of repeated statements in the press. I do not know to what extent they were authorized or justified, but they said there was a disposition on the part of the Secretary, as well as the heads of the bureaus, to indicate that acquiescence in some of the cuts made by the Budget officer would really work serious hurt to the Navy, in all probability, and if that is correct and grave doubts are entertained as to the wisdom of acquiescence in some of the insistencies on the part of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, I felt the committee would like to know it.

He replied there was not. I then asked him this question:

So far as you now feel, there were no reservations to the acquiescence you gave to the Budget estimates that were sufficiently potent and strong as to make it necessary to reopen matters in the Senate after we pass the bill in the House?

His reply was in the negative.

Then the following further questions were asked:

Mr. OLIVER. I had no desire by my questions to reopen any matters that had been agreed on between you and the Director of the Budget unless you or the officers who are your coadvisers feel that some matters should be brought directly to the attention of the committee. As I said a few minutes ago, I was led to make my inquiries because of repeated assertions that there had been some unwise yielding, and that is why I want the committee at least to have the benefit of any information you feel should be communicated to it.

Now, I want to ask this pointed question: Is there anything known to the Navy Department as to the new construction program of any of the other powers that would now suggest the wisdom of appropriating for new construction in our Navy, for any particular devices on the ships, or for any particular service?

Secretary DENBY. Personally, I do not know that there is; but remember, Mr. OLIVER, that the statement applies only to this year.

Mr. OLIVER. So far as you now feel, there were no reservations to the acquiescence you gave to the Budget estimate that were sufficiently potent and strong as to make it necessary to reopen certain matters in the Senate after we pass the bill in the House?

Secretary DENBY. No.

Mr. WATKINS. I have not yet heard an answer to the question of the gentleman from Texas, and that is whether the purport of the interview of the Assistant Secretary of the Navy was true, that the ratio now is 5–4–3 instead of 5–5–3. Is that true or not?

The question of the relative strength of our fleet with that of England and Japan will be fully discussed when the legislative bill which seeks to authorize further construction of vessels is taken up in the House. I understand that the bill will probably come before the House next week. You will find that many misleading and inaccurate statements have been made as to the size and strength of our own Navy. You will also find a wide divergence of opinion among both experts and nonexperts as to what our Navy now most urgently needs. It is not a well-rounded Navy, and there is sharp difference of opinion in and out of the service as to the relative value of present-day types of naval weapons. The need of the fleet for certain types of ships is admitted, and the legislative committee will probably urge that Congress authorize the building of modern cruisers within the limits of the treaty, and which, you will be pleased to find—though carrying only 8-inch guns with a 10,000-tonnage displacement—are very powerful vessels and superior to some of the battleships probably that we now have. If this claim be true, you will find it due largely to the rapid advance in marine engineering.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. I want the gentleman's judgment as to what is the ratio of the three navies measured by their cruiser strength.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Unquestionably, both England and Japan are stronger. As the gentleman knows, when the peace treaty was agreed to, we had building six modern battle cruisers. No country in the world had ever designed such efficient and powerful weapons of that type. The cruisers would have had a speed of about 35 knots, would have carried 16-inch guns, and were conceded to be the most powerful battle cruisers ever designed for the navy of any country. The American conferees agreed to scrap all of these six cruisers.

Mr. WINGO. What conferees?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The peace conferees.

Mr. WINGO. That was at the Limitation of Armaments Conference?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes; and as you recall, we were authorized to convert two of the battle cruisers into airplane carriers, but were limited to small guns being placed thereon.

Mr. WINGO. Is this true, that from the viewpoint of those who hold that the modern battle cruiser is really the backbone of the fleet, the ratio maintained is such that we are third instead of equal?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The legislative committee recognize that we need additional modern cruisers, with speed and wide radius of action, and for that reason are asking Congress to authorize the building of 10 cruisers of that type. It is to correct the deficiency which the gentleman calls attention to.

Mr. WINGO. I have asked about battle cruisers. Take the battleships, the submarines, and the air service. What is the ratio on each of those, in the gentleman's judgment?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] has just made an interesting statement as to the relative strength of the battleships. As to destroyers and submarines, we are stronger than either England or Japan, and when the aircraft carriers are completed we will have added greatly to the strength of our fleet. Then you must remember that we are modernizing our battleships and some of our cruisers and destroyers by providing them with aircraft.

Mr. WINGO. We are not equal to Japan and England in aircraft, are we?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I would say that we are stronger than Japan but not equal to Great Britain.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman just stated that experts, some at least, take the position that the modern 10,000-ton scout cruiser will be equivalent to battleships with 12-inch guns. I wish the gentleman would enlighten the committee as to what experts, what naval officers, have testified that a 10,000-ton cruiser with 8-inch guns is as effective as a twenty or thirty thousand ton battleship with 12-inch guns.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I refer the gentleman to a statement by the Secretary before the committee on December 19, 1923, in which he discusses the fighting efficiency of the modern 8-inch gun scout cruiser. Naval officers were present with the Secretary, and I assume acquiesced in the statement that he then made and which you will find on page 6 of the hearings.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman further knows that Great Britain has 35 scout cruisers and Japan 28 scout cruisers. The United States, including those that are building, has only 10 scout cruisers.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. And, therefore, we are far below the other nations in regard to scout cruisers.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I think the gentleman's statement is correct.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman has read to us from the testimony of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Did not the Secretary admit in the hearing before the committee that he had not asked Congress for the appropriations that he thought were really necessary to maintain the fleet properly because the Budget Bureau, this expert in naval affairs, had asked him not to do it?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. He did not go so far as that.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Did he not say that he yielded to the Budget Bureau?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes; in the interest of economy, he stated, he had yielded some demands which otherwise he would have made.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. That is a matter of policy. It is a matter of policy whether you will maintain the fleet up to the 5–5–3 ratio, and the effect of the Secretary's testimony is that he permitted the Budget Bureau to override the Navy Department on a matter of policy.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The House will probably be interested in knowing that our Navy is composed to-day of the following principal combatant units:

Battleships, first line	18
Cruisers, second line	11
Light cruisers, first line	10
Light cruisers, second line	16
Aircraft carrier, second line	1
Mine layer, second line	1
Destroyers, first line	281
Destroyers, second line	21
Light mine layers (formerly destroyers)	14
Submarines, first line	93
Submarines, second line	27
Fleet submarines, first line (building)	6

In addition there are numerous patrol vessels, destroyer tenders, submarine tenders, aircraft tenders, repair ships, store ships, colliers, oilers, ammunition ships, cargo ships, transports, hospital ships, tugs, mine sweepers, naval district and navy-yard craft, which I will not here enumerate, but which will be enumerated in the hearings by the Chief of Naval Operations.

The 10 light cruisers of the second line are obsolete vessels, and practically we consider them fit only for duty in time of peace, to serve as special service squadrons, for instance, for carrying the flag, policing, and so forth. Strictly speaking, they lack speed and they lack armor. They are not modern vessels and they are not really effective cruisers. They would not be effective in battle.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentlemen here who are burning up with anxiety will possess themselves in patience until to-morrow, one week, we will give them a chance to show how much nerve they have and how much they care for the national defense.

Then we will ask you to vote an appropriation of $150,000,000 to bring our fleet up; we will ask you to vote eight ships of 10,000 tons each, costing when completed by 1930, $15,000,000 apiece, unless the price goes up, and then we will ask you to give $18,000,000 for the purpose of bringing up six of our big ships, and then we will have 5–5–3.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Then we are not 5–5–3 now?

Mr. BUTLER. We are 5 and a fraction above 4.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I am not opposing——

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman never has been opposed to the national defense. He and I have had friendly discussion in this place; he has never been opposed to it; but I will tell the gentleman he can get a complete answer in detail if he will come to the committee room of the Committee on Naval Affairs. However, I desire to say that to-morrow week we will ask the House to bring our Navy up to 5–5–3, whereas we are now 5 and a fraction above 4–3.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The question was taken, and the conference report was adopted.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, there are several amendments that we have brought back to have voted on by the House which were agreed to in the conference committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CHINDBLOM). The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 8, page 13, after line 25, insert: "Provided further, That members of the Volunteer Naval Reserve may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, be issued such articles of uniform as may be required for their drills and training, the value thereof not to exceed that authorized to be issued to other classes of the Naval Reserve Force and to be charged against the clothing and small-stores fund: Provided further, That until June 30, 1925, of the Organized Militia as provided by law, such part as may be duly prescribed in any State, Territory, or for the District of Columbia shall constitute a Naval Militia; and until June 30, 1925, such of the Naval Militia as now is in existence, and as now organized and prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy under authority of the act of Congress approved February 16, 1914, shall be a part of the Naval Reserve Force, and the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to maintain and provide for said Naval Militia as provided in said act: Provided further, That upon their enrollment in the Naval Reserve Force, and not otherwise until June 30, 1925, the members of said Naval Militia shall have all the benefits, gratuities, privileges, and emoluments provided by law for other members of the Naval Reserve Force; and that, with the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, duty performed in the Naval Militia may be counted as active service for the maintenance of efficiency required by law for members of the Naval Reserve Force."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FRENCH moves to recede and concur with an amendment as follows: In line 1 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "that," insert the following: "until June 30, 1925."

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 25, page 25, line 14, after the word "schools," strike out "built at ordnance stations pursuant to authority contained in the act entitled 'An act to authorize the President to provide housing facilities for war needs, approved May 16, 1918,'" and insert: "At ordnance stations at Indianhead, Md., Dahlgren, Va., and South Charleston, W. Va."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the beginning of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "During the fiscal year 1925."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? That does not change the $9,000,000?

Mr. FRENCH. No; it is limited to the coming fiscal year.

Mr. BLANTON. That is all that it could be limited to anyway. This is an appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the amount is not in dispute. The Clerk inadvertently read the amount.

Mr. BLANTON. That amount was not put in by the conferees?

Mr. FRENCH. No; that amount is not in dispute at all.

Mr. BLANTON. That is a Senate amendment?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes. The Senate amendment limits the expenditure to the three places mentioned.

Mr. BLANTON. It was not put in by the House. In other words, the conferees agreed on it?

Mr. FRENCH. No; the House put in substantially that, but referred to it by referring to the act of May 16, 1918.

Mr. BLANTON. But did not authorize the expenditure of $9,000,000?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes. But let me say to the gentleman the effect of the Senate amendment is to limit it to these three places. If the Senate amendment had not been included, while members of the committee did not think the Navy Department would abuse the appropriation, the Senate felt that it should be tied down specifically to the three places.

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to ask the gentleman a very pertinent question: After the ideas of the House conferees are carried like they want them carried in respect to this conference, how much more will there have been added to this bill by the Senate?

Mr. FRENCH. One hundred and sixty-four thousand dollars.

Mr. BLANTON. One hundred and sixty-four thousand dollars?

Mr. FRENCH. Above the amount as passed by the Senate.

Mr. BLANTON. I am talking about the amount as passed by the House. How many million dollars have been added to this bill by the Senate in addition to the amount which it carried when it passed the House?

Mr. FRENCH. Three million ninety-two thousand two hundred dollars.

Mr. BLANTON. And that is about the case with respect to every bill that is sent from the Senate.

Mr. FRENCH. Well, let me say this: The Senate was very generous to the House naval appropriation bill and did not increase the items that some had feared the Senate might.

Mr. BLANTON. It increased it nearly three and a half million dollars.

Mr. FRENCH. That is true.

Mr. BLANTON. That is a small item, a mere bagatelle, and is not worthy of consideration.

Mr. FRENCH. It is not a mere bagatelle; but, on the other hand, the Senate is a coordinate branch of the machinery of our Government.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of New York. The gentleman has repudiated the expert standing of Mr. Shearer, who was quoted on the floor here as a naval authority, and has accepted the authority of some foreign officer on the condition of our Navy. Has the conference added to the amount in this bill all it could to bring our Navy up to the condition which it should be in, based on the strictures made upon our own Navy by our own admiral, Admiral Coontz?

Mr. FRENCH. The conferees did not have legislative authority. What we had to do was to consider the bill with respect to the action of the two Houses.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Did you do all you could under your authority to meet the criticism of Admiral Coontz?

Mr. FRENCH. We could have allowed items to stay in that were put in by the Senate, and the Senate could have permitted items that we put in to remain, but which they struck out. That would have modified the sum total. But I have no doubt the conferees carried out substantially the ideas of both Houses. But as to discrediting the statement of Mr. Shearer, I did not discredit him; he discredited himself in making the wild and extravagant statements that he made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Idaho.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 28: Page 29, line 2, strike out "Provided further, That no part of the funds appropriated by this act shall be utilized for the pay of any officer or man who may recruit or enlist any boy under the age of 21 years without the written consent of the parent or guardian, if any, of such boy for such enlistment."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Idaho moves to recede and concur with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows: "Provided further, That hereafter upon the presentation of satisfactory evidence as to his age and upon application for discharge by his parent or guardian presented to the Secretary of the Navy within 60 days after the date of his enlistment any man enlisted after July 1, 1924, in the naval service or Marine Corps under 21 years of age, who was enlisted without the written consent of his parent or guardian, if any, shall be discharged for his own convenience."

Mr. FRENCH. The effect of the amendment is to provide that hereafter, upon satisfactory evidence as to his age, upon application for discharge of a young man under 21 years of age, if made by his parent or guardian and presented to the Secretary of the Navy within 60 days of enlistment in either the Navy or Marine Corps, he shall be discharged by the Navy Department.

Let me say that this language is the language which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], together with the ranking minority member of the committee [Mr. BYRNS], and myself worked out, with the exception of the words "July 1, 1924," and also the words "the Marine Corps." Those two minor provisions of the bill I submitted at a later date to the gentleman from Texas, as I think he will recall, and I understood they met his approval.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Why put in those words "July 1, 1924"?

Mr. FRENCH. There are some 65 different enlistment stations of the Navy throughout the country and a number of Marine Corps enlistment stations, and some 600 or 700 officers and men engaged in recruiting work. The time between now and July 1 is very short, and the Navy felt that from the standpoint of the service the time would be inadequate within which to prepare forms and instructions for the government of the service, and that a definite date to begin would be more satisfactory.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. And this bill, of course, applies to the fiscal year 1925, and the fiscal year begins on July 1, 1924.

Mr. BLANTON. I move to strike out the words "July 1, 1924."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON to the amendment offered by Mr. FRENCH——

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I did not yield to the gentleman to offer an amendment. I yielded to him for a remark that I thought he wanted to make.

Mr. BLANTON. There are 435 Members here. Does the gentleman intend to preclude us from offering amendments? We have a right to be heard as well as the gentleman. We have as much responsibility as he has as a Member of Congress. I presumed when he yielded to me he yielded to me for all purposes. I do not believe in filibustering, and I am not going to waste any time. If the gentleman does not want this amendment all right.

Mr. FRENCH. I am glad to have it voted on, but I am anxious to hurry on with the bill. That is all.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas withdraws his motion. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas, the author of the amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, you will recall when this bill was originally before the House I offered an amendment which was adopted, providing that no part of these funds should be used to enlist boys under 21 years of age. The effect of that amendment was to continue simply for one year. It was only given as a limitation on the appropriation. It would expire on July 1, 1925, and then we would have to go through that process each year to put on that limitation.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. And it would apply only after July 1 this year.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Yes; it would apply only after July 1 of this year, because this bill is only effective after July 1. The bill went into conference, and the conferees came back and talked to me, I suppose, because I had offered the amendment. I know of no other reason. They asked if we could get together on the proposition. We agreed among ourselves that if we could adopt an amendment making this permanent law, so that we would not have to make a fight each year, we would be willing to concede something to the Senate. So the result of that conference was that this amendment was proposed, which provides that any boy under 21 years of age who enlists without his parents' consent can be discharged upon the application of his parents and furnishing evidence in proof of his age, providing the application for discharge was made within 60 days.

Now, that is a very short time, it is true, but these recruits, after they have spent about 60 days in training, are sent to their ships and may be sent to sea, and it would hardly be practicable for the Government to enlist a boy, train him, and then send him over to Europe, have him discharged in Europe and sent back home at the Government's expense. So I rather reluctantly agreed to the 60-day policy. But on the whole I believe this is a good amendment, and since it makes it permanent law, I think the House should agree to it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I understand the gentleman's interest in it, but the trouble is that a lot of these youngsters run away from home at 17 and 18, and I have had cases where the families did not know about their being in the Navy in 60 days.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. That is the difficulty, and I realize it, but on account of having to get an agreement with the Senate, I thought it would be better to accept it and amend it sometime later.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Idaho.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 30, page 33, after line 15, insert: "The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to transfer from the naval supply account fund an amount not exceeding $100,000 for the establishment of a permanent special working fund, which shall be charged with the net proceeds of all sales of surplus and condemned stores, with refunds to bidders at sales and to special depositors, and with all labor, overhead, material, and services incident to work done not chargeable to naval appropriations, and which shall be credited with all funds received as payment or advances for surplus stores, for condemned stores, and for all expenses incident to work not chargeable to naval appropriations."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Idaho moves that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 31, page 34 of the bill: "The Paymaster General of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to expend from the naval supply account, without reimbursement to the naval supply account fund, issues made by order of the Secretary of the Navy pursuant to the directions of the President for the relief of sufferers in Japan following the earthquake which occurred September 1, 1923."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Idaho moves that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 40, page 39 of the bill, after line 23, insert: "Quay wall extension (limit of cost, $300,000), $150,000; repair and fitting out pier (limit of cost, $1,190,000), $250,000."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Idaho moves that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Repair and fitting out pier (limit of cost $1,190,000), $250,000; in all, $350,000."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Idaho.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 43, page 40, line 11: Marine railway accessories house, $20,000; roads and walks, extension, $35,000; in all, $233,000.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Idaho moves that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Marine railway accesories house, $20,000; in all, $198,000."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Idaho.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 44, page 40, after line 14: Rebuilding power and refrigerating plant, $65,000; rebuilding station wharf, $12,000; in all, $87,000.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Idaho moves that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 45, page 41, after line 12, insert: Naval fuel depot, San Diego, Calif.: Storage for war heads, $60,000.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Idaho moves that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 48, page 41, line 25: Dock gear and paint shop, $35,000; storage for torpedoes, $140,000; in all, $190,000.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I move the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Idaho moves that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Storage for torpedoes, $140,000; in all, $155,000."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Idaho.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 50, page 42, after line 4, insert: "Supply depot, Marine Corps, San Francisco, Calif.: Construction of building, including grading of site, $500,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to transfer to the Navy Department a tract of land situated in the city of San Francisco, Calif., consisting of four 50-vara lots fronting 275 feet on the north side of Harrison Street, and extending back, bounded by Spear and Main Streets 275 feet, for use as a site for the building herein authorized."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Idaho moves that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Supply depot, Marine Corps, San Francisco, Calif.: Construction of extensible building, including grading of site, $500,000, no part of such sum to be obligated until the Secretary of the Navy shall have determined that it is adequate completely to construct, equip, and otherwise make said building ready for occupancy and use, including the preparation and final conditioning of site: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to transfer to the Navy Department a tract of land situated in the city of San Francisco, Calif., consisting of four 50-vara lots fronting 275 feet on the north side of Harrison Street, and extending back, bounded by Spear and Main Streets 275 feet, for use as a site for the building herein authorized."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Idaho.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 51, page 43, strike out "in all, $14,590,000" and insert: "For new construction, buildings, and improvements at air stations at a total cost not to exceed $410,000, as follows: Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, $173,000; Coco Solo, Canal Zone, $237,000; Pensacola, Fla., $150,000; in all, $15,150,000."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Idaho moves that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 2 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out "$410,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$560,000."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I did not catch the purport of that amendment.

Mr. FRENCH. The purport of the amendment is to provide for a water-supply system at Pensacola.

It includes the item of $150,000 in the total of $560,000; it corrects an error, that is all.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman leaves the item as to the air station at Pearl Harbor the same as it is.

Mr. FRENCH. Yes; and at Coco Solo.

Mr. RAKER. That is not changed.

Mr. FRENCH. No; and I would say that as to Pensacola a little later on, either in the next amendment or the subsequent one, we shall offer certain limitations that we feel ought to be attached to the expenditure.

Mr. RAKER. I did not understand that last statement. The Pearl Harbor improvement, as I understand it, is left as it is.

Mr. FRENCH. Yes; and the same thing is true at Coco Solo.

Mr. WINGO. As I understand the change, you merge the principal item into another item.

Mr. FRENCH. Yes; to correct the total and to include in the total the Pensacola item.

Mr. WINGO. The substance of it is the same as the Senate amendment.

Mr. FRENCH. Yes; as a matter of fact, it is the correction of an error.

Mr. WINGO. Yes. In other words, the proposal is agreed to and you perfect the language and put on restrictions and limitations that are thought necessary.

Mr. FRENCH. That is correct.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Has the gentleman been informed that this House will be asked to authorize the appointment of a select committee to consider a joint air service? Does the gentleman know where he is drifting? Does the gentleman know it is thought desirable to have the question of a joint air service between the Army and the Navy inquired into? How much money does the amendment appropriate for Coco Solo?

Mr. FRENCH. For Coco Solo, $237,000.

Mr. BUTLER. What are they going to do with that there? I think they could get along with less money there. We heard a lot of testimony on it and upon the development of these air fields.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question there?

Mr. BUTLER. I have not any time. The time belongs to others.

The gentleman is always very careful, but a good many of us have it in our heads that there might be a very, very great saving if we could have a joint operating service between the Army and the Navy at several of these points, and this is one of them, and now if you are going to spend a lot of money down there, we might as well abandon the whole thing. Therefore it is desirable always, I would suggest, for us to keep in touch with each other. I sat for three or four or five days and listened to a discussion of this matter and now it comes in and is to be disposed of in a few minutes. I am through with the whole business.

Mr. FRENCH. Let me say to the gentleman——

Mr. BUTLER. We have been trying to save some money so we can get some ships and get this Navy off of the land, and now the gentleman's committee comes in here with these great big appropriations to put the Navy on the land. If we listen to them and concede to them all they ask, we will have this whole Navy on the land and they will put the ships on the land before they get through with it. I want ships that will float and not these big naval stations. We have been listening and listening for 45 days to a discussion upon one station. I want the money for the ships.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Let me first refer to the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the naval legislative committee. The conferees did not have authority to consider the matter to which the gentleman directed attention. The question is raised at this point and projected into the problem by reason of the fact that both the Army and the Navy have air stations that are adjacent.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; and we are endeavoring to learn whether we can not join them. The Army wants four or five or six million dollars there, and we want to know whether it is not possible to have a select committee appointed to sit perhaps during the vacation period to determine how we can save money by having joint operation, not joint control; we are not having anything to do with that. I only want to suggest to my friend that there is no use having these naval officials coming here and detaining us for days listening to testimony and then going to the gentleman's subcommittee and detaining them for days and then going over to the Senate and having these things put into the bill. They can go to the Senate first hereafter, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. In just a moment. I want to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the conferees on the part of the House proposed that this money should not be expended either at Coco Solo or at Pearl Harbor unless and upon an arrangement agreeable to the President of the United States.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand that.

Mr. FRENCH. We did that in the absence of the very arrangement to which the gentleman refers and which he would like to see worked out. I am with him. I think we ought to have a working understanding so that we can expend whatever money is to be expended most economically, most efficiently, and so there will not be duplication or overlapping of services.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the gentleman, who works very, very hard and is just as economical as I would like to be, in my judgment, the time has come when we should make an examination of these different places. The Navy now has more than 700 pieces of ground that they either own or rent, and the time has come when we should select these fields in connection with the Army and have joint operation and save a lot of the expense that we are now subjected to for the Navy on the land when we need ships so badly. But I am not raising any question about it. Pearl Harbor will have to be built. It is our outward defense, but we spent days and days listening to the evidence, and now it is all wiped out by going to the Senate and getting the appropriation. I only want to repeat what I have already stated, that hereafter when anything is asked of the committee over which I now preside I shall direct them to go to the Senate and go at once.

Mr. FRENCH. The gentleman asked a moment ago how the money for Coco Solo and Pearl Harbor is to be expended. I have the itemization here. For Coco Solo the amount asked for is $237,000, allocated as follows: Seaplane hangar, $147,000; concrete runway, bulkhead, and beach improvements, $30,000; hydraulic fill, $50,000; and for water, sewage, and electric distribution system, $10,000.

For Pearl Harbor the total asked for is $173,000, allocated as follows: Seaplane hangar, $140,000; beach improvements and runway, $33,000.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What the gentleman from Pennsylvania says is absolutely correct. The mistakes we have been making since the war is to appropriate funds for aviation for the Army and to appropriate for aviation for the Navy, and as long as we continue to appropriate for them we are getting nowhere. The trouble is that if we continue to appropriate for the Air Service in this way a great many officers seated in comfortable chairs in their office will not take the air. They do not want to do that. I suggest that we stop appropriating until they get together and develop an Air Service for the good of the country and not for the comfort of the present officers.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FRENCH. I will though I am anxious to get through.

Mr. RAKER. Referring to the air situation at Pearl Harbor, it is on an island. The Navy and the Army are on the same island with only a dividing imaginary line between them. The discussion that they should be combined is a good deal of imagination; they use the entire equipment for the efficiency of the Army and for efficiency of the Navy, and the only question is whether we should keep both so that we can have a good Air Service.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Idaho to recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follow:

Senate amendment 52, line 17, after the word "aeroplanes" insert: "Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to consider, ascertain, adjust, determine, and pay out of this appropriation the amounts due on claims for damages which have occurred or may occur to private property growing out of the operations of naval aircraft, where such claim does not exceed the sum of $250: Provided further, That all claims adjusted under this authority during the fiscal year shall be reported in detail to the Congress by the Secretary of the Navy."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FRENCH moves to recede and concur with an amendment as follows: After the word "Provided," in the first line of said amendment, insert "further."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Idaho.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment 53: On page 44, at the top of the page insert: "The Secretary of the Navy is authorized, when directed by the President, to accept on behalf of the United States, free from encumbrances and without cost to the United States, the title to such lands as he may deem necessary or desirable in the vicinity of Pensacola, Fla., for use as a site and right of way for the construction and maintenance of a pumping station, wells, and pipe line to provide a suitable water supply for the United States naval air station, Pensacola, Fla."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FRENCH moved to recede and concur with an amendment as follows: After the word "Florida," in the last line of said amendment, insert the following: a semicolon, "and such additional water supply is hereby authorized: Provided, That the sum of $150,000 hereinbefore appropriated for new construction buildings and improvements at the air station, Pensacola, Fla., shall not be available until the Secretary of the Navy shall determine that in his judgment a water system capable of furnishing an adequate supply of water for such station can be completed within the limit of the funds herein provided, and until the Secretary of the Navy, at the direction of the President, has accepted the conveyance of land and rights of way as herein authorized."

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Idaho: Can the gentleman determine how much in the end this is going to cost?

Mr. FRENCH. We have fixed the limit at $150,000.

Mr. BUTLER. I know, but the gentleman knows that we can raise the limit.

Mr. FRENCH. We have directed that none of it shall be expended until it is determined.

Mr. BUTLER. Did you learn how much they would like to have?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes; this was figured on the amount they asked for, and it was the judgment of the conferees that it was a very liberal figure. We figured it on the basis of material, of boring the wells, of putting in the power plant, and from the several angles we could not see how it could approach the amount asked for, and yet we thought we were justified in leaving it at the figures we have attached to the amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. I want to say to the House that you might as well abolish the legislative Naval Affairs Committee. This bill is packed full of limitations, and here comes another. I did not vote for the rule that took the authority away from the Naval Affairs Committee.

Mr. FRENCH. This is a limitation rather than legislation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Idaho to recede and concur with an amendment.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITHWICK] may proceed and speak on the amendment we have just adopted.

Mr. WINGO. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment 54: After line 18, on page 44, insert: "No part of any sum in this act appropriated shall be expended in the pay or allowances of any commissioned officer of the Navy detailed for duty as professor or instructor at the United States Naval Academy to perform the duties which were performed by civilian professors or instructors on January 1, 1922, whenever the number of civilian professors or instructors employed in such duties shall be less than 65, exclusive of masters and instructors in swordsmanship and physical training: Provided, That in reducing the number of civilian professors no existing contract shall be violated: Provided further, That no civilian professor, associate or assistant professor, or instructor shall be dismissed, except for sufficient cause, without six months' notice to him that his services will be no longer needed."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FRENCH moves to recede and concur with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Until June 30, 1925, if for any cause the number of civilian professors or instructors employed in the United States Naval Academy, on January 1, 1924, shall be reduced, after such latter date no commissioned officers of the Navy shall be detailed or allowed to teach the subject or subjects theretofore taught by said civilian professors or instructors whose service in connection with the academy may have been so terminated: Provided, That in reducing the number of civilian professors no existing contract shall be violated: Provided further, That no civilian professor, associate or assistant professor, or instructor shall be dismissed, except for sufficient cause, without six months' notice to him that his services will be no longer needed."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Idaho to recede and concur with an amendment.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman please explain the effect of the amendment?

Mr. FRENCH. In brief, the effect of the amendment is to modify the first paragraph of the language inserted by the Senate, which carries the requirement touching the employment of officer members of the faculty in lieu of civilian members of the faculty after January 1, 1922. We felt that that was incongruous. We felt that the date ought to be brought up to January 1, 1924; and I think the language employed is perhaps a little happier than the language in the current law, used by the Senate. In substance, I have indicated the only change which was made in the amendment.

Mr. DENISON. As I heard it read, there is no limitation at all upon the number that can be dismissed up to January, 1925.

Mr. FRENCH. Oh, yes. We did not fix the number in the amendment for this reason: The academy will need to operate on a smaller basis—a less number of midshipmen during the year 1925. There will be probably 400 less midshipmen next year than this. That adjudication can not be made satisfactorily unless the faculty may be reduced, and we have provided in this amendment that no officer shall be placed on the faculty to take the place of a civilian in work done on January 1, 1924. The gentleman would not want to keep civilians or officer members of the faculty there when their services were not needed.

Mr. DENISON. Certainly not.

Mr. FRENCH. Therefore we felt that we ought not to fix in the bill a limit as to number of faculty members such as was in the bill last year.

Mr. DENISON. The effect of the amendment proposed by the gentleman is that no naval officer shall be detailed to take the place of any civilian professor who is discharged or let out at any time?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes; that states the proposition.

Mr. DENISON. Then, taking the number of civilian professors that were there on the 1st of January this year, they can not be replaced by any naval officer?

Mr. FRENCH. They may be reduced if their work is not needed, but they may not be replaced.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. I want to ask the chairman of the subcommittee the same question that I asked him when the bill was originally before the House for consideration, and to which he gave a very definite and clear answer. At that time the chairman of the subcommittee stated that there was nothing in this bill to indicate any intention to remove the graduate school from the Naval Academy to any other place. Does that same situation exist to-day, or does the Senate attempt some change in that regard?

Mr. FRENCH. No; the Senate has not modified the bill in that respect.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. As far as the chairman of the subcommittee knows, from this bill, there is no intention to remove the graduate school from the Naval Academy to any place else?

Mr. FRENCH. No; and the Navy Department assured me that I, as chairman of the subcommittee, would be notified of any report of the commission studying the situation before any action is taken.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. I am very glad to hear that. That is entirely in the interest of efficiency and economy. If this school were removed, it would be against efficiency and economy.

Mr. LINTHICUM. As I understand the report of the commission appointed with reference to this postgraduate school, it has already been made to the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. FRENCH. It may have been made to the Secretary, but it has not come up in any definite way where action is contemplated, else they would have notified our subcommittee.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I understand that the report has already been made.

Mr. FRENCH. It may have been submitted to the Secretary.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I note that the bill provides that no civilian professor shall be replaced by an officer after January 1, 1924, for work being performed by a civilian officer on January 1, 1924. Have any civilian professors been replaced by officers since January 1, 1924?

Mr. FRENCH. I think not. I have not heard that statement made, and the law under which the Navy is operating the Naval Academy limits the replacement to the work that was done by those other than civilians on January 1, 1922.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The point I am trying to make is that it might have been possible that a certain number of civilian professors had been dropped since January 1, 1924, and officers appointed in their places, which would continue under this bill.

Mr. FRENCH. It has not been brought to our attention, and I think we would have heard of it if such had taken place.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. And if any condition such as the gentleman suggests is true this would correct it.

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Is this postgraduate school established by authority of law at Annapolis?

Mr. FRENCH. There is general authority in law for carrying forward this type of postgraduate work. The law itself does not fix the work at Annapolis or any other particular place. As the gentleman will probably recall, there are those who are experts or interested in certain lines who are sent to various technical schools for training. Even a limited number are sent abroad for training, but wherever work can be done efficiently at places like the graduate school at Annapolis the department endeavors to administer the funds available so that training can be had there instead of through paying for tuition for these men in professional or technical schools elsewhere.

Mr. DENISON. My question was preliminary to this one: Can the Navy Department move this school from Annapolis without an act of Congress authorizing it?

Mr. FRENCH. My judgment——

Mr. LINTHICUM. I will answer the gentleman that that is in the power of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. FRENCH. I have no doubt that is true, but let me say that is the point I had in mind when I asked the department to notify our subcommittee in the event any such action was contemplated and we were assured that that would be done.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The committee by the appropriations which they have made for that purpose have in effect indicated it is not the purpose or the desire of Congress that it shall be removed.

Mr. FRENCH. The appropriation is made, of course, on that understanding. We can not write into law every understanding or you would have in this bill a volume that would be an inch thick, so we have these understandings with the department and I am sure that, generally speaking, they are respected.

Mr. RAKER. Have the civilian professors and inspectors been increased or diminished by this provision?

Mr. FRENCH. Not by this provision. The amount carried in the bill is less than for the current year for the reason that we are decreasing for next year the number of midshipmen by about 400.

Mr. RAKER. Does the effect of this provision increase them or decrease them?

Mr. FRENCH. The effect of the limitation?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. FRENCH. The effect of the limitation is not either to increase or decrease, but prevents the ratio from being changed. You might say it is to prevent the substituting of official instructors or teachers for civilian instructors and teachers.

Mr. RAKER. Is that the purpose to keep out as many official instructors or commissioned officers as possible?

Mr. FRENCH. Oh, no; but the thought for years has been that there should be a limited number of civilian instructors and professors there, and a few years ago it was felt that probably it was swinging too much toward the officers, and the House put in a limitation. The committee in reporting the bill to the House struck out the limitation, and it was restated on the Senate side. Now, we have brought in an amendment which is a compromise and much more workable than the Senate amendment but carrying out the general thought.

Mr. RAKER. Equalizing the situation now between the commissioned officers and civilian professors and instructors. Is that about right?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes; that would be a way of expressing it. It prevents substituting officers for civilian instructors.

Mr. RAKER. Has the gentleman at his fingers' end the number of civilian professors and instructors at the academy now?

Mr. FRENCH. Approximately 87. That includes certain athletic instructors, 15.

Mr. RAKER. How many commissioned officers?

Mr. FRENCH. Approximately 120.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Idaho.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 55: On page 50 of the bill, after line 23, insert: "No money appropriated by this act shall be expended for tranportation on foreign vessels of officers, enlisted men, or employees under the jurisdiction of the Navy Department without a certificate from the Secretary of the Navy or other official authority designated by him that there are no American vessels then available for the transportation of such officers, enlisted men, or employees."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur.

Mr. BRITTEN. I would like to know if the committee had before it the figures indicating the amount of money expended on this kind of travel on foreign ships by officers or employees of the Navy Department?

Mr. FRENCH. This was a Senate amendment, and the House committee did not have those figures.

Mr. BRITTEN. I will say to the gentleman, I am very glad this limitation is being carried on an appropriation bill. It should have been in effect a long time ago, because it has been the custom not only of naval officers but of ambassadors and ministers and commercial attachés to travel on first-line foreign ships for reasons best known to themselves when on the same day or in a day or two they could have taken American ships. It might not have been as sporty a one or as classy as the French or British ships, but they were not paying their own fare, the Government was paying it; and I think a limitation of this kind should be carried on every appropriation affecting travel, and I am very glad to see it on this bill.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the members of the committee to be patient for a minute. I want to ask the gentleman, because he is well informed—let us turn back to amendment No. 51. I am thinking pretty keenly of what has been done there. Will the gentleman please tell this committee what kind of buildings you have provided for $410,000, and how much these buildings are going to cost? I would like to know the character of these buildings. We have had a little experience——

Mr. YOUNG. Does the gentleman think it is too much or too little?

Mr. BUTLER. Fierce! What kind of buildings are they—officers' houses and quarters?

Mr. FRENCH. No; most of the money will be expended for hangars.

Mr. BUTLER. If for hangars, all right; but if they are going to start officers' houses costing $40,000 for a captain of the Navy, you leave it here and I am going to make some fuss. We have been up against that frequently over here, and we have endeavored to limit it house by house.

Mr. FRENCH. I have the data right at hand here.

Mr. BUTLER. When the gentleman revises his statement let him add the buildings, so that we may know hereafter how the appropriations are made.

Mr. FRENCH. I will put it in. [See p. 9010.]

Mr. BUTLER. Very well.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. If the gentleman will permit me, it might be due to Admiral Wilson that I make this statement, that this will be in line with what he stated to the committee would be his policy. There were Members of the Senate who called attention to the fact that he might not be there longer than February next year, and they wanted to be assured that his policy would be strictly adhered to, and they wished that what they were given to understand would be the policy should be inserted in the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Idaho.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 59: Page 54, line 19, strike out "$7,500,000" and insert "$8,450,000."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho moves that the House recede and concur. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 60: Page 55, line 2, after the word "treaty" insert "toward the construction of one submarine authorized by the naval act of August 29, 1916."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho moves to recede and concur with an amendment. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "toward the construction of one fleet submarine (mine-laying type) heretofore authorized, to have the highest practicable speed and greatest desirable radius of action, and to cost not to exceed $5,300,000 for construction and machinery and $850,000 for armor, armament, and ammunition, and the Secretary of the Navy shall have prepared plans and estimates of cost of a scouting submarine and a submarine capable of accompanying the fleet, each to have the highest practicable speed and greatest desirable radius of action, such plans and estimates to be in readiness for submission to Congress on the first day of the next regular session."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Was this recommended by the legislative committee?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; in 1916.

Mr. FRENCH. This is part of the 1916 program, and the submarine that the Senate provided for is to be a submarine of the mine-laying type, that does not require propulsion necessary for the wider-ranged fleet submarine. We are providing for the construction of one mine-laying submarine under the provisions of the Senate amendment, together with the experimentation looking to the development of an engine adequate for a cruiser type of fleet submarine as provided for by the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

FOSTER DWIGHT COBURN

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD with reference to the death of a great Kansan, Foster Dwight Coburn.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago the Associated Press announced the death of Foster Dwight Coburn, in Topeka, Kans. Inasmuch as none of the distinguished Representatives from Kansas has called attention to the home-going of this outstanding citizen, I desire here and now to speak into the records of this House a few words in recognition and appreciation of this man, who was really great, according to all the standards by which true merit and real greatness are measured. He was not of my State nor of my political faith. But for 20 years he has been an outstanding figure in the realm of American agriculture. I and thousands of others have learned from him wholesome facts in relation to agriculture and animal industry.

Perchance he did not achieve greatness as the world understands that term, but no one who is familiar with his long and useful life will deny that he made a valuable and lasting contribution to those forces that promote the public good and spell the betterment of mankind. As the head of the Kansas State Department of Agriculture, as a dirt farmer, as a writer on agricultural subjects, as a farseeing agricultural expert and seer, and as a militant crusader in commendable agricultural activities and to establish agriculture on a sound economic basis, F. D. Coburn has earned the gratitude of millions to whose welfare his life was dedicated and to whose betterment he has so materially contributed.

In seasons of calamity and distress he gave wise counsel and sympathetic encouragement. In times of prosperity he advised moderation and conservatism, and cautioned against impulsive speculation and ill-considered activities.

His unfailing storehouse of wisdom and common sense was available at all times to the people of Kansas and the great West. He was the great agricultural emancipator of Kansas. His crusade for diversified farming, for alfalfa culture, for increased dairying and poultry production, for better livestock, for simple and sensible marketing systems, not only transformed and rehabilitated the agriculture of Kansas, but overstepped State lines and wholesomely altered and influenced the agricultural activities of the Nation.

F. D. Coburn was the one great outstanding apostle of alfalfa, by the ever-increasing culture of which millions have been added to the wealth of our Nation. This valuable forage plant, a native of Asia, was cultivated in Europe long before the song of the angels echoed over the Judean hills. Alfalfa was introduced into South America by the Spaniards. Its first cultivation in the United States was in California prior to the Civil War. Probably Mr. Coburn did more than any dozen other men to demonstrate the usefulness and value of this plant to the American farmer.

Though born in Wisconsin and residing for a brief season in Missouri, his active life was largely spent in Kansas, to the upbuilding of which State he materially contributed. Kansas did not and could not monopolize the valuable services he rendered to the age in which he lived. Measured by real achievements and enduring accomplishments, Foster Dwight Coburn was the outstanding Kansan of the present generation.

WORK OF COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by having printed the speech made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS] before the American Merchant Marine Association as to the work of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries in the last 12 years—his own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted I insert the following speech by Hon. GEORGE W. EDMONDS, of Pennsylvania, before the American Merchant Marine Association, at New York, May 15, 1924, on the work of the Merchant Marine Committee of the House during the past 12 years, and suggestions for the future operation of the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation:

BANQUET OF AMERICAN MARINE ASSOCIATION, MAY 15, NEW YORK

As this is probably the last opportunity I shall have for addressing a body of shipping men as a Member of Congress, I am constrained to trespass upon your time a little to review the past 12 or 13 years' work of the Congress along the lines of interest to you and to ask your indulgence while I give my views of what should be done in the future to retain the hold we have on our export and import trade, thrown into our hands through the exigencies of the World War.

It was in 1911 to 1913 that the Merchant Marine Committee of the House made what is probably one of the most complete investigations of the shipping business ever made by Congress. An investigation directed more at the basic and underlying reasons for the decadence of the American merchant marine than at the actual physical cost of operations. The outstanding result of this investigation was the recognition of conferences and agreements between lines as a necessity in order to control destructive competition, give good service, and to prevent monopoly.

Soon after the war started in Europe, spurred by necessity for shipping facilities, the Merchant Marine Committee prepared and brought into the law the shipping act of 1916, the principal features of which were:

1. Creation of the Shipping Board.

2. Creation of a corporation or corporations to operate merchant vessels.

3. Defined the investigating powers of the Shipping Board, and directed investigation in all lines of endeavor connected with shipping.

4. Recognized conferences and agreements between shipping operations, but arranged for such publicity and restrictions as were deemed necessary to protect the shipping public from discriminations.

5. Prohibited what were termed fighting ships.

6. Provided conditions to govern shipping during war and other emergencies.

7. Provided penalties for foreign shipping who, by agreement or by other methods, discriminated against American shipping.

Following the passage of this act, owing to the peculiar conditions prevailing during the war, Congress through its Merchant Marine Committee in the House and the Commerce Committee of the Senate took upon itself the task of assisting in investigating and legislating upon some of the subjects delegated to the Shipping Board by the shipping act of 1916. There were quite a few subjects touched upon, one of the most important being the marine insurance. This investigation led to the arrangement between all the marine insurance companies in the United States to prepare syndicated policies covering the hull risks, and which I hope some day to see extended to cargo risks. Conditions prevailing, with the London Salvage Co. in practical control of repairs and Lloyd's Bureau in the same position regarding surveys, lend to the committee encouragement of the American bureau of shipping and the American bureau of salvage, both of which institutions now occupy a commanding position among the world's institutions of their kind.

The creation of a secured mortgage which would attract investment also had the attention of the committee, also the advisability of load-line legislation. All of this work was carried on by the committee, besides the numerous questions raised by the war necessities, and many minor subjects which were demanding continual attention.

In 1920 the Merchant Marine Committee of the House prepared the basis of what is now known as the "Jones Act," which was intended to clean up the chaotic condition created by the war and to declare our policy as to the many merchant marine ships now in possession of the Government. The constructive features of this bill were as follows:

1. Declaration of intent to build up a privately owned merchant marine.

2. Port facilities and development investigation ordered.

3. Provided a construction fund to be used to build up such ships as were necessary to balance the fleet for either commercial or war purposes.

4. Placed the Philippine Islands under the coastwise laws when proper facilties were adequate to handle the business.

5. Arranged for tax deductions to meet changed conditions.

6. Arranged for the use of the mail service to build up American-flag shipping.

7. Allowed cargo vessels to carry a limited number of passengers under certain conditions.

8. Recognized the syndicate form of marine insurance.

9. Arranged for a new type of ship mortgages known as "preferred mortgages."

10. Arranged when proper facilities existed that special import and export rates of American railroads should apply to American-flag vessels only.

11. Arranged for the abolishing of treaties which prevented the use of discriminating duties in favor of American vessels.

During this same session of Congress the important suits in admiralty act was prepared and passed, and since that time many different subjects have occupied the attention of the committee, many of which were included in the subsidy bill which, unfortunately, failed, carrying down with it the other proposed aids which would have been so valuable as assistance even without the subsidy.

Recently the attention of the committee has been brought to the pilferage evil, and the necessity of Federal attention to this subject, and also to the world's movement for a uniform and simplified bill of lading, both of which subjects are of great importance to successful ship operation. The destruction of American cargo owing to improper packing and lack of knowledge of this subject, lead at the request of the Merchant Marine Committee to an appropriation to the Department of Commerce for a full investigation of this subject, the results of which will be made public in a few weeks by a very complete book of instructions covering commodities and facilities. Recently, and as a result of investigation, there was passed by the House, and is now before the Senate, the bill which when made a law should provide for our having from 60 to 100 motor ships, the last word in economical operation.

During this period the committee has also made three separate investigations of the subject of radio communication, a general bill now being before Congress which carefully protects all the different interests affected.

It has been a source of great disappointment to us all that the material aids contained in the Jones bill and looked forward to so hopefully by us, of the discriminating duties, expansion of coastwise law to the Philippines, and the application of the import and export rates of railroads to American ships have not been placed in operation, and yet when we consider the disturbed conditions in the world and the impossibility of securing the abrogation of 22 or 24 treaties, containing many different subjects, many of which would lead to disturbing consequences if abrogated without being replaced immediately, we can readily realize that the matter needs careful handling and much consideration by our diplomatic authorities, and diplomatic work of this character is very slow in its consummation.

As to the application of the coastwise laws to the Philippines, owing to the present demand of the Filipinos for independence, it would be exceedingly unwise and possibly costly to press a subject which of necessity would imply to them sovereignty.

The real available aid to our American shipping contained in the Jones Act is the application of important export railroad rates to American bottoms; there could be no question of its application almost immediately had the sections in the subsidy bill for the coordination of rail and water shipping been passed. As it is to-day, section 28 stands without the machinery prepared to put it into operation. Let us hope that this defect will be cured and this substantial benefit to American shipping will be given to it.

This subject of preferential railroad rates applied to shipping was considered at the Geneva conference by a convention held for the regulation of maritime ports throughout the world, and was condemned by them as unjustly discriminating, which view was vigorously upheld by the Italian and Japanese delegations and strongly supported by Sir H. L. Smith, head of the British delegation. So strongly did they believe in this doctrine that they signed up at once for their respective countries. But we have yet to hear that the discriminatory customs duties levied against American goods shipped in American ships from American ports in favor of American goods shipped in Canadian ships and railroads by Australia have been removed; and as for the Japanese, we have yet to hear that the preferential rates on Japanese railroads for Japanese ships have been abrogated. Here is a cablegram just received from Manila, dated April 30: "Now here for conference, brings information from reliable source, Dairen, that Japanese vessels are given flat rate of 55 sen per ton for inward and outward cargo, whereas foreign vessels are charged 65 sen inward and 70 sen outward."

Nor, again, do we hear that the Italian Government has in any way modified her regulations regarding emigration or immigration. So I feel that those gentlemen who so deeply fear discriminations had better look into the many small and devious methods used by them and clean up their own house before criticizing their neighbors.

Britain boasts of her championship of the freedom of commerce between nations, of her desire to see the ships of all nations treated equally in all ports, of her freedom of limiting her coastwise trade to her own nationals, and yet uses discriminatory export duties in her colonies to keep the trade well in hand for herself; even the mandatories she received as an outcome of the Great War have acquired this habit under her guidance.

Leaving the past, what should Congress do in the future to benefit and place this great industry and national necessity upon a stable basis? Passing over the legislation which common business sense should dictate, like the uniform bill of lading proposition, there are three great legislative measures, separate and distinct from each other, which should have its attention. The first is to pass a bill—which should need but little discussion—containing the aids outside of the subsidy but contained in the subsidy bill. It would include such subjects as 50 per cent of the immigration in American vessels, Army and Navy transport of both officials and freight to be done in private vessels, Federal supervision of pilferage, load lines for vessels in the foreign trade, necessary changes in the preferred mortgage bill, a definition of the home port of a vessel, the necessary legislation to make section 28 of the Jones Act effective, and a union of all of the departments having to do with shipping, now scattered through the various governmental agencies, under one head in the Department of Commerce.

Second, urge the completion of the revision of the navigation laws now under way in the Shipping Board, and investigate the proposed changes carefully and as rapidly as possible, and then pass them into permanent law as quickly as possible.

Third, divorce as nearly as practicable the Shipping Board from the Emergency Fleet Corporation; leave the Shipping Board all the powers necessary under the various acts to supervise and advance the interests of the American merchant marine—and, believe me, there is much constructive work for them to do and many good reasons why, when acting for the advancement of the whole merchant marine, they should not have their opinions biased because of their participation in ship operations. I have never felt that the Shipping Board's position was good from a business standpoint when they were endeavoring to both supervise shipping and they themselves operators.

I am not in favor of abolishing the Shipping Board. They have just as much place in our national business as the Interstate Commerce Commission, and when properly functioning will have mostly semi-judicial work to do which can not fairly be delegated to one man or a department, nor would the decisions of one man be favorably received by contestants in shipping matters. As for the Emergency Fleet Corporation, it should be organized as a separate corporation entirely from the board under a proper name. It should be given the power to form subsidiary corporations; to invite into those corporations the participation of outside capital, as minority holdings, with a view of ultimate purchase of the lines; to make up the deficit in the operations of such lines, as long as the line is desirable; and to dispose of the line, if successful, to the minority holders, or to others, upon favorable terms. While under Government control they should be subject to fair and equitable treatment, giving the utmost freedom of management to these subsidiary companies consistent with good business. This should lead to a considerable reduction in the expense which Government operation, with its cumbersome system, entails, and should lead to the disposal of these companies at an earlier date, with considerable saving to the taxpayers.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I call up a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

NO QUORUM—CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to have a quorum present. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Anderson	Dominick	Kurtz	Quayle
Anthony	Drane	Langley	Reed, W. Va.
Bacharach	Dyer	Larson, Minn.	Salmon
Begg	Edmonds	Lea, Calif.	Sanders, N. Y.

Curry	Kahn	Patterson	Zihlman
Davey	Keller	Peavey
Davis, Tenn.	Kiess	Perlman
Dickstein	Kunz	Phillips

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and twenty-eight Members have answered to their names; a quorum is present.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The doors were reopened.

HOUR OF MEETING

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-night it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-night it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I object.

HAUGEN-M'NARY BILL

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] calls up a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 317

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 9033, entitled "A bill declaring an emergency in respect of certain agricultural commodities, to promote equality between agricultural commodities and other commodities, and for other purposes."

That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 15 hours, and during the general debate the House shall recess each day from 6 o'clock p. m. until 8 o'clock p. m., the time to be equally divided and controlled by those favoring and opposing, the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, this resolution provides for the consideration of H. R. 9033, entitled "A bill declaring an emergency in respect of certain agricultural commodities, to promote equality between agricultural commodities and other commodities, and for other purposes," or what is generally known as the McNary-Haugen bill. The rule also provides for 15 hours of general debate, and it provides that the House shall recess each night during the general debate from 6 o'clock to 8 o'clock. It is expected to run to-night until 11 o'clock and run again on Thursday night until the final conclusion of general debate, in order that we may take up the bill for amendment under the five-minute rule on Friday morning.

Mr. ASWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. ASWELL. It is now 3 o'clock. If the rule were passed and we were required to meet Thursday at 8 o'clock p. m. and complete the debate we would have to run until about 1 or 2 o'clock Friday morning.

Mr. SNELL. The final completion of general debate is not absolutely provided for. We expected to get in to-day a little after 12 o'clock, and if we had done so, general debate could easily have been completed Thursday night, but it may be that we shall not quite finish general debate Thursday night. We tried to get unanimous consent to begin at 11 o'clock Thursday morning in order to permit the passage of the bill, and perhaps we may be able to accomplish that yet.

I will say for the benefit of the House that this rule comes without any objection from the members of the Rules Committee, although it may not necessarily meet the individual views of all the members of that committee. However, we fully appreciate the fact that this is important legislation and that it affects a large part of the citizenship of this country. Anything that is for the benefit of the farming communities we feel should have careful and considerate attention by the Members of this House. We know that the prosperity of the whole country depends very largely on the prosperity of our people, and a proposition in which nearly 30 per cent of the people are engaged is very important to the people of the country, and for that reason we feel this bill should be considered at this time and that the House should have ample and full time to take it up, discuss it, and bring all of its provisions before the House and before the people of the whole country.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time, and I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU].

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield for a question.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Some two or three days ago, in answer to an inquiry, the gentleman from New York said that the disabled service men's hospitalization bill, authorizing additional appropriations of $6,500,000, would be brought up under a special rule within a day or two. Those days have passed, and in the meantime the committee comes in with this rule, which will bring up for consideration a bill that will take about one week's time. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York when the House may expect the bringing in of a rule which will make that important hospitalization bill in order? We have in Minnesota wholly inadequate facilities for both neuropsychiatric cases and tubercular cases, and we are anxious to get to work upon that program.

Mr. SNELL. I will say in answer to the gentleman from Minnesota that unfortunately the "gentleman from New York" can not always control the actions of the House. As far as the "gentleman from New York" is concerned, he intended to bring up that bill last Friday or Saturday, but other business intervened so that it was impossible to do so. This was fixed by agreement as the order of business to-day, and I think we should follow that agreement.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The situation is this: That bill is on the Consent Calendar and we can not consider consent business because of the Barkley-Howell bill, and now it seems to be tied up by putting ahead of it rules making other legislation in order.

Mr. SNELL. It was not intended to have this rule considered ahead of the other one, but we got into a situation we could not control.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. May I ask the gentleman this question? Can we expect reasonably to follow the consideration of this bill with a rule for the hospitalization bill?

Mr. SNELL. I think that probably will be the next rule considered. I am not absolutely certain of it, but I can assure the gentleman it will be brought up in the very near future, but I can not tell definitely when we can do it.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. There is a rule for that bill now.

Mr. SNELL. Yes; there is a rule for it.

HOUR OF MEETING ON THURSDAY

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman from North Carolina pardon me, and will the gentleman yield just a moment?

Mr. SNELL. I yield a moment.

Mr. LONGWORTH. By inadvertence, Mr. Speaker, when I preferred my request for unanimous consent, I said to-morrow when I meant Thursday. I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-morrow it adjourn to meet Thursday at 11 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-morrow it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock on Thursday. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

HAUGEN-M'NARY BILL

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, may I say just this word in addition, with the consent of the gentleman from North Carolina: This rule provides 15 hours of general debate. Of course that argues that if we attempt to close general debate in two days it will be necessary for the House to sit pretty late. I think it is very advisable that we should have Friday and Saturday for the consideration of the bill itself. I merely want to express the hope that gentlemen will be willing to remain later than usual to-night and Thursday night in order to conclude the general debate.

Mr. ASWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. ASWELL. In case of several roll calls, what then?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I would anticipate there would be no roll calls on the adoption of the rule.

Mr. ASWELL. I mean during the next two days.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And I assume no gentleman, under the circumstances, would raise the point of no quorum.

Mr. SNELL. It does not seem that that should be necessary.

Mr. ASWELL. That assumption would not be guaranteed.

Mr. SNELL. I do not know of anybody who is going to filibuster against the consideration of this bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I merely express the hope that gentlemen will not raise the point of no quorum and there will be no roll calls necessary.

Mr. ASWELL. I did not refer to the gentleman from Louisiana, but it is not unlikely that may happen.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I am glad there is a disposition to consider legislation having for its purpose the relief of the agricultural depression in the great Northwest and West. I regret that under the rule only the so-called McNary-Haugen bill can be considered. There is at least one other measure which might well have consideration at this time. I have talked with quite a number of gentlemen, and my belief is the minority is willing to stay here until October, if necessary, in order to give farm-relief legislation a fair chance to be enacted into law. For one I do not think Congress ought to adjourn without making an honest effort to solve this problem. You can not read a paper without seeing accounts of bank failures caused by the disaster to agriculture, yet the talk is we must adjourn by the 7th of June. Of course, it is perfectly futile to talk about dealing with any great subject within that length of time. And I say this Congress has no moral right to adjourn until a sincere, honest effort has been put forth to give some measure of relief to agricultural producers who are forced to accept a market price admittedly less than the cost of production.

The Democratic minority is willing to stay in session until some sane and adequate measure becomes a law. Without any effort to play politics, without any effort to gain any advantage, we are willing to stay here as long as it is necessary in order to deal with this nation-wide subject.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that a large part of my district in Virginia is agricultural. My farmers, like your farmers, need help, and I would welcome an opportunity—in fact, I would embrace an opportunity—to really vote for some sensible, economically sound legislation that might help the farmers. But I have read this bill, Mr.

Speaker, and I have tried to study the report of the majority of the committee, and I have read the minority report, and I do say, frankly and candidly, that I would not vote for this bill if it was a question of retaining my seat in Congress, and I should like to retain it for a while longer.

I regard it as the most revolutionizing piece of legislation I have ever undertaken to read and tried to comprehend. [Applause.] I believe it would be a national calamity if by any possible chance it could ever become a law. I am confident there is not a farmer in my district or in my State who would favor the enactment of this bill if he understood it.

NEED FOR FARM RELIEF

That there is urgent need for farm-relief legislation none will deny. One has but to go out among the farms and their owners and to survey the conditions as he finds them to realize the acute distress existing in certain lines of agriculture. This condition is brought about from a number of concurring causes—inequalities in prices between agricultural products and other commodities, overproduction in certain lines of agriculture, labor conditions, lack of uniform and cooperative systems of marketing, and so forth.

Many and varied proposals have been made in the form of bills introduced which seek to bring relief to the farmer. A score or more of such bills have been considered by the Committee on Agriculture, many of them proposals of real merit. However, by a divided committee, we are called upon to pass upon this bill and given to understand that it is to take this or nothing. Personally I should heartily welcome an opportunity to vote for some sensible and economically sound bill that would help the farmer, but I can not swallow this one.

The Republican Party in its platform in 1920 declared for farm relief. Some of its eloquent utterances are interesting when considered in the light of the present legislation they have brought here for our consideration. In bombastic tones they called for—an end of unnecessary price fixing and ill-considered efforts.

The President in his recent message to the present Congress had something to say upon the subject:

No complicated scheme of relief, no plan for Government fixing of prices, no resort to the Public Treasury will be of any permanent value in establishing agriculture.

A statesmanlike utterance which was generously applauded by both sides of the Chamber. But, lo, things have changed! The Republican Party is smarting under the blows delivered one after another by the insurgent group from the West; election time is nearing; third-party talk is disturbing; ominous sounds are drifting in from the great West; Minnesota, North Dakota, and Wisconsin must be pacified and pleased, so what is a few platform pledges and presidential utterances in such serious circumstances? Or do they plan to play the game both ways by having Congress pass this monstrosity and thus please the farmer, and then have the President veto it and thus please the opponents? And all the while the farmer is the goat.

OBJECTIONS TO THE BILL

I am firmly convinced that it would be little short of a great national calamity if this measure should become a law.

It is the most gigantic, the most stupendous, and far-reaching legislation offered to Congress in a decade. Its revolutionizing influences upon agriculture, as well as industry, are almost beyond conception.

The bill proposes a great governmental agency in the form of a corporation financed by the Government to the extent of $200,000,000, and power to borrow more, which shall undertake to establish and maintain the prices of certain products, namely, wheat, flour, rice, corn, wool, cattle, sheep, swine, or any food product of cattle, sheep, or swine, and so forth.

It is a price-fixing measure pure and simple.

While the purpose of the bill is to bring relief to the farmer, yet let us look at others it would benefit, and see if therein does not lie the secret of its presentation. I quote from the report of the minority of the Committee on Agriculture (p. 4):

A COLOSSAL GIFT TO NONPRODUCERS

When this bill takes effect, as to wheat, the price of dollar wheat will instantly rise to over $1.50. The elevator man, merchants, millers, and speculators who have wheat on hand will suddenly be made richer by operation of law. If the emergency is declared, as it probably will be, before the wheat season, nearly all the wheat available for market will be in the hands of these men, and not in the hands of the farmers. The same applies to rice and corn, the profit, of course, being smaller. It may be that on some of this an equalization fee can be collected, but if sold for feed or seed there is no fee. If the fee on $1.50 wheat is 20 cents per bushel, the law has increased the value to the holders 30 cents per bushel, which must be paid for by the farmers and consumers. Every merchant or wholesaler who has flour on hand will find himself enriched overnight, and under the terms of the bill no equalization fee can be collected. If an emergency is declared on cattle, hogs, and sheep, every head will instantly rise in value, whether in the hands of farmers or others. The hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of pork, beef, and mutton in the hands of the Big Five and about 200 smaller packers would instantly rise in value. On this item alone there would be a sheer gift to the meat packers of this country of from $150,000,000 to $200,000,000 to be paid for by the consumers of the country. The packers would have to pay an equalization fee providing an emergency were declared on their products, but that would only be a fraction of their gain.

All meat stocks in the hands of meat dealers who had bought them from packers would likewise rise, and from them no equalization fee could be collected. The millers of the country holding wheat or flour would make millions overnight, to be paid for by the consumers. If an emergency should ever be declared on wool, every clothing manufacturer, clothing dealer, etc., would be enriched, and no fee could be collected from them. When the packer legislation and grain futures act were before the committee there were swarms of packers and millers and high-priced attorneys making all manner of objections. These gentlemen did not put in an appearance when this bill was being considered and no doubt they are praying for its passage. The total gift to nonproducers would easily amount to $500,000,000. There has been no such gift "since salvation was made free to the human race."

WAYSIDE MARKETING OR TRUCKING DESTROYED

Fancy, for instance, a farmer in my district favoring such a proposition as the following minority report of committee (p. 11):

A system of wayside marketing is developing in the country wherever good roads are being built. It is often pointed out as a partial solution of the farmer's difficulties. Let us assume it is the roasting-ear season, and the farmer starts out on his "wayside marketing" expedition with a supply of this commodity to be sold to his customers. An emergency has been declared in corn. It will be necessary for him to make a report of every sale he makes, and in all probability a separate report, no matter whether he sells a half dozen ears at a time or more or less than that. In order that there may be a proper system of checks and balances, the purchaser in all probability will also be required to make a report. Both reports, of course, ought to be verified by oath, in order to safeguard the Government. Before the farmer makes a sale, he will be compelled to ascertain what the equalization fee is for that month, and by some sort of rules the corporation will regulate each of these sales of corn by prescribing some method of weight or measurement which will fit in with the plan of this bill. When the farmer has ascertained the equalization fee, he is in a position to deliver. After his customer has paid for the corn he will have something to do himself. He must at his peril ascertain what the equalization fee is and he will have to procure a receipt from the corporation for the fee and turn the receipt over to the farmer. The purchaser might also be compelled to make a "return," and this return must in all probability be verified by oath. This will, of course, necessitate fees for officers who administer oaths. In certain cases it may be necessary for the buyer and seller to keep books for inspection by Government inspectors. Buyer and seller must conduct their transactions correctly. If the purchaser fails to furnish the receipt, or fails to pay, or attempts to evade the collection of the fee, he is liable to be fined in the Federal court not more than $5,000, or imprisonment not more than a year, or both, and, of course, if the producer is a party to any failure of this character, he is liable to the same penalties. There are other penalties in the bill.

What about the expense of operating this great corporation? It has been estimated that it will require an army of 50,000 employees added to the already overburdened pay rolls of the Government.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I oppose the bill. It is a subsidy for the wheat growers of the West. It is not claimed that it would be of the slightest benefit to the farmers of the South. It is class legislation of the rankest sort. It is a colossal raid upon the Treasury of the Government for a favored few. It, however, is in keeping with other measures jammed through this Congress. I recall a few of them: Ten million dollars for Germany; rebate of six million to China; a million dollars for the farmers of New Mexico; eleven and a half million for the Cape Cod Canal to reimburse the stockholders of a defunct private enterprise. And on and on, always raiding the Treasury for some chosen few. I have consistently opposed all such legislation and shall vote against the pending bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD] [Applause.]

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, President Coolidge in his veto message of the soldiers' bonus bill states that this humane measure is class legislation. The old soldier pension bill is of the same class. This is the first time since George Washington was President of the United States that any President has classed pension legislation for the benefit of soldiers of the Republic as "class legislation."

When George Washington was awarded 15,000 acres of land by Virginia in the Kenahwah Valley on account of his services during the Revolutionary War, it was not regarded as class legislation. Why, because General Washington's services in the seven years' war was not for a class or a clan, but for all the people of the 13 colonies. When North Carolina gave to each brigadier general of the Revolutionary War 12,000 acres of land; 7,200 acres to every colonel, and 3,200 acres to every captain, it was not regarded as "class legislation."

Why, because the patriots of North Carolina held that the soldiers of North Carolina did not suffer the perils and hardships and tragedies of the seven years' war for North Carolina alone, but for all the immortal principles in the Declaration of Independence. Hence this generous donation of land was not "class legislation."

When North Carolina gave to General Greene 25,000 acres of land, worth at the time $500,000, it was not regarded as "class legislation." When Georgia, after the war gave General Greene $22,500 in money it was regarded as real patriotism, and when South Carolina gave General Greene $45,000 for his services it was regarded as a patriotic gift and there is no record that even a Tory claimed that this money gift was "class legislation"; or that the grateful officials of South Carolina had commercialized patriotism.

According to the veto message of President Coolidge, patriotism has no commendable attributes but lip service. The Congress of the United States has always, up to recent date, thought differently. And every President from George Washington down to Calvin Coolidge—a good ways down—have never proclaimed such atrocious sentiments.

When General LaFayette returned from France, after the war, Congress voted him over $100,000 in money and a whole township of land in Louisiana. This gift was never mentioned as "class legislation."

Let me remind President Coolidge that patriotism or love of country may have a practical element of value, even in this utilitarian age. On the 4th of March, 1865, I stood within 10 feet of Abraham Lincoln and heard him deliver his last inaugural address—his last official message to the American people. I believe I am the only person in official life to-day who heard that address. I heard him say:

> With malice towards none and with charity for all, let us strive to finish the work we are in, to bind up the Nation's wounds, to care for him who shall have borne the battle and for his widow and his orphans.

[Applause.]

Not a man or woman in the Republic at that time ever thought for one moment that Lincoln only meant "lip service" for the soldiers or for the soldiers' widows or his orphans. Neither did the party of Abraham Lincoln so regard it. The Republican National convention of 1868 (the first after the war), which met in Chicago May 20, passed a resolution unanimously that "to the brave soldiers who imperiled their lives in the service of their country the bounties and pensions provided for these brave defenders are obligations never to be forgotten." The Republican National convention of 1872, which met in Philadelphia June 5, unanimously adopted a resolution that—

> No act of ours shall ever detract from their justly earned fame or their reward.

All down the years since the war the party of Lincoln has never until President Coolidge ever claimed that patriotism consists only of "lip service" and that humane legislation for the soldiers of the Republic is class legislation.

Evidently the benign spirit of Lincoln dwells no longer in the White House.

President Coolidge claims his veto message is based upon economic consideration. Let us see:

Let us remind the President that his Secretary of the Navy and his Secretary of War and all his Cabinet with his approval have indorsed an Army and Navy appropriation this year which calls for about $285,000,000 more money than the entire appropriations in 1916, when we were getting ready for the World War.

Lest we forget, I will give the figures:

In 1916 we appropriated for the Army $119,530,829; we appropriated for the Navy $150,526,634; a total of $270,057,464. This year Congress has appropriated for the Army $300,000,000 and for the Navy almost $255,000,000, approximating $555,000,000.

Let us remind the President that his Secretary of the Navy and his Secretary of War and all his Cabinet, with his approval, have indorsed an Army and Navy appropriation of $285,000,000 more money than the entire appropriations in 1916, when we were getting ready for the World War.

In view of this damning record of extravagance and waste in the Army and Navy appropriations, the President's claim that he vetoed the old soldiers' pension bill on the ground of economy is a false pretense and a cruel deceit.

Only a few days ago we had a petty illustration of class legislation and the kind of economy we are now realizing. The Cape Cod Canal, of Buzzards Bay, Mass., a project that has been in debate in Congress for lo, these many years, was put through the House of Representatives on a record vote of yeas 149 and nays 131, not voting 146. This project, as estimated, will eventually cost the taxpayers of the United States over $20,000,000.

The project was an administration scheme, recommended by a Massachusetts Secretary of War, approved, apparently, by a Massachusetts President, put through the House of Representatives by a Massachusetts committee chairman, and presided over with great dignity and ability by a Massachusetts Speaker of the House, and for the benefit of an originally organized Massachusetts corporation. [Laughter and applause.] This looks more like class legislation than the old soldiers' pension bill.

The President vetoed the old soldiers' pension bill on the grounds of economy. In the meantime he evidently indorses the Cape Cod Canal project, to cost some $20,000,000. He recommends the construction of a memorial bridge across the Potomac River, and is carrying forward a project that will cost the taxpayers of the United States over $20,000,000 building a fleet of war vessels to chase the rancorous rum runners on the Atlantic Ocean. These three projects, all either ornamental or useless, will cost the taxpayers a million dollars more than the old soldiers' pension bill which the President vetoed.

A number of friends I know back home are anxious to know how President Coolidge can claim to be an economist when he is making so large a drain on the Federal Treasury for his own pleasure and delectation. I am reminded of the fact that in 1873, when General Grant was President, the total appropriation for the President, including his salary and the upkeep of the White House, was $43,000. This year the President and his executive clerks and the upkeep of the White House and his recreation factors are costing the taxpayers over $500,000. Let me mention some of the items: President's salary, $75,000; traveling expenses, $25,000; President's secretary, $7,500; personal services, clerks, and so forth, $89,520; contingent expenses—who knows what that is—$37,000; printing and binding, $2,900; ordinary care and repair of White House, $48,240; for heating the greenhouses, $11,000; for care of greenhouses, $9,000; for repair of President's greenhouses, $9,860; for improvement of White House grounds, $10,000; for lighting grounds and back yard, $8,600; White House police, including 30 privates and several sergeants, $55,540; for uniforms for White House police, $3,350; total, $375,630; the Mayflower, fun boat, exclusively for the President's pleasure, $125,000; grand total, $500,630. Sad to tell, the President takes his cruel pen in hand and vetoes a pension for the old soldiers of the Republic now tottering to near-by graves.

By this act the last survivors of the war for the Union, now over 81 years old, are denied the solace of a Nation's gratitude and compelled to spend the last days of their weary, worn-out lives in biting want and cold neglect.

Gettysburg, Vicksburg, Atlanta, Franklin, and Nashville can speak to us no more with tongues of lurid flame. They are silent for all the coming ages; but their silence is more eloquent of national destiny than all the hoggish oracles of monopoly and greed between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans.

We should keep the air of the National Capitol wholesome and pure and seek to aid by our official conduct that all-absorbing patriotism that characterized the great masters of national destiny who set this Republic on its career.

We can not recall the valiant dead who sleep in 70 national cemeteries and in Flanders fields, but we can make a heroic effort to revive the patriotic spirit and show by official acts of generosity and gratitude that this Nation has not forgotten her vows. [Applause.]

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY].

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I want first to indorse the opening remarks of the chairman of the Rules Committee, who called your attention to the fact that we have before us to-day a bill that affects the agricultural interests throughout the length and breadth of the country. The importance of this legislation is apparent to everybody within the sound of my voice. I am not going at this time to take up the discussion of the bill. I want to say to you, however, that I have in my hand a document of 750 pages that represents the hearings held on this bill. We began its consideration about the middle of January. We have kept it up daily until two weeks ago, when the bill was reported. Men came before that committee from every part of this country—North, South, East, and West. This bill which we present to you to-day has been given the most careful and painstaking consideration of any measure that has to my knowledge ever come before our Agricultural Committee. We have done something with this bill that I do not think has ever been done before. We went over it again and again, and four confidential prints of the bill were made before it was finally reported. The gentleman from Virginia—and I am not going to talk about what he says except to say that his characterization of the measure—but I will not even discuss that at this time.

It seems to me, however, that it would have been well if the gentleman from Virginia had withheld his remarks and his opinion on the bill until he had had opportunity to hear the 15 hours of discussion that he might have been informed of some things in the bill, and some provisions which are not in the bill, and which he probably thinks are provided for in the measure.

I have read editorials in the great daily press; I have read pamphlets sent out by the boards of trade; I have read arguments made by Members of this House, sent out to their districts, that contain statements and arguments that are not warranted by anything that is in the measure. I am for this bill. I want the membership of this House to listen to this debate, and give to it very careful consideration and then make up their minds. If it is their opinion that it is a bad bill, then of course they will vote against it. But if they think it is a good bill, that it will help the American farmer and put him on his feet again, we want you to help us put it into law. I am for it; I believe it is the most important measure that has come before Congress during this present session. We want your help.

To-day as I stand here probably somewhere in this great Nation a bank is closing its doors on account of agricultural conditions. Within the last six months more banks have failed in agricultural districts than ever before in a like period in this country. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE].

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am satisfied that every true and conscientious friend of the American farmer wants to do something in the way of legislation that will help him most. I know that there is no Member of this House who is more sincere in wanting to vote for legislation that will really be for the benefit of the American farmer than I am. I am not going to discuss the merits of the bill now, because I hope to later, but after three months' hearings on this bill I am thoroughly convinced that it is going to hurt the farmer more than it will help him, and I want to do something for the American farmer and not something to the American farmer.

I believe you will agree with me when you shall have heard all the arguments in the case that this bill is fraught with more possible complexities, both national and international, for the safety, welfare, and happiness and prosperity of our country than any bill that has been before the House for a century. Knowing the importance of it, knowing the honest disagreement of members of the agricultural committee, regardless of politics, it seems to me that we are making a great mistake, and that the Rules Committee has made a great mistake, in only allowing 15 hours' general debate on the bill. If we had the 15 hours' general debate on the bill with nights excluded, then if necessary we could at least have the nights in addition, it would be all right, but you and I know what effect debate on a bill has at night with a small attendance here, and I hope that the chairman of the Rules Committee can yet see his way clear to strike out the night provision.

There are other important bills intended to assist agriculture pending before the great Agricultural Committee. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL] has a bill known as the Curtis-Aswell bill. He went before the Rules Committee and made an earnest appeal to make that bill in order for consideration at the same time this bill is.

That is a great cooperative marketing bill the principles of which in my judgment will do something permanently for the farmer. Why should not this House have an opportunity to consider that bill along with this bill? Why should we be in the attitude of saying that this is the only panacea for the American farmer, and why should we say to this House that it has to take this bill or nothing? Yet the Rules Committee comes here and says that we have either to take this bill or none, when we could have had the consideration of the Curtis-Aswell bill before the House.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman think that is quite a fair statement?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I am talking about the action, and I do not know anything about the intention.

Mr. SNELL. The Rules Committee, so far as I have known, and during the time that I have been a member of it, has never reported a measure to this floor that did not have the backing of a committee which had had consideration of the legislation. This request for the consideration of the Aswell bill did not come as a request from the committee, but it came as a request from an individual, and the Rules Committee has never violated that rule since I have been a member of the Rules Committee.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I say that this McNary-Haugen bill is not the sense of the entire Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. SNELL. As far as I know, it came from that committee.

Mr. KINCHELOE. There are other members of the Committee on Agriculture who are just as anxious to do something for the American farmer as those who signed the majority report. I am not talking about the intention, but I am talking about the effect of the action of the gentleman's committee, that this House is barred from the consideration of that bill, and the only alternative that we have is to swallow this bill or take nothing. That is the point I make, and it is not fair to the membership of this House. I hope that we will be able to vote down the previous question in order that we may amend this rule so that we may have 15 hours of debate and have the night sessions included.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Committee on Rules, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], stated that this legislation concerned a large percentage of the population of the United States. That is true and much more. This legislation concerns every individual in the United States. It concerns the people in the cities as much as those in the country. Every member of the Committee on Agriculture is vitally concerned, eagerly concerned, to bring legislation to the House that will be effectively helpful to the American farmer. I went before the Committee on Rules and urged that four other bills in addition to the McNary-Haugen bill might be considered by this House. The McNary-Haugen bill I shall discuss later in the day. It has the name of our distinguished chairman attached to it. It was not proper for other gentlemen on that committee to force action upon their individual bills by the committee until the Haugen bill was out of the way.

That is the truth of the situation, and for four months all of us who had bills pending in that committee have stood back out of the chairman's way. I am not criticizing, but that is the fact of the case. So now the plan is to bring to this House the McNary-Haugen bill only in an effort to make gentlemen fear that if they do not vote for this bill they will have no other chance to vote for any agricultural bill. That is the policy, that is the strategy, that is the scheme. This proposal to have part of this debate through the nighttime is absurd, as the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the Committee on Rules, knows. If he and the other gentlemen on the Committee on Rules will agree to give 15 hours of general debate and say nothing with reference to night sessions, then we will give justice to this body of men. Under the agreement I am to control one-fourth of the time, and I have had over 30 requests for time. I have had requests in opposition to this bill that would cover the whole 15 hours, if I had them at my control. There are 21 members of the committee, and 20 of them will likely speak on the bill. It is a bill of such vast intricacy, it is a bill of such wild-eyed theories, of such intricate and interminable phraseology, with such statistical contradictions as will confound and confuse and lead men who try to explain it into a maze of mystery and despair, that it is impossible to discuss the bill in a short time. You can not discuss this bill properly without having one hour in which to make a statement and another hour in which to answer questions. It is utterly impossible if you want to study the bill with effect and intelligence, and so, Mr. Speaker, I pause here to ask the chairman of the Committee on Rules this simple question: Will he agree that I may have unanimous consent rather than to fight the rule in an effort to vote down the previous question, and strike out any reference to night sessions?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I will say in answer to the gentleman that I have had more fault found with me on account of giving so much time to the consideration of this bill than on any other rule that we have ever brought in this session.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, may I ask unanimous consent that it be so amended?

Mr. SNELL. I do not yield for that purpose.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ASWELL. If we vote down the motion for the previous question, can we not amend the rule, change it?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER].

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Speaker, this bill that the Rules Committee provides for the consideration of is an emergency measure. It is introduced at any rate and reported by the committee as an emergency measure. I agree with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] that the Committee on Agriculture has never been known to give more serious consideration to any measure before it than it has to this measure. It is not fair to criticize the Committee on Rules for not bringing in a rule making the bill of the gentleman from Louisiana germane to this bill, because the gentleman from Louisiana himself has stated in my presence and in the presence of the committee that his bill is not an emergency measure, and while it is calculated to help agriculture in the future it bears no relation whatever to this measure. Besides, the Committee on Agriculture decided during our hearings that we would not be bound by any rule, and that the public might have the benefit of everything that happened in that committee room. The gentleman's bill was offered as a substitute in an effort to defeat the McNary-Haugen bill being reported out, and by an overwhelming majority the Committee on Agriculture refused to adopt it as a substitute.

Mr. ASWELL. Is it not a fact that that was at the end of the session, and without any consideration of the bill, because it has never been read by the committee and no attention has been paid to it?

Mr. TINCHER. Certainly. The gentleman himself stated it was not an emergency measure, and it was voted down almost unanimously. The Rules Committee could have done nothing that would have been more outrageous than to have brought in a rule making that bill in order at this time. Now we propose——

Mr. ASWELL. May I ask——

Mr. TINCHER. The friends of agriculture on that committee propose that we have 15 hours' debate and the McNary-Haugen bill will be debated and amended. If any man has in mind an emergency proposition better than that, let him offer it as an amendment. There never was a more systematic propaganda or a better lobby against a measure than has been in Washington this winter against this farm legislation, and sometimes when men announce their opposition to this measure now we recognize the language. How can a Member of Congress who says he is a friend to the farmer when he knows he is going to have a chance to offer an amendment that will make good if it is not, how can he announce that he is going to vote against the measure? We are not thin-skinned about this measure. A good many members of the committee realize it is a hard proposition to work out anything that is economically sound and will accomplish the result, but it is a subject that ought to be debated and the——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TINCHER. Two more minutes.

Mr. SNELL. I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. TINCHER. Another proposition I want to mention is that it was heralded through the press of this country and a member of the Agricultural Committee was quoted as having said to the Rules Committee that this bill was bolshevik, socialistic, and soviet. Now, that is a question of fact as to whether it is true or not. It is not true. There is not anything socialistic or bolshevik about it. There is only one answer to that argument against the bill, and that is that the argument is false. As to the man who differs with me on this bill as to its being economically sound and economically a governmental proposition I have regard. That is a matter of opinion concerning which we may differ and debate, but the other statement is propaganda furnished by the people who want to keep the farmers of America with their noses to the grindstone, and is false. [Applause.] There is no room for argument about it. I yield back what time may remain. [Applause.]

Mr. SNELL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL].

FARM RELIEF

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. Speaker, there has been a systematic effort on the part of a certain class in this country, exemplified by the Wall Street Journal, to build up and foster the impression that the farmer is a faultfinder who exaggerates his troubles, "a malcontent who loafed into bankruptcy with one-crop farming." This is a heartless, willful misjudgment of the class who work hardest with most hours of labor and least return. Wall Street should not begrudge the farmer a chance to pay his debts. It is enough to make him "see red." All over the country receipts from the farms have not been enough to pay the taxes. The farmer's confidence has been destroyed with false gestures of help. His suspicions have been aroused. He has been so numbed by a series of knockout blows that he has almost ceased to hope. He asks for a chance to break even, and we give him more credit. Extension of credit is no help. He has too many mortgages now. The farmer can hardly trust anything that comes to him in the guise of relief, he has been gold-bricked so many times. Judging by its enemies and their howl this ought to be a good measure. It is of vital concern to the farmer of the Northwest.

In August, 1923, a bushel of wheat brought 84 cents. Let us compare the prices of 10 years ago. In 1913 a suit of clothes cost 21 bushels of wheat; in 1923, 31 bushels of wheat bought a suit of clothes. In 1913 a wagon cost 103 bushels of wheat; in 1923 it took 166 bushels. In 1923 he sells a hide for 80 cents and buys back a pair of shoes for $4.50. All commodities except agricultural have gone up 60 per cent on an average, while agricultural commodities, left to the mercy of demoralized, war-ruined world conditions, have gone up 17 per cent. To neglect the farmer any longer, to attack this bill as vicious and class legislation is cloudy thinking and stupid prejudice. Six million farmers make a fair proportion of our population, almost too many to label legislation in their behalf as "class." It is not special privilege. It is justice. Industry has been given the highest protection. Transportation has been given aid and comfort.

The reason for the depression is that the farmer buys in a highly protected market, rising all the time, and sells in an open market in competition with lower-paid workers. Take, for example, the dairy industry in Minnesota. This industry has sprung up in response to the propaganda for diversified farming. Our State has by intensive effort brought cooperation to a higher point of efficiency than anywhere else in the United States. We make the finest quality of butter, command the highest prices, and haul down the highest awards and medals. But Minnesota has to compete with the labor of Denmark, where the dairyman pays his hired man $14 to $16 a month. In Minnesota the wage is $50 to $70 a month and board. Our men are in competition with 23 foreign nations to-day, in none of which are the wages and labor conditions on a par with the United States. The result is that it takes the life right out of the cooperative idea. When in an effort to control markets a surplus is shifted away from an overglutted market like New York and distributed around to less oversupplied markets in order to avoid a disastrous drop in price, what does New York do? It buys a shipload or two of Danish butter where, in addition to their advantage over our farmer on the labor end of it, they can make 40 cents on each dollar of American money, due to the difference in exchange, and butter drops 20 cents in price and threatens to go still lower. In January the farmer got a creamery check for $120. In April $100, and in May it will be $80. The matter of the drop in creamery checks is of vital moment to every farmer in the State. They all get their creamery check, and they all feel the pinch. It is the last line of defense for the farmer. If his dairying enterprise fails, he is ruined.

The farmer does not expect protection from internal competition. He is willing to breast the struggle for existence and let the fittest survive. What he can not understand is why foreign industries should fatten at his expense, why he should suffer the competition of foreign markets. It will ruin the Nation. Already if you look over the keyboards at the leading hotels you will note that travel is way below normal. Traveling men are not being sent out through the rural districts. Little shops are not stocking up. The farmer has no money to buy. The small bankers are failing. We are right up to our necks in panic for the grim, tragic condition of the farmer; the ravaging effects of his economic distress has a direct bearing on all business. Industry must not consider agriculture as its hated rival, nor view with jealous eye measures looking to its stability, for they are interwoven; and when the farmer, through no fault of his own, sees the work of a lifetime swept away, no matter how frugal and efficient he may have been, it is not a condition for business to look upon with an indifferent eye. Agriculture is the source of our wealth. This is axiomatic. Eastern prosperity can not continue without it. It is to their interest to cooperate and avert a complete panic—to at least make it possible that the farmer can lift his mortgages, pay his bills, and keep up his purchasing power.

During the war Congress set a price for the farmers' wheat, of $2.26, I think it was, then organized a Grain Corporation, wherein they bought wheat and resold it to foreign markets at $3 and $4 and $5 a bushel. After all expenses were paid—and they were enormous, the chairman, Julius Barnes, putting his brother-in-law and other business associates in at a salary from $30,000 to $50,000 a year—there was still left over $70,000,000. This money came directly out of the pockets of the farmers.

This bill only asks that the Government be sponsor for its credit with which to buy grain. This grain when resold will take care of itself and take care of the cost of the proposition. While the Government will have to guarantee it, in the end it will cost the Government nothing; and if it did, the $70,000,000 the farmers have been robbed of will more than take care of any deficiency. It is our duty.

People say we can not set the price. Trusts and combinations of the country have, by using the protection of the tariff, been setting prices right and left. It would be a strange thing if farmers can not even get the protection of tariff they are entitled to in comparison with other basic industries. By taking up the exportable surplus the price of grain would range accordingly.

The bill would operate like this: The wheat crop is, roughly, 800,000,000 bushels, of which our consumption is 600,000,000. The surplus, 200,000,000 bushels, we export. If the farmer is to get $1.50 for his wheat and the exportable surplus is worth about $1, the loss on the exportable 200,000,000 would be $100,000,000. If the farmers were paid $1.50 for the 600,000,000 bushels consumed at home and this 600,000,000 were sold to consumers here for $1.75, a profit of $150,000,000 would pile up, enough to take care of the $100,000,000 loss on the exportable surplus and leave $50,000,000 for expenses.

This bill gives power to place such duty as will prohibit the foreign competition, which will be, in effect, an embargo on farm products that come in competition. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the criticisms leveled against the Committee on Rules for not granting more time for debate on this proposition, I am sure we appreciate that this is an important measure, and for that reason we have granted 15 hours for debate, which is the longest time granted for general debate in a special rule, I think, in the last two Congresses. The reason why we provided for night sessions is that some of us are trying to clean up legislation so that this Congress can adjourn early in June, and also give fair and decent consideration to the important measures that should be considered by this House at this time.

Now, in reply to the other question asked by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL], why his measure was not made in order, I will say this: Personally I am more in favor of his measure than of the measure before the House; but the Rules Committee is not a legislative committee. We try as far as possible to help, so as to make out a program; and so far as I know in the history of the Committee on Rules never have we taken up legislation and put it on the program unless it had the backing of some committee which had jurisdiction over that legislation and asked us to do it. That is the only reason why we did not make the bill of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL] in order in the consideration of the Haugen-McNary bill. That would complicate the matter and cause trouble, and we have plenty of troubles at the present time without looking for any new ones.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves the previous question on the rule.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

The SPEAKER. A division is demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 114, noes 26.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. It is evident that there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of ordering the previous question will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 271, nays 47, answered "present" 2, not voting 113, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members be allowed to extend their remarks in the RECORD on this bill for five legislative days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that all Members be allowed to extend their remarks in the RECORD on this bill for five legislative days. Is there objection?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will that be five legislative days after the passage of the bill?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, that means their own remarks.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And after the passage of the bill?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the same request was made with reference to the adjusted compensation bill and the objection on this side was systematically made every time. So it seems to me the gentleman ought to postpone this request until a little later, at least, and give us time to see what is in this bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. RANKIN. No.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, the modification should be made that Members will be allowed to insert their remarks in the RECORD on this bill for five legislative days after final action on the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time be equally divided between the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL], the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY], the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. VOIGT], and myself, three and three-quarters hours each.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the time be divided into four parts. Is there objection?

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there was an agreement that the chairman control one-fourth of the time in favor of the bill on that side of the Chamber, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. VOIGT] one-fourth of the time on that side against the bill, that I would control one-fourth of the time on this side against the bill, and that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] would control one-fourth of the time for the bill on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. HAUGEN. That is embodied in my request.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand, then, that if this request is granted, the time will be controlled as outlined by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL]?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, the Chair inadvertently, perhaps, stated that the Members would have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks in the RECORD on this bill after the passage of the bill. Should not that be after the vote on the bill?

The SPEAKER. That was the final request.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I would like to know whether I can get 10 minutes of any of this time?

Mr. ASWELL. I will yield the gentleman some time during the course of debate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] as to the division of time? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9033) declaring an emergency in respect of certain agricultural commodities, to promote equality between agricultural commodities and other commodities, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 9033, with Mr. SANDERS of Indiana in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, the unanimous consent just agreed to divides the 15 hours given to general debate on this bill in four parts, so that I shall have 3¾ hours at my disposal. I have had some 20 or 30 requests for time, so the time allotted to me will not permit me to discuss at this time all the details of the bill. In order to cover as many points as possible I ask that I may be allowed to conclude my statement without interruption.

I have frequently been asked what the McNary-Haugen bill proposes to do and how it will relieve the depressed agricultural situation. Briefly, the bill establishes a corporation with a capital stock of $200,000,000 subscribed by the Federal Treasury to purchase certain basic agricultural commodities at a ratio price in such amounts as to make the ratio price the prevailing market price. The ratio price at which the corporation shall purchase the commodities will be the pre-war price, increased proportionately with the increase in 404 other commodities; in other words, the corporation will buy certain basic agricultural commodities on the open market at the ratio price thus bringing the market price up to the same exchange value compared with other commodities that obtained for a normally representative period prior to the war, and the farmer's dollar will have a buying power equal to that which it had before the war. The surplus thus purchased or pooled by the corporation will be sold on the world market at the best obtainable price and the discount on such exportable surplus and the cost of operation of the corporation will be collected from the producers of the total crop of that commodity; thus the $200,000,000 advanced by the Government should not be impaired and the producers as a whole, who are materially benefited by the enhanced price brought about by the legislation, will stand the cost of operation.

I am also asked, why this emergency legislation? Why the continued depression in agriculture? It is not due to crop failures, nor to lack of industry, or intelligent management on the part of the farmers, but to various other causes, especially to the low prices on agricultural products as compared with the increased prices of other commodities. The prices of the two are out of line, as indicated in President Coolidge's speech of February 13, in which he stated:

> But the great food staples do not sell on a parity with the products of industry. Their average price is little above the pre-war level, while manufactures are about 50 per cent higher. The farmer is not receiving his share.

I believe I am safe in saying that, generally speaking, the agricultural depression is largely due to this inequality in prices between agricultural commodities and other commodities, referred to by the President, which has resulted in an inadequate return to the farmer for his labor and capital invested; and due also to the exportable surplus of these agricultural commodities, upon which their price is made dependent and lowered by reason of the unsettled world conditions and lower cost of production in the foreign countries.

It is generally conceded that in the absence of a monopoly, combination, or organization to pool and boost prices, where there is a surplus of any product for export, due to intense competition, the price obtained for the surplus determines the price of the whole product.

Organized industry in the United States, under a highly protective policy, is able to sell its products in the domestic market at a price equal to the cost of foreign production plus the tariff, cost of transportation, and other charges incident thereto. In other words, organized industry sells for domestic consumption on the American price level—cost of foreign production plus tariff, transportation, and other charges incident thereto—and sells its surplus on the world price level in competition with the surplus products of other countries without affecting the domestic price. Thus the average price of the whole product is materially advanced, the average price being the domestic price less the discount occasioned by the lower price of the surplus.

On the one hand, the six and a half million farmers are unable to organize so as to pool their products and restrict production, and thus control their price, because of their large number and the fact that they are scattered throughout this vast country. It has been tried out, but without success, except when done on a small scale and in a limited area, in which case it has been fairly successful, as, for instance, the citrus fruit growers and tobacco growers have organized with some success. Experience in the past has clearly demonstrated that organization among farmers can not be accomplished on a large scale or on a scale that will cover the entire country. As a result of the farmers' inability to organize and pool, and thus determine the price of their products for domestic consumption, they sell their whole product at a price dependent upon the price obtained for their surplus, which is sold in competition with the surplus products of other countries. The American farmer sells his eggs and butter in competition with the surplus products of the world.

The American wheat grower sells his wheat, grown on high-priced land, yielding on an average of about 14 bushels to the acre, in competition with the wheat grown on the productive soil of Canada, selling at $5 to $20 an acre, and yielding from 40 to 60 bushels an acre. The farmer in the Corn Belt of Iowa, Illinois, Missouri, Nebraska, and Minnesota, tilling $200 an acre land, sells corn and cattle in competition with the surplus cattle and corn of Argentina, produced by underpaid labor on its low-priced and rich soil. The farmer buys on the highest market in the world and sells his products on the lowest market in the world, which has resulted in the inequality in prices and depressed conditions in agriculture.

The object sought in the proposed bill, then, is to establish a fairer relation between the basic agricultural commodities and other commodities, to equalize prices, to overcome the disparity in prices, to raise the purchasing power of agricultural commodities to the price level of other commodities, to put the farmer in the same position as organized industry, to establish a domestic price for the product sold for domestic consumption, to sell the exportable surplus at the world price, and in the end bring up the average price of the farmers' whole product, so that the farmer may do as organized industry is doing—in other words, to make the purchasing power of basic agricultural commodities equal to the purchasing power of the products of organized industry and labor.

A proposition not to fix prices, but to furnish a ready buyer to buy at a price commensurate with the price paid for other commodities. To give the farmer an even break, so that if organized industry continues to put up and maintain prices, the price of agricultural commodities may also be raised proportionately, to make the rate of duty applicable to agricultural commodities in the same manner as it applies to the products of organized industry. So if the protective policy is to be continued, it shall also apply with equal force to the farmers' products. Thus it will make it possible for the farmer to do what organized industry is doing.

All will agree that it is unfair to continue a policy which protects one and not the other. What is good for the goose is good for the gander. Such a discriminating policy can not long continue. If protection is to be denied the one the alternative is to deny it to the other also.

How is the equalization of prices to be accomplished? First, it is proposed to create a corporation to be directed by a board consisting of four directors appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, and the Secretary of Agriculture, who shall be chairman, the salary of the four directors to be $10,000, and one of the four to be selected as managing director.

The capital of $200,000,000 is to be subscribed by the Federal Government. The board is given authority to borrow not to exceed five times the amount of the authorized capital. The United States assumes no liability for any obligation of the corporation.

Notes and bonds are not exempt from taxation.

The corporation may sue and be sued; may make contracts, and may acquire, hold, and dispose of property.

It may appoint and fix the compensation of employees.

It may acquire the right of operation of storage warehouses and facilities for processing such commodities.

It may make contracts for processing of basic agricultural commodities.

It may make advances to any person not to exceed 75 per cent of the market value.

The corporation shall utilize as far as possible existing facilities and agencies.

It shall cooperate with and encourage formation of associations of producers.

The corporation shall purchase basic agricultural commodities produced in the United States in respect of which a special emergency has been declared of wheat, flour, rice, corn, wool, cattle, sheep, swine, or any food product of cattle, sheep, or swine.

The ratio price of such basic agricultural commodities—computed by the Secretary of Labor and Secretary of Agriculture—for such period shall bear the same relation to the pre-war basic-commodity price thereof as the current all-commodities price in effect for such period bears to the pre-war all-commodities price.

The corporation shall purchase the basic agricultural commodity in any amount necessary to maintain at the level of the ratio price the domestic price of such commodity or any class or grade thereof in respect of which a ratio price is established, and may from time to time make allowances to cover storage and other holding costs.

The corporation shall sell in foreign markets at the highest prices obtainable, in the domestic market at not less than the purchase price, for its exportation—or for processing for exportation under such regulations as the corporation may prescribe—at the highest prices obtainable.

The corporation shall determine the probable export surplus, the probable domestic consumption, and the amount of basic agricultural commodities to be purchased. It shall notify the President of its findings. It is then the President's duty by proclamation to declare that a special emergency exists as to such agricultural commodities. The President is given authority to adjust the rates of duty and to prohibit the importation of basic agricultural commodities or any such derivative.

The Secretary of Labor shall compute the average of all commodities—404 in number—for the period 1905 to 1914, inclusive—referred to as the pre-war basic commodity price—as given in Bulletin No. 335, Bureau of Labor statistics.

The Secretary of Agriculture and Secretary of Labor shall after the issuance of a proclamation declaring a special emergency in respect of a basic agricultural commodity jointly prepare the average price for such commodity during the period 1905–1914, referred to in this bill as the pre-war basic commodity price.

The Secretary of Labor shall compute and publish the average price of all commodities for such month. The index numbers of wholesale prices for all commodities for such year shall be referred to as the current all-commodities price.

The current all-commodities price in effect for any period shall be the price computed for the month preceding the commencement of such period.

The corporation shall determine the amount to be paid or withheld from each producer to defray expenses and to make up the losses on the export surplus.

The corporation may require the purchaser to issue to such producer a receipt therefor, which shall be evidence of the participating interest of the producer.

It may by regulation require any purchaser or producer to file returns under oath any report in respect of his purchases or sales of the basic agricultural commodities, and so forth.

There shall be established in the treasury of the corporation for each basic agricultural commodity an equalization fund into which all equalization fees for such operating period shall be deposited, and from such funds there shall be disbursed all operating expenses and losses.

After the expiration of such operating period the corporation shall distribute ratably any balance remaining in such fund to the persons to whom such equalization fee has been paid.

For example, had the bill been in operation and the corporation functioning last December, according to the table prepared by the Bureau of Labor Statistics:

Market prices of commodities

Index of all commodities, 1905–1914	100.0
Index of all commodities, year 1923	162.3
Index of all commodities, December, 1923	159.8

Individual commodities	Average market price, 1905–1914	Average market price, year 1923	Average market price, December, 1923	Ratio price, year 1923	Ratio price, December, 1923
Cotton: Upland middling	0.120	0.293	0.358	0.194	0.191
Corn: Contract grades, cash, Chicago	.602	.821	.730	.977	.902
Wheat: Range of No. 1 northern spring and No. 2 red winter, Chicago	1.00	1.163	1.097	1.624	1.598
Cattle: Good to choice, steers, Chicago	6.855	9.952	9.785	11.123	10.949
Hogs: Heavy, Chicago	7.099	7.690	7.05	11.522	11.342
Sheep: Wethers, Chicago	5.379	7.648	8.000	8.731	8.594
Flour: Patents	5.127	6.365	6.109	8.322	8.192
Wool: One-fourth and three-eighths grades, scoured basis	.492	.979	.964	.799	.787

The indexed number of all commodities—1905–1914—is 100. Index number for all commodities December, 1923, was 159.8. According to it, prices of all commodities increased 59.8. The average market price of wheat in Chicago for 1905–1914 was $1. The ratio price for December, 1.598. The average market price for December was 1.097. The price of wheat would have advanced 50.1. In other words, eliminating the decimals, the farmer would have received 1.59 for his wheat instead of 1.09, an increase in price of 50 cents a bushel. If the corporation had estimated the number of bushels required for domestic consumption at 600,000,000 bushels and the surplus for export at 150,000,000 bushels and the loss on the exportable surplus at 50 cents a bushel, or $75,000,000, it would have found it necessary to withhold or collect $75,000,000 from all purchases, or 10 cents a bushel on the whole crop. If so, the farmer would have received $1.49 in cash and a receipt for 10 cents, instead of $1.09, the amount which he received.

The bill has been characterized as a vicious circle of price raising, pyramiding, and one increase upon another. It is stated that for these reasons the bill is unworkable, impracticable, and undesirable. Let us see about that. If the bill had been in effect the 1st of last December, according to the table furnished by the Department of Labor just referred to, the indexed number of all commodities of December, 1923, was 159.8. The current price of hogs in December was $7.05; the ratio price would have been $11.34, and the price of hogs would have been increased $4.29, or about 60 per cent. Assuming that the corporation had been functioning and a special emergency had been declared effective on the 1st day of December, 1923, the price of hogs would have advanced to the ratio price $11.34, instead of selling for the current price, $7.05, an increase of about 60 per cent in the price of hogs.

According to Bulletin 335, United States Department of Labor, hogs in weight are reported at 4.07 per cent, or, say 5 per cent; and assuming that all other commodities had remained the same, say at 1.60, what would have been the result? If the advance in price of hogs would have advanced the index number of all commodities, say, 3 points, added to 160 equals 163. Suppose building material had decreased in price in an amount affecting the all-commodities index number in a like amount. The result would be: First, add 3 to 160; second, deducting 3 from 163; the index number would be just where we started.

Suppose there had been declared a special emergency on butter the 1st of May. The current price in New York, 35¼ cents to 36¼ cents, say 36 cents, extra creamery, score 92, would have advanced to 45 cents, or 9 cents a pound, which is 25 per cent increase over 36 cents.

Objection to the bill is made on the ground that it will increase the cost of living. I believe the Wall Street Journal was the first to raise this objection. Yes; it will increase the cost of living. The increase of cost of flour in an 8-ounce loaf of bread would be less than a half cent; in a 16-ounce loaf less than 1 cent. It requires about 4.6 bushels of wheat to make a barrel of flour. A 50-cent increase in the price of wheat would make an increase of $2.30 a barrel. One barrel of flour makes five hundred and eighty-five 8-ounce loaves of bread, or from two hundred and seventy-five to three hundred 16-ounce loaves. The additional burden of a half cent a loaf will, of course, be felt by the Wall Street Journal, but I trust that Mr. Morgan and his associates will be able to stand the burden. If not, when the farmers get back on their feet they will help out. While it may work a hardship on Wall Street, the increased cost of living apparently is satisfactory to the wage earner. Representatives of practically every labor organization appeared before the committee. I quote from hearings before my committee:

STATEMENT OF MR. EDGAR WALLACE, REPRESENTING THE AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Chairman, when I appeared here about a year or a little over a year ago there were some 5,000,000 workingmen walking the streets. We considered then that the reason for the depression in the industries was the fact that the farmers were not getting prices for their products and consequently were unable to buy.

* * * * * * *

We fear that this condition of comparative steady employment is only temporary, that just as long as that great group of the people of our country, the producing people of our country, are underpaid for their labor (for that is what it amounts to), when they are not getting a fair price for their products, prosperity is just for a time and can not last.

We believe it is only enlightened selfishness to say that this great, big portion of the citizenry be placed in the position where they can feel safe. * * *

Mr. WALLACE. Yes; we recognize that if the farmer gets a better price we will have to pay it; that is, we will have to pay our share of it.

* * * * * * *

When they determined to deflate, they hit the farmers hard, and the farmer found himself helpless, because he had no economic organization. When it came to the miners, the miners said, "Maybe you will; we will give you a scrap," and they did.

* * * * * * *

Mr. WALLACE. A cause probably of raising the price of things that we have to buy; yet we are for that, recognizing the farmers as our best customers. What does it profit us if we can get meat for 10 cents a pound if we haven't the 10 cents?

* * * * * * *

The farmers are our customers; when they have no money we can not work. We are the farmers' customers; when we can not buy, their foodstuffs pile up and lose in value. Hence, I think it is to the interest of all the workers—and I want to say that the condition of the workers is not improving.

* * * * * * *

I can not see any hope for improvement, except the farmers can buy. Those are the people on whom we depend.

* * * * * * *

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not see any difference in confiscating a farmer's product by force, or forcing upon him confiscatory prices that will have the same effect. The danger is, and I know that in certain places it is now taking effect, that the farmer here may also let his fields lie fallow and not raise the foodstuffs that are needed by the entire country.

STATEMENT OF MR. ROBERT FECHNER, REPRESENTING THE INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF MACHINISTS

Mr. FECHNER. Our general executive board is in session here in Washington, which is the headquarters of our organization at the present time, and President William H. Johnston called the attention of the board members to the reports which have been recently received on the subject, and the board felt that we were sufficiently concerned in the matter to take official recognition of the situation. We did so, and after giving due consideration to the entire matter we have officially recorded ourselves as supporting in principle at least the provisions of this pending legislation.

* * * * * * *

We feel that the farmer is entitled to a sufficient price to justify him in continuing the operation of his farm, just as well as transportation or any other industry is entitled to a fair return on their investment or the activity of those who are engaged in these other lines, and we are convinced that if anything can be done by the Congress to help bring about that condition it will be reflected in all other lines.

* * * * * * *

No; I certainly hope Congress will not stand still. That is what I am here for, to urge that something be done, and I am sure that the committee can formulate some plan.

* * * * * * *

We believe that if we can get some relief for the farmers and get things started on the farms, it is going to be reflected along all lines and that the mechanics will benefit just as well as the farmers. We are very anxious that at least an effort be made to afford that relief.

* * * * * * *

We do believe that the workers must have a living wage and that the farmers must also get a price for their product that will enable them to live and to continue to operate their farms; and it is that principle that we want to see preserved.

STATEMENT OF MR. ARTHUR J. LOVELL, VICE PRESIDENT AND LEGISLATIVE REPRESENTATIVE, BROTHERHOOD OF LOCOMOTIVE FIREMEN AND ENGINEMEN, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. LOVELL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have the honor to represent the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, one of the railroad transportation organizations, in support of this measure, which is the preferred measure of the farmers for marketing their crops. During the last Congress I appeared before your committee in support of a bill similar to the one introduced at this session.

Our organization is on record in favor of such legislation on behalf of the farmers.

* * * * * * *

Now, the farmer is entitled to some consideration, some help, and this bill in our opinion will give him some betterment of conditions. The farm is absolutely essential.

* * * * * * *

We are not in affiliation with any farm organization; we are not affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. These four railroad brotherhoods are independent. We are a fraternal insurance organization. We are very old. Our organization has been more than half a century in existence.

STATEMENT OF MR. W. M. CLARK, VICE PRESIDENT AND NATIONAL LEGISLATIVE REPRESENTATIVE, ORDER OF RAILWAY CONDUCTORS; ALSO REPRESENTING THE BROTHERHOOD OF RAILROAD TRAINMEN, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. CLARK. I am vice president and national legislative representative of the Order of Railway Conductors, and also represent the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen. A year ago our organization and other organizations went on record as favoring a bill that would benefit the farmer and a bill with which the farmers were in accord. As far as we are concerned, we are not wedded to any particular bill or language, if it benefits the farmer, because that is what we are trying to do.

The testimony of these excellent gentlemen speaks for itself and should satisfy all as to the attitude of labor toward legislation along the line suggested in this bill.

STATEMENT OF MR. EDGAR WALLACE, WASHINGTON, D. C., REPRESENTING THE AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I come here with some hesitation to reiterate the statement that I presented before this committee when the Sinclair-Ladd bill was under discussion, the Little bill was under discussion, and the Sinclair-Norris bill was under discussion. Now, I am appearing in favor of the McNary-Haugen bill, with very little real knowledge as to what might be the effect, the detailed effect of this bill if enacted into law. The organization that I represent recognizes that this bill provides for unprecedented action on the part of Congress to aid the farmers of the country. It is our opinion that there is an unprecedented situation to be met. If in this country there was a pestilence in some sections that threatened the entire country, we would not hesitate to take some drastic action in order to meet the emergency. The workingman of the country realized that lopsided prosperity can not continue for any great length of time. With great numbers of our citizenry threatened with ruin, facing ruin, the rest of us can not continue prosperous for any great length of time.

The farmers were crushed, first by the economic power of the bankers, who sought to deflate the commodities of the country in order to inflate the value of the dollar. The pressure was brought to bear first upon the farmers, and effectively upon the farmers because they had no organization competent to meet the organization of the bankers.

* * * * * * *

Mr. RUBEY. I understand you are in favor of the McNary-Haugen bill?

Mr. WALLACE. I am in favor of any bill, including the McNary-Haugen bill, that will help the farmers out of their present trouble.

Mr. JOHNSON. Do you folks feel that this is one of the real, necessary measures that Congress should pass at this session?

Mr. WALLACE. We believe it should not only be passed at this session, but just as early as possible; we read every day of banks failing in the Northwest as a reflection of the condition of the farmers there, and that can not continue long until it is going to affect the whole economic organization of the country.

Mr. JOHNSON. What is your opinion about the rest of the labor organizations other than those you are now speaking for?

Mr. WALLACE. I represent possibly 5,000,000 workers. The rest of the labor organizations, the only ones that I know of that are not in the American Federation of Labor, are the railroad organizations, and I believe they are absolutely in sympathy. I can not speak for them directly.

Objections have been made to the word "shall."

That the President shall declare an emergency existing.

Why not "shall"? If an emergency exists, why not give the farmer the benefit? Why not equalize prices as contemplated? Why delay? The dairy people have spent a year in having the duty on butter and substitutes adjusted. Why not give immediate relief? Why not do away with the discrimination or desparity in tariff rates on butter and all basic agricultural commodities as quickly as possible?

Others say:

If it is going to work out, farmers will certainly raise four times the number of hogs.

Yes; it might glut the market if Uncle Sam's corncrib would hold out. Hogs can not be raised without corn or feed. Our supply of corn is limited. If hogs go up, corn is sure to follow, hence no incentive to increase the hog production.

Another objection:

This bill does not permit the corporation that is proposed to be created to buy a slaughtering plant.

The object is not to put packers nor any worthy and legitimate enterprise out of business, but to utilize existing facilities. It goes without saying that with the numerous idle packing plants and plants with sufficient capacity to take care of the business for the next 20 years there is no need of additional plants. Under such conditions there can be no question but that satisfactory arrangements may be made for processing, if found necessary to process livestock.

It has been stated:

The only people who are engaged in the export business are the Big Five packers.

Mr. Norman Draper, representing the Institute of American Meat Packers, of Chicago, stated:

The packers are now endeavoring to sell, and are selling every pound they can in every foreign market. The fact that they did not last year sell even more than 2,000,000,000 pounds abroad is due not so much to inability of people to purchase American meats in foreign countries, as so many people have been led to believe, but it is due quite as much to restrictions which foreign countries have thrown up against American meats. In France, for instance, we developed, after the war, an excellent market for American pork. To-day, and for a year, this market has been denied us, in spite of the fact that meat inspection in the United States is more efficient than that existing in any country in the world.

You are familiar with the Federal Trade Commission's report. Evidently some of the packers are continuing questionable practice. If so, it may be necessary to take over the export business to restore our foreign markets. What is true as to the meat industry is true as to the exportation of grain.

One contention is that the corporation would be absolutely at the mercy of the Big Five packers. If the Big Five are as unpatriotic and contemptible as the statements imply, we have some 700 or 800 independents. In 1923 a Federal inspection was conducted in 867 establishments in 261 cities and towns as compared with 899 in 1922. So if the Big Five can not be depended upon, there should be no difficulty in arranging with the 800 independent packers for processing.

One objection is raised:

If you are a farmer and I am a city fellow, and you slaughter a hog and sell him to me, I am obliged to pay the so-called equalization fee, which is estimated would run, on a 200-pound hog, anywhere from $2 to $5; that men are not going to pay that tax unless they are legally obliged to.

If all are dishonest and tax evaders, there would be no equalization fee; but all are not dishonest. The penalty clause would take care of the others. Just how the $2 and $5 equalization fee on 200-pound hogs was arrived at is beyond me. It requires no sharp-pointed pencil to calculate the exact fee. If the increase in the price of hogs is $4.29 a hundred, as it would have been last December, the increase on 200 pounds would be $8.58. The exportable surplus of hogs would run about 5 per cent to 8½ per cent—say, 10 per cent. If so, $4.29 a hundred loss to the corporation on 20 pounds would be 85.8 cents instead of $2 to $5 estimated. The net gain to the producer would be $4.29 a hundred on 200 pounds, or $8.58 minus 85.8 cents expense and loss on export, which would be $7.722 net gain to the producer on a 200-pound hog.

One contention is that if you declare an emergency on hogs you must immediately declare an emergency on cattle and sheep. Why not, if the current price is below the ratio price? If one is above, no emergency can be declared under the bill. If the ratio price on butter or wheat is above the current price, why deprive the wheat grower and the dairy producers of their just dues?

One objection raised is if you put up the price on pork 60 per cent people are going to eat less pork and more of other meat. No; cattle and mutton are high. Hogs are at a low price; consumption of cattle and mutton have not been affected.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. I will.

Mr. LINTHICUM. What does the gentleman estimate is the amount that the millers have on hand?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes. One contention is that it will make the packers and millers of this country an immediate present overnight of at least $200,000,000.

Some one has estimated the profit of the meat packers through the operation of the bill from $1,500,000,000 to $2,000,000,000.

According to the reports of food on hand in cold storage and warehouses, it is estimated that there is on hand at the present time:

Wheat	$52,000,000
Corn	4,362,000
Flour	3,759,000
Pork	54,316,000
Miscellaneous meats	4,475,000
Total	118,912,000
50 per cent increase in the price of flour would be	1,879,500
50 per cent increase in the price of pork and meat would be	29,395,500
Total	31,275,000

According to the testimony of Mr. Weld, of Swift & Co., whose testimony appears in the hearings on cold storage, the Bureau of Markets reported on hand July 1, 1919:

	Amount	Percentage of total production	Would last—
			Days
Eggs ..... cases	7,508,530	7	22
Butter ..... pounds	87,851,371	6	20
Poultry ..... do	48,895,000	3	10
Frozen beef ..... do	162,386,570	2	7
Pork products, including lard ..... do	1,047,808,000	10	35

About two-thirds of this quantity is in process of being cured in pickle and salt and is not ready for market.

By it it will be seen the amount on hand is only from 2 to 10 per cent of the total annual production of the various commodities, which, according to the report, would last only from 7 to 35 days, and that two-thirds of pork products is in process of being cured and not ready for the market.

If the packers should have livestock on hand, raised on their farms or bought, section 206 provides that the term "sale" means—

(1) The first sale of cattle, sheep, or swine, after the declaration of a special emergency for slaughter for market.

If the miller has on hand wheat grown on his farm or bought, (2) provides that the miller pays the equalization fee when milling or processed for market. So whatever wheat or livestock purchased or raised on farms owned by the miller or packer, if not acquired in pursuance of a sale described in paragraph (1) of that subdivision, is subject to the equalization fee.

Even if the 4,800 millers should profit to the extent of 50 per cent on $3,759,000 worth of flour, their profits would be	$1,879,500
Then suppose the packers should profit 60 per cent on their $59,000,000 worth of pork and meat; their profit would be	35,400,000
(which is less than 2 per cent of the estimated profits and not several hundred million dollars, as claimed.)
On the other hand, if the price of wheat should be advanced 50 cents a bushel and 600,000,000 bushels sold by the farmer for domestic consumption, the profits to the producers would be	300,000,000
10 cents a pound on 1,500,000,000 pounds of butter would be	150,000,000
If the price of corn should advance 25 cents a bushel on, say, 2,000,000,000 bushels marketed, the profit to the producers would be	500,000,000
If the price of 65,000,000 hogs should advance 4 cents, $10 a head, the profit would be	650,000,000
A grand total annually of	1,650,000,000

So if we are a genuine friend of the farmer, we should not be alarmed about giving the 4,800 millers and 807 packing establishments $37,279,500, where the 6,500,000 farmers would gain $1,600,000,000 annually. In other words, if the passage of the McNary-Haugen bill will result in a profit of $37,000,000 to the millers and packers, it will also at the same time result in a profit to the farmers of $1,600,000,000.

One contention is that the bill could not apply to cotton because we export 65 per cent; that if the cotton should go down to 15 cents, or 5 per cent below the ratio price, it might result in a loss to the cotton grower. The percentage of cotton exported is less than 50 per cent. Exports in 1920 were only 43.41 per cent, now below that. But say 50 per cent; if cotton should drop 5 per cent below the ratio price and 50 per cent of it exported, and if the crop is ten million 500-pound bales and 50 per cent exported, the gain to the cotton grower would be 5 cents a pound, or $25 a bale, net $125,000,000, which amount is $20,000,000 in excess of the total production of gold and silver in the United States.

Production of gold in the United States in 1922 was only	$49,096,000
Production of silver in the United States in 1922 was only	55,510,859
Total	104,606,859

Mr. McKEOWN. What effect will this ratio price have on the product? For instance, when wheat is bringing $1.59 under this law, domestic wheat for domestic purposes, what effect does that have on the price of flour? Does it raise the price of flour or not?

Mr. HAUGEN. If the price of wheat advances, naturally the price of flour will increase.

Mr. McKEOWN. That is what a great many people want to know—what effect this will have on the price of the finished product.

Mr. HAUGEN. I am glad the gentleman brought that up.

The bill has been characterized as a price-fixing bill. No; it is not a price-fixing bill but a bill to furnish a ready buyer of basic agricultural commodities at a price commensurate with that of other commodities. No person or agency can forecast what the price will be under the proposed bill any more than he can under the present marketing system.

Under it the prices of basic agricultural commodities will be determined by the prices of 404 commodities referred to as all commodities. If the prices of all commodities go up, up goes the price of basic agricultural commodities. If down, down goes the price of basic agricultural commodities. Under the present system prices of agricultural commodities are determined by the exporters, speculators, and gamblers, the bulls and bears on our exchanges. If the bulls and bears put the price up, up goes the price to the producer. If the bulls and bears put the price down, down goes the price to the producer.

Whenever the manipulation of grades and crooked dealings on the exchanges and in the export business depress the price or rob the producer of his legitimate world market, prices to the producers go down. Under the proposed bill, if the prices of all commodities go down, down goes the price of basic agricultural commodities in proportion.

So, unless one has knowledge of what is in the minds of the producers of all commodities, no one can tell in advance what the future price will be under the proposed bill. No one can even estimate future prices with any degree of accuracy.

Under the present market system frequently the prices of grain fluctuate to the extent of 20 cents a bushel in a single month. There will, of course, be fluctuations under the proposed act, but only in a small degree as compared with the fluctuation under the present policy. If you still insist that the measure is a price fixing bill, I ask you, Whom will you trust to fix prices? Shall it be by the exporters, speculators, and gamblers, or the manufacturer, laborer, and a Government agency? Have you more confidence in the gamblers and manipulators than you have in our Government? If so, I refer you to Federal Trade Commission report, June 18, 1923. You will find extracts from the report printed in the hearings, pages 689, 690, 694, 695, 696, and 697.

The bill has been characterized as socialistic, unworkable, bolshevistic, and by every other pet name. Well, there is nothing new about that. Every constructive act and remedial legislative bill suggested to correct wrongdoing or to relieve the public, especially to relieve agriculture, has been thus characterized. You will recall the pet names applied to the packer bill, the cotton futures and grain futures acts, the grain standards act, the Federal reserve act, the Federal land bank act, the War Finance Corporation act.

Many who are now opposed to this relief measure were even more pronounced in their denunciation of those bills, and I have no quarrel with any of them. Many opposing this measure, like all other measures, are sincere and actuated by the best motives. On the other hand, some interests may be more interested in how it concerns them personally than in the public welfare.

Objection has been raised to the Government financing the corporation and to the $50,000 expenditure to set the machinery of this bill in motion. After financing the War Finance Corporation, the Federal reserve system, the Federal land banks, and the railroads I am at a loss to know why six and one-half million farmers now in distress should be denied the paltry sum of $50,000 to set the machinery of this bill in operation and a loan of $200,000,000, or as much thereof as will be necessary. In my opinion the farmers should be given preference.

You recall that in time of need the farmers came to the rescue of Uncle Sam. During the war Congress fixed the minimum price of wheat at $2 and authorized the appointment of a commission to investigate and report on the price. It reported $2.20. Later transportation rates were advanced 6 cents, which brought the price of wheat up to $2.26. Instead of making it the minimum price, as contemplated by Congress, it was made the maximum price. The price of wheat at the time the bill fixing the price was under consideration was $3.38. Scandinavian countries were offering $1 premium, making the price $4.38. Mr. Hoover stated before the committee that he thought the price might go to $7 a bushel. A commission was appointed which ascertained and reported the ratio price between hogs and corn at 13 to 1. In other words, a hundred pounds of hog equals 13 bushels of corn. Corn was then selling at $2.05 in Chicago, but the price of hogs was fixed at $16.50, which was $10.15 below the ratio price fixed by the commission.

According to the Federal Trade Commission report, four packers increased their profits $121,000,000 above their pre-war profit. The packers' profit in 1917 was more than four times as great as their average yearly profit before the war, although their sales in dollars and cents, with even the inflated prices, had barely doubled. In the war years 1915, 1916, and 1917 four of the five packers made net profits of $178,000,000.

The millers made 175 per cent profit after the war. The millers asked that they be protected against loss and Congress promptly granted the request by section 5 of the act of March 4, 1919.

One contention is that packers and millers will profit by the bill. Do not worry about the packers and millers; they are capable of determining for themselves what is best for their interests. It is safe to say that if there were any profit to them in the bill they would be here supporting the bill and not fighting it. See statement by Mr. Draper, representing the Institute of American Meat Packers. See page 468:

Mr. CHAIRMAN. You are opposed to this bill?
Mr. DRAPER. The way it applies to the meat business.
Mr. CHAIRMAN. You are opposed to this bill?
Mr. DRAPER. Yes; in the way it applies to the meat business.

That should make it clear as to the attitude of the packers. Page 452, Mr. Draper stated:

To-day, and for a year, this market (France) has been denied us. In spite of the fact that meat inspection in the United States is more efficient than that existing in any country in the world.

The Federal Trade Commission report makes it clear, why? I am not going to discuss that phase of it. Years ago we had an agreement to let the report speak for itself.

If you will turn to page 685, statement by Mr. Husband, secretary of the Millers' National Federation:

The CHAIRMAN. Have you or any of your associates prepared or suggested any amendments to the bill?
Mr. HUSBAND. No, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. You are absolutely against it?
Mr. HUSBAND. Yes, sir.

Under regulations millers were allowed 25 cents a barrel profit instead of 13½ cents pre-war profit. They were not satisfied with that but took 45 cents. One made $283,000 in excess of the maximum price. The claim was settled by paying $8,000. Another, $19,000, who settled for $402. Both claims were settled without reauditing the accounts. This ought to make it clear as to millers' position and reasons for opposing the bill.

LOUIS W. HILL INDORSES M'NARY-HAUGEN BILL

The McNary-Haugen bill now before Congress was indorsed by Louis W. Hill, chairman of the Great Northern Railway, following conferences Thursday with St. Paul business men on the agricultural and general trade conditions of the Northwest.

"The operation of the principle developed in the bill should restore the purchasing power of the farmer and get him back on his feet," Mr. Hill said after hearing the bill explained by Frank W. Murphy, of Wheaton. "At the same time it should directly benefit industry, commerce, and transportation.

"I recognize that what the farmer needs and must have in order to get back on his feet is a better price for the things he is producing," Mr. Hill declared, "and I am heartily in favor of any sound and practical plan that will be of help to him. This bill seems to point the way clearly."

S. K. STEVENSON, Esq.,
Johnson County Bank Building, Iowa City, Iowa.

DEAR MR. STEVENSON: I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 13th instant.

I realize with every sympathy the unfortunate plight of the farmer and shall be only too happy to do what may be within my modest capacity toward supporting any well-considered measure of redress.

As to the McNary-Haugen bill, I inclose herewith copy of a letter which I wrote on this subject to Secretary Wallace recently, and I remain, with best wishes,

Very faithfully yours,

OTTO H. KAHN.

KUHN, LOEB & CO.,
New York, March 8, 1924.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I have gone carefully through the papers which you sent me. Not being an expert in matters of agriculture, being indeed but little acquainted through personal observations with the methods and ways of that industry, I am without competence to express a definite opinion on the details of the McNary-Haugen bill and on the practical workability of its provisions. It does seem to me that certain of the functions and responsibilities assigned by it to the Government could, and had better, be left to the private or semiprivate initiative of the farming industry.

As to the principle, however, which the bill seeks to apply to the present emergency, it seems to me, under the conditions such as I understand them to be, a logical sequence to policies which in other respects have long been generically characteristic of the trend of economic legislation in America, whichever party was in power. If I am correctly informed as to the situation and prospects of the farming industry, I believe the application of that principle, on carefully considered lines and within prudent limitations, to be warranted by the circumstances which exist and for some time have existed in agriculture and which are likely to result in grave and lasting national damage unless they are dealt with promptly and comprehensively.

No doubt strong arguments based upon economic orthodoxy can and will be adduced in opposition to the proposed theory, and various complexities and novel points will have to be met in respect of its practical application, including the question of the attitude and the actions which other nations may see fit to take in the face of it.

No man, I believe, is wise enough to foretell with assurance the precise results and repercussions of the operation of the scheme. But, unless the plight of the farmer is a good deal less serious and ominous than many reports and symptoms have led us to believe and unless an effective plan of relief can be devised of a less drastic character, it would seem to me that the Government would be justified in giving its indorsement to a fair test of a measure along the lines of the principle on which the McNary-Haugen bill rests, though full discussion and deliberation will, no doubt, lead to certain modifications of its present form and substance.

The farmer, finding himself, as we are informed, in an intolerable situation, is gravely discontented and under a sense of grievance toward the existing order of things. His is a toilsome calling at best, involving inevitable hardships and hazards, and usually a poorly requited one, indeed one of the least adequately remunerated among those which make up the sum total of the Nation's activities. The farming business is the largest in the country. The basic and vital necessity of the farming industry needs no emphasizing. The immense social value of the farming class to the State is beyond argument.

There can be no lasting prosperity in trade and industry, unless the farmer is reasonably prosperous. There can be no stable and propitious condition in the field of politics—using the term in its larger meaning—as long as the farmer harbors the resentful feeling that he is not accorded a square deal.

Not only is the farmer entitled in fairness to relief from conditions of maladjustment, which place him in a position of heavy disadvantage as compared to other callings, but the continuance of these conditions constitutes a serious social evil and a derangement of so grave a portent as to justify resort to an heroic remedy, if it must be admitted that the lesser measures heretofore applied or suggested are impotent to effect a cure.

It will be far less costly, I believe, to the country at large to bear the very slight addition to the cost of food which is involved in a reasonable trial of the theory embodied in the McNary-Haugen bill than to pay the penalty which would appear to be inescapable if the Nation countenanced or failed to redress a state of things that would leave agriculture languishing and declining and 12,000,000 farmers aggrieved, resentful, and deprived of a fair share of prosperity and well-being.

As to the fear of setting a precedent, I believe that, in a broad sense and in its underlying thought, the principle of the McNary-Haugen bill—granting the existence of the conditions which it aims to correct—rather follows than creates precedent. Moreover, aversion against or apprehension of establishing a precedent is never a valid reason for failure to do that which is justly called for. I feel assured that we may rely—and, indeed, under a popular system of government we must rely—upon the soundness and watchfulness of public opinion to see to it that precedents are not harmfully misapplied or abused.

I beg to remain, dear Mr. Secretary,

Very sincerely yours,

OTTO KAHN.

Hon. HENRY C. WALLACE,
Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

STATEMENT BY BERNARD M. BARUCH, NEW YORK CAPITALIST

Equality for agriculture is what the farmer is striving for. What are the inequalities? Other industries are organized and farming is not. Therefore the farmer buys in a more or less restricted market and sells in a competitive market.

The price obtained for the surplus determines the price the farmer receives for his total product. The price of American surplus wheat is made in the Liverpool market, where it comes in competition with the wheat produced by the cheapest labor in the world. But the price of a manufactured article is not necessarily determined by the price the surplus brings, because on account of Government protection the manufacturer can sell here all the market will absorb and sell or dump the balance in the markets of the world.

Therefore it is only just to permit the farmer to do what is necessary to correct the inequalities. It should be unnecessary for him to sell competitively, and the fixing of the price of his total production by the surplus that comes in competition with the cheapest labor in the world should be prevented. How can that be done? The provisions of the McNary-Haugen bill will do that. In the beginning let me say that I am not in favor of all the bill contains, but I do favor the principle of it, which will accomplish the following:

It will make cooperative marketing mandatory where it is now permissible. The price is not to be arbitrarily fixed by the farmer, but there is a minimum price below which wheat can not be sold. This figure is determined by a proper relationship with all other things on the index list of prices of the Department of Labor creating a proper relation between the results of labor in agriculture and the results of labor in other industries. Surely there is nothing unfair about that.

When the necessity occurs, the President will declare a crisis, let us say, in wheat. Then by mandate all selling of wheat will be fixed at a minimum price, which will be arrived at according to a fair relationship established by scientific and well-known principles of price ratios between wheat and other things. A computation will be made of the probable surplus and of the amount of money necessary to take care of that surplus. From the price at which the wheat is sold will be subtracted a certain amount, which will be used for the purpose of buying the surplus wheat at the minimum price.

From each bushel that the farmer sells he must pay into the agency that is established a certain number of cents a bushel, for which he will receive a certificate of interest. All the surplus wheat will be placed in a surplus-carrying corporation which will sell the surplus in the markets of the world and return to the farmer his proportionate share of the price received. Thus it will be seen that the farmer himself bears any loss that may be entailed and that it is not a loss that can fall upon the Government.

There are some who may read stern economic lectures concerning this, but as soon as the principle of the tariff and of modern business organization is admitted, the correctness and propriety of this organization must also be acknowledged. There is no arbitrary fixing of prices, but only a price that will create a fair and proper relationship between the labor engaged in agriculture and labor employed in other industries. The farmer will take care of the surplus and pocket the loss; the consumer will meet only the same condition that he meets when paying for the other things necessary for his daily life, whether it be rent or clothing.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Is it not true that the price of the farm products bears a very small relation to the price of the food products, and while wheat may decline from 60 to 75 per cent, the price of bread will decline only 2 or 3 per cent?

Mr. HAUGEN. To give an illustration of that, potatoes in my section of the country are selling for about 25 to 30 cents a bushel. We have been paying 35 cents for one potato at the hotel all winter. That is a fair illustration.

Mr. WEFALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. WEFALD. I remind the gentleman who asked the question of the fact that during the war when wheat was $3 a bushel or more, bread was only within 1 or 2 cents a loaf of what it is now.

Mr. McKEOWN. That is what I am trying to get at. What will be done to prevent them from going on and raising the price of the bread on the plea that we have raised the price of the products out of which bread is made, when the 5-cent loaf has not yet returned? There ought to be something in this bill to prevent that. Is there any way by which you can prevent those men from charging more than the bread is worth, in comparison with the price of wheat?

Mr. HAUGEN. There is nothing in this bill to do that, and this committee has no jurisdiction over that phase of it. We have a law on the statute books in respect to that, and all that is necessary is to put in force the laws that we have.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. ASWELL. The chairman will note that on page 42 of the majority report the thought is brought out that the increase of the cost of living per capita for bread alone will be $2.50 for the people of the United States, and that means $250,000,000 increase in the cost of living on account of the raising of your wheat price. That is in the majority report.

Mr. HAUGEN. That all depends upon the amount of bread a family consumes.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. The farmer is not responsible for the high price of bread.

Mr. HAUGEN. No; he is not.

According to the testimony printed in the hearings on the Brand bread bill the value of the ingredients in a loaf of bread that sells generally over the United States for 8 to 9 cents in loaves from 14 to 16 ounces is the first consideration. There is about a cent and a half's worth of wheat in such a loaf of bread, when it is full weight, and when the wheat is converted into flour the cost of the flour is in the neighborhood of 2 cents when good grades of flour are used.

As evidence of this, the United States Government is baking bread for the Army and they report the cost of all ingredients in a pound loaf of bread as low as a cent and three-quarters. Such bread is now being sold by the Army at 3 cents at Army camps and hospitals.

The Shults Baking Co., of New York, claim bread is costing them $0.0311 per pound, including all ingredients. This gives you the cost of the Army bread and also the cost claimed by one of the largest bakers in the country.

In the city of Washington bread is being sold by the Corby Bakery to the Navy as low as $0.0360 per pound loaf of the same quality that they are selling wholesale the same bread at the same time to retail merchants at 8 cents for a pound loaf.

With the cost of the materials in a loaf of bread established by the above at from 2 to 3 cents for a pound loaf, and the wholesale selling price generally over the United States being from 8 to 9 cents a loaf, it seems perfectly clear that the consumers are entitled to full weight, and that is the purpose of the Federal bread act.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of New York. I am anxious to be friendly to this bill, as are a great many city Members. The gentleman has stated that there is a surplus of certain commodities and he has not given any reason for the surplus. I hope the gentleman will as he goes along. It strikes me that with the paternalistic effect that this bill will have on the commodities in which there is not a surplus there will be a tendency not to create a diversification of crops with this legislation, but rather a tendency to intensify production on those things of which you have no surplus.

Mr. HAUGEN. If there is an increase in production, they penalize themselves. The greater the surplus is the greater will be the discount, of course, from the ratio price.

Mr. BLACK of New York. What is done in this bill to stimulate the diversifying of crops?

Mr. HAUGEN. There is nothing here to stimulate the diversifying of crops. We had inflated prices during the war. That did not increase production to any great extent. When you bring the price of corn up, you bring up the price of oats with it. When you bring up the price of wheat, the price of rye rises with it, and one will be just as profitable as the other. Here is your dairy business. Everybody says that there is a great deal of money in the dairy business. It has been profitable. It is not profitable to-day. What has happened? The bottom has fallen out of it. About a month ago butter was selling above the ratio price, and the other day it was down to 35¼ cents to 36¼ cents, say 36 cents. The ratio price was 45 cents. The price of butter was 9 cents below the ratio price. What does that mean to the farmer, 9 cents a pound on a price of 36 cents? That is 25 per cent.

The farmer to-day would receive 25 per cent more for his butter had the bill been in operation. One suggestion is to take care of the wheat farmer and that that is all that is necessary. Oh, yes; they admit that all are sick; all of them are going into bankruptcy. They say to take care of the few of them, that if you do take care of a few of them we will let the others take care of themselves. I take it that it is a question of the survival of the fittest. What unpardonable sin has the hog grower or the dairyman committed in this country? Are they not entitled to the same consideration as the wheat growers? The ratio price of hogs to-day is 60 per cent above the current price, and it is only 50 per cent on wheat, and still some say it is in the interest of the packers. No; it is not for the packers, and the packers do not want to come in under this bill.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman refers to dairy products.

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The bill refers to food products of cattle, sheep, and swine. Is it the gentleman's contention that the words "food products" do not include milk, cream, and butter?

Mr. HAUGEN. We consider them food out in our country.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes; and pretty good food; but I want to get the the gentleman's idea as to whether or not this bill would permit the corporation to fix the ratio price on all dairy products.

Mr. HAUGEN. If milk and butter are food products, they are included in the bill. Some try to make out that they are not.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I want to get a little information as to what you are going to do for the farmers. I have heard what you are doing to the fellows in the city. I see on page 19 you have changed the original provisions of this bill from requiring the buyer either to provide the scrip or the equalization fee, and you require the producer or the seller to pay the equalization fee.

Mr. HAUGEN. That is all by regulation.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I would like to ask the gentleman if the ratio price on wheat, say, is $1.50, and I come on the market and sell it and the equalization fee is determined at what—say 25 cents?

Mr. HAUGEN. You would not determine it at 25 because it would scarcely exceed over 10 or 12 cents. It might go to 15.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. When I sell the wheat for the ratio price do you deduct the fee from the ratio price, and I pay for it in that manner?

Mr. HAUGEN. If you sell the wheat under this bill—say they would most likely fix the equalization fee at 10 cents—the price advances from $1.09 to $1.59. The 10 cents paid in the equalization fee would leave you $1.49 in cash instead of $1.09, and at the end of the year if there is anything left of the equalization fee it would be proportioned out.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. In fact, then, the seller does not pay anything into the corporation directly?

Mr. HAUGEN. The grain buyer would collect it from the producer.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. You do not require——

Mr. HAUGEN. One moment. It may be paid into the equalization fund either by the producer or the purchaser of the grain may deduct from the price and remit the equalization fee to the corporation to be paid into the Treasury out of which the operating expenses and the losses will be paid.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. I will.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Has the gentleman any calculation as to the total value of the crops that are affected by the gentleman's bill?

Mr. HAUGEN. Much has been said about wheat. The yield of wheat runs about 700,000,000 bushels a year, up to a billion bushels. The average crop is about 750,000,000 bushels; for the current year, 781,000,000 bushels. Well, assuming the crop will be 750,000,000 and we will assume that there will be 150,000,000 bushels of surplus for export. Now, I know what the gentleman has in mind.

I will tell you what is the matter: They are shipping wheat through the United States in bond. And what are they doing? They are bringing in, in bond, Canadian wheat exported from our ports, or to be milled into flour and the flour to be exported from our ports, and what they are doing is substituting American rye and exporting that instead of the good Canadian wheat brought in; part is being exported as wheat and part as flour. Every time they bring in 1,000 pounds of wheat in bond, and while in this country substitute 1,000 pounds of rye, which they export either as wheat or flour, they rob our Government of the duty which should properly be collected on the wheat brought in, besides it adds to our surplus, and if this bill were in operation such a transaction would add to the loss of our surplus. Now——

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. On that question I will tell you what I have in mind. I know what the folks in the city I live in are going to ask me. They are going to ask me what is it going to cost us to help put the farmers on their feet, and I have been trying to make a rough calculation of what it is going to cost. If the total value of the products affected by this bill are, let us say, $2,000,000,000—$3,000,000,000, I do not know how much——

Mr. HAUGEN. The total value?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Say $5,000,000,000 affected by this bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. No.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Four billion dollars.

Mr. HAUGEN. Wheat, about 750,000,000 bushels at $1 a bushel, that would be $750,000,000. Corn, 3,000,000,000 bushels at 75 cents, would be $2,250,000,000.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. But you have got cattle, flour, rice, and all those things. Suppose it only aggregates $3,000,000,000?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes; more than that.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. And to be conservative you are going to raise the price about 20 per cent. Is that right? All right, that means you are going to increase the value to almost—I am not saying it is wrong or is not right—you are going to increase the value of those crops $600,000,000.

So that we ought to tell the American people that we are going to take out of the pockets of the consumers—I am not saying that it should not be done—this $100,000,000 and turn it over to the farmers in order to equalize prices. Is that right? I want to be fair.

Mr. HAUGEN. I believe in being fair.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. For every dollar of value of crops we buy we are going to take 20 cents out of the pockets of the consumer and turn it over to the farmer?

Mr. FREAR. That is argument simply. What is the increase for the clothing and shoes and all the manufactured articles that have a tariff to-day?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I am asking the gentleman a plain question.

Mr. HAUGEN. You are fair and right. I admit all you say. But how much do we give the organized industries? Here are the statistics. What is the purchasing power of the farmer? What is the price of commodities which the farmer must buy with his products? The value of his products is less than 50 per cent what it was a few years ago in its purchasing power.

Only a few years ago a thousand pounds of hogs would buy, for instance, two corn planters. To-day it would require 1,000 pounds to buy one. A few years ago a thousand pounds of hogs would buy a lumber wagon, and to-day it takes about 1,500 pounds to buy a lumber wagon. A thousand pounds of hogs would buy a wagon and a half a few years ago.

Now, as to farm labor, we used to pay $20 a month for labor. We pay $60 now. Where is the purchasing power of the farmer? You can tear down the tariff laws and you can open the gates now to immigration, and what will you accomplish? Your immigration laws and your tariff laws and your prices will be brought down to the level of competing countries abroad.

Now, I believe in the policy of a protective tariff. I believe in that great and cardinal principle of the party with which I am affiliated. I believe in encouraging and building up American industry that will benefit labor and result in the good of the common people.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Do you regard this bill as an outgrowth of the tariff?

Mr. HAUGEN. I believe in the great principles underlying the construction of our tariff laws. We may not agree on that or on any other subject, but this committee of which I am the chairman has no jurisdiction over the tariff. We did the best we could. The thought now is to equalize these prices, and, as Mr. Wallace, who represented the American Federation of Labor, stated before our committee, we appreciate that it is going to increase the price, but what is that to us? We are willing to pay it. It will increase the cost.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. About a billion dollars a year?

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to discuss this question without interruption.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Would the gentleman be willing to call this an internal tariff for the protection of the American farmer? Would you call it that?

Mr. HAUGEN. No. I would prefer to call it a bill for the equalization of prices. What I propose to do is to make the tariff absolute as to the farm products, as we do with other products.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Are you not going to tax the consumer? The protective tariff has worked for industry, and because it has not worked for agriculture you now hit upon a scheme of equalization, which will bring the prices of agriculture up?

Mr. HAUGEN. Exactly.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. We have got to admit in that that we are taxing the consumer?

Mr. HAUGEN. Absolutely. But every time we pass a bill restricting immigration or a tariff bill we generally add to the cost.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. How did it happen that the protective tariff which you fixed, which was wanted so much for the farmer, did not help the farmer?

Mr. HAUGEN. Generally it would protect the farmer, except in case of a surplus. In that case the farmer takes the price fixed on the surplus. There is no way of getting away from it. I have voted for restricted immigration and protective tariff consistently. While I believe in a protective tariff, I believe in one that will result to the common good of all the people of the Nation. Hence I have always contended that the farmers have never been given the full benefit of our tariff system. Tariff does not always raise the price. For instance, recently the duty on wheat was raised 12 cents a bushel; the price of wheat went down 10 cents. The object of the bill is to make the tariff applicable to the farmer as effectively as to organized industry, to sell for domestic consumption at one price and for export at the world price, and at the end of the operating period to proportionately equalize prices of the whole product. In other words, to make it possible for the farmer to do as organized industry does.

Mr. KINDRED. Going back to the question of how this bill will operate, as a concrete example and illustration of what the gentleman has already said, as I understood it, about increasing the price to the consumer of one-half a cent on a loaf of bread, is it not true that the retailer instead of charging the necessary half cent will make it to the ultimate consumer, the small consumer, 1 cent or 2 cents more for each loaf of bread?

Mr. HAUGEN. I will tell you this: You can double the price of wheat and sell bread at the same price that it is now sold for. There is another institution at the other end of the Avenue that may give attention to that.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit another short question?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes; but then I must decline to yield further.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Under the bill as first introduced the 15 cents which was to be paid by way of equalization for possible loss was to be paid into the post office by the buyer?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. When I sell my wheat I get $1.35, but I do not pay 15 cents into that fund, which is to equalize this loss. Who pays that 15 cents under this bill?

Mr. HAUGEN. That is deducted from the $1.60, and whatever is left of the 15 cents is returned proportionately at the end of the operating period.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. But I do not see where you get that 15 cents that is in the equalization fund.

Mr. HAUGEN. You deduct 15 cents from every bushel.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. But who pays the 15 cents?

Mr. HAUGEN. The producer pays it. He pays it into the treasury of the corporation, or the purchaser may deduct it from the ratio price and pay it into the treasury of the corporation. The regulations may require the producer to pay the equalization fee into the treasury of the corporation, or the amount may be deducted from the ratio price and be paid into the treasury by the purchaser.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Then it is not collected from the seller, but is collected when the product is sold?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes, indeed; on the first sale. Now, my friends, as I told you, I have no desire to tell a hard-luck story. It is a sure thing, my friends, that we know very little about what is going on in the country, and that we do not know all about the real conditions. The metropolitan press is not saying anything about the bank failures, and it is probably proper that they do not.

According to the annual report of the Secretary of Agriculture for 1923—

In 15 corn and wheat producing States 24½ per cent of owners of farms were in fact bankrupt, practically one out of every four bankrupt.

One million two hundred thousand left the farm to better their financial conditions in 1922.

In New York alone, for the year ending February, 1923, 26,000 moved from the farms to the cities.

In Michigan, 10 per cent of the farms are vacant and 13 per cent more are only partly worked.

According to the annual report of the Attorney General on bankruptcy among farmers—

The number of Iowa farmers in bankruptcy increased from 60 in 1913 to 469 in 1923. Farmers' percentage of all cases in bankruptcy increased from 16.8 per cent in 1913 to 52.3 per cent in 1923. The number of farmers in all cases in bankruptcy in all the States increased from 942 in 1913 to 5,940 in 1923, an increase of 4,998 in 10 years.

Bank failures in the United States have increased by leaps and bounds.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. I can not yield, because I would be taking time from other gentlemen. I do not want to be discourteous, but I can not yield and take time away from other gentlemen.

I have no desire to sound a note of alarm. By nature I am an optimist. I prefer to look at the bright side of things rather than the dark side. I am aware that "knock and the world knocks with you," but, as we know, in recent years we have had an unusual flow of hard-luck talk about the depressed conditions in agriculture. Many well-meaning people have been most generous in their utterances along that line. Agitators along various lines, in their mad chase to further their interests and gratify their ambitions, have talked and talked, knocked and knocked, alleging that all their ills are the results of unjust and discriminatory law. While I do not subscribe to that, unfortunately as a result many have been led to believe that there is something radically wrong in our laws.

While bank failures, farm-mortgage foreclosures, and bankruptcy proceedings are very much in evidence everywhere, while conditions are far from what one would desire, I do not share in the contention that our troubles are due to legislation enacted, while practically every measure suggested having for its object to better conditions has been enacted, notwithstanding every effort should be made to further improve conditions, especially agriculture.

All practically agree that upon agriculture, our basic industry, rests the whole structure. Our experience in recent years seems to have demonstrated that with absolute finality—that the stability, growth, and greatness of our Nation, yes, the progress of prosperity and happiness of our people, depend upon the success of the tillers of the soil.

As a class the farmer is the great conservative force of our Nation. All wealth springs from Mother Earth. It is the farmer who produces new wealth. He furnishes about 50 per cent of our exports. Our gold reserves or balance of trade is dependent on the tillers of the soil. Without his industry and success our gold reserve and balance of trade would dwindle into insignificance.

About one-half of the American people live in rural districts; of that number six and one-half million farmers employ a like number of wage earners, which, together with the members of their families make up a total of more than thirty-one million tilling six and one-half million farms producing annually from seven hundred million to ten hundred million bushels of wheat, from six to seven billion bushels of cereals, or, in other words, about one-third of the world's production of wheat or cereals.

According to the figures furnished by the Department of Agriculture we have:

Head of cattle	66, 801, 000
Head of swine	65, 000, 000
Head of sheep	39, 361, 000

Twenty-four million six hundred and seventy-five thousand milk cows giving more than 12,000,000,000 gallons of milk annually, about 15,000,000 pounds of beef, veal, pork, and mutton. The livestock on the farms on the 1st of January and the 1918 crop was valued at $24,700,000,000, which in amount was more than three times the then stock of money in the United States, even after our paper mills and printing presses had been running overtime turning out all kinds of money. According to recent reports the estimated value of crops and livestock have shrunk to about one-third.

It goes without saying that our export trade is dependent upon the products of the farm. The farmer furnishes on an average about one-half of our total export. One year as high as 84 per cent. It is clear without his industry and success our balance of trade now in our favor would turn into an adverse balance to be paid in gold.

As a result our gold reserve would disappear. American exchange, now at premium, will go below par and thus deflate our currency and further deflate the purchasing power of agricultural products.

One suggestion is to repeal our tariff laws and to lower the American wage scale and high standard of living to a world level, so as to enable the American producer to compete with the products of the world; to increase the export of the products of our American mills and factories and exchange them for food. Yes; under such arrangement we might succeed in doing that for a while, but only for a short time.

Just as sure as the sun rises in the east and sets in the west, without prosperity in agriculture our factories and mills and our banks would crumble to pieces. Our railroads would rust from idleness, our beautiful towns, villages, and cities, including our schoolhouses in the valleys and churches on the hilltops, would to a large extent suffer. Our grand and glorious Government, its splendid and magnificent institutions, would materially suffer. Much of our productive farms, producing bread in quantities sufficient to satisfy not only 112,000,000 of our own people but millions in far lands, would return to unproductivity.

The product of the farm is food. Food supplies fuel and energy; yes, life! The recent war demonstrated the value of food. No matter how strong and courageous the young man may be he can not long fight or endure without food. What is true of a human is true of a nation. You recall that during the war the munition trains and passenger trains were sidetracked, and the trains carrying pork and flour and every train carrying food was given right of way. Why? Because it carried food, the most essential aid to the men and women at the front in winning the war! The war was not won because of our munition factories and automobile factories, but more because of our bread baskets, our supplies of food, which made it possible for our brave and heroic men and women to carry the war to a successful conclusion.

You recall that only a few years ago our factories and mills were running on part time with about 35 per cent production. As a result, 6,000,000 men were walking the streets, and that without creating a national disturbance; disturbances here and there, but not to the extent of a national calamity.

What would happen with a failure of crop, or only a 35 per cent production? It would create not only a national calamity but a condition of great alarm throughout the world. Millions and millions of our people would starve. Not only that, but the farmers' purchasing power, about 35 per cent of the total purchasing power, would naturally be cut in the same proportion. As a result, millions of wage earners would again be without a job, factories and mills would crumble.

Thus I might go on, but I believe this sufficient to indicate the importance of our basic industry—agriculture—its success and prosperity. If my contention is well taken, if the tiller of the soil is entitled to a consideration, they are entitled to more than flattery, to more than party-platform promises, to more than promises made by self-professed friends of the farmer who work in and out of season to defeat every measure having for its object the improvement of agricultural conditions. No, my friends, glittering generalities, unfulfilled promises, and legislation to extend credit, which will run him more into debt, to create a few soft berths in the public crib, or legislation to extract large sums of money from the Treasury afford no relief to the farmer. He is entitled to something more substantial in order that prosperity may again be restored to agriculture.

I thank you. [Applause.]

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield just for a question?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly; I will be glad to yield.

Mr. LOZIER. I am sympathetic with your argument and commend you for its fairness. Is it not true that the agricultural distress which is prevailing throughout the United States is being reflected in the commercial and industrial centers to such an extent that in 1921 and 1922 the amount of new capital invested in corporations or chartered companies was $11,000,000,000 less than in 1919 and 1920, and the total bank clearings in 1921 and 1922 were $93,000,000,000 less than in 1919 and 1920, and is not this distress ultimately going to be felt more keenly in the industrial and commercial centers of the Nation?

Mr. HAUGEN. I believe it is felt right now. He is entitled to a square deal and equalization in prices, to restore the purchasing power of his products to a level with that of other products, so as to give him more money with which to pay his debts rather than to run him into debt. The purchasing power of the American farmer must be restored. This will be done if the Members from the East or the Members from the South will join with the Members from the Middle West and Northwest—who are unanimously for this bill—and pass this bill, frequently referred to as the "Merry-Haugen bill." [Applause.]

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I make the point there is no quorum present.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, if I may, I would like to yield three minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CLAGUE]. Will the gentleman from Maryland withhold his point of order for three minutes?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes; I will.

Mr. CLAGUE. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, persons whose self-interest is advertently affected by any legislative enactment or proposed enactment readily find the weaknesses in any bill proposed in Congress. Against no bill have more bitter objections been made than at the McNary-Haugen bill. The Committee on Agriculture of this body has devoted nearly four months of earnest study to the question of agricultural relief. It has heard dozens of reasons, both for and against the several measures which it has under consideration, and especially this one. Many hundreds of pages of testimony have been taken, thousands of petitions have been received, practically all in favor of the bill, and at the conclusion of all of this study of the problem our committee by a favorable vote of 14 to 6 has brought in the measure now before us.

In my judgment no measure has ever been considered of its character as to which more things can be said on the favorable side with full truth. Some of the opponents of the bill, particularly in the grain trade, have unfortunately stooped to vituperation and abuse instead of to argument. At the outset of this debate it is my desire to bring before Members of the House a brief discussion of some of the opposing assertions that are most frequently heard. Directly or in substance those who oppose the bill have reasons of self-interest, or who misunderstand it, or who honestly hold political and governmental views with which the bill conflicts have said that the bill is one or all of the following:

1. Unworkable.
2. Unsound.
3. Uneconomic.
4. Unconstitutional.
5. Un-American.
6. Unnatural.

I will briefly discuss the thought as I understand it and the argument answering these challenges.

(1) Opponents of the bill say it will increase production but is unworkable. How can it produce results and be unworkable at the same time?

(a) Can a man buy things if he has money to pay for them? Certainly.

(b) Can a man sell things that others want if he is willing to sell them at the market price? Of course he can.

(c) Can you hire someone to do a service for you, like milling wheat or slaughtering hogs, if you have the raw product and are willing to buy the services, especially when both the millers and packers have ample capacity and would kill the same hogs and mill the same wheat if there were no McNary-Haugen law? Undoubtedly you can.

(d) Can the agencies that sell abroad now, sell abroad next year? Of course they can and the corporation will compensate them for their services. It does not put them out of business.

(e) Can the corporation with the powers given it collect fees? The other branches of the Government do this now in millions of cases. Undoubtedly this creature of government can do it, too.

(f) Can the Government refund moneys if it collects too much? It does it now by the millions of dollars. The cooperatives do it by distributing their patronage dividends. Private corporations do it.

(g) Can the Government regulate imports? Of course it can and does and has from the beginning of the Nation. Opponents speak of bootlegging in the case of hogs. Inasmuch as 275 firms kill 65 per cent of all American livestock, and these are already under Federal supervision, enforcement will not be so difficult as some would have you believe. The true reason for the opposition to the bill is not that it will not work—it is that it will.

(2) Is the bill unsound? I say it is sound public policy. It is always sound for government to do for the citizen things required by the public welfare that the citizen can not do for himself. We are confronted with a condition in our national life due to the farm crisis—and not a theory. Is it sound to restore farming to a sound basis? Is it sound to arrange a solution that will save our export trade in farm products? Agriculture contributed nearly $2,000,000,000 in 1923 to the exports of $4,000,000,000 from the United States. Is it sound to bring this new wealth into the United States? Of course it is. It is one of the factors, and a large one, that has made our Nation in less than 150 years the greatest Nation in the world. Starving out farmers will not be of service to the Nation. The bill in effect organizes American agriculture in the only way it can be done fully to handle its export surpluses. The Webb-Pomerene and Edge laws were passed to help industry and do the same things in principle.

(3) Is the proposal uneconomic? If saving the business well-being of 35,000,000 of our people—yes; otherwise—no. As stated above, agriculture contributes $2,000,000,000 to our $4,000,000,000 worth of yearly exports. It is good business to keep this market. Good business is sound economics. It takes the dear old law of supply and demand and make it work for us and not ruin us—just as we harness the mountain stream and control the law of gravity in its operation to do good instead of harm. The bill reduces available supply and this increases the price. It uses what we have for the greatest good of all the people. This is the soundest of economics.

(4) Is it unconstitutional? Only the Supreme Court can finally decide that question, but good constitutional lawyers passed on this, and they all say that it is not. The brief submitted with the report of the Committee on Agriculture to the House of Representatives sustains every constitutional point. The unconstitutionality smoke screen is a mere attempt to kill the bill by those who fear their self-interest may suffer.

(5) Is it un-American? Only if a square deal is. Industry, labor, transportation, and finance are all in many senses special beneficiaries of existing legislation. The farmer supplies the food and is entitled to a seat at the table.

(6) Is it unnatural? It is just as unnatural as the tariff that we have had over 100 years. It is no more unnatural than antitoxin for diphtheria or insulin for diabetes. The trouble is not a broken leg; it is a disordered system that is not functioning right. The remedy prescribed by the bill was not prepared by quacks and politicians but by those who for many years have been and now are the farmers' ablest advisers and his true friends.

It has been stated that the bill will—

1. Increase the cost of living.
2. Result in overproduction.
3. Produce a business panic.
4. Destroy the agricultural cooperative association.
5. Invite retaliation by foreign countries.
6. Necessitate helping other industries—for instance, like copper and straw hats.

There is not time to analyze more than a few of the alleged dire calamities (?) that will happen if Congress passes this bill.

IT WILL INCREASE THE COST OF LIVING

This is not a necessary corollary. Since 1918 wheat has dropped over 50 per cent in price in Minneapolis, but the Federal Trade Commission reports that bread there has come down only 2 per cent. If cutting the price of wheat from over two to about one dollar per bushel has reduced the bread price only 2 per cent, it is certain that adding 50 cents to the wheat price need not add much to the price of bread.

When pork was 8 cents a pound in 1913, ham was 27 cents per pound. Later pork went to the sky but did not stay long. When it got back to 8 cents, ham was still 48 cents.

There is plenty of slack to be taken up.

If 50 cents is added to the 600,000,000 bushels of wheat used at home, it means $300,000,000 to be provided from somewhere. Much of it can be gotten by taking up slack between producer and consumer. But if none of it can, it only adds about $2.60 per head per year to living costs of all the people, including the farmer. Aside from this there is no reason in justice or economics why consumers should get foodstuffs at less than the cost of production—to the ruin of American farming. Economic justice calls for an even sharing of the burdens as between all classes of the people.

An important fact commonly overlooked is that the usual solution of "let the situation cure itself" means elevating prices—that is, raising cost of living—by cutting down production until such a real scarcity occurs that prices will be forced up to a point that will encourage farmers to keep on producing. Why destroy hundreds of thousands of farm homes to get a result that can be had without such a cruel remedy? The American Federation of Labor recognized the situation and sent a representative before the House Committee on Agriculture to favor the McNary-Haugen bill.

IT WILL CAUSE GREAT OVERPRODUCTION

This again does not follow. To begin with, there has been no serious overproduction. Nor is there now. Our wheat price is above the world price, and our hog price about at pre-war level. The trouble is that it takes about one and one-half times as many bushels of wheat, and almost twice as many pounds of pork to buy things as it took before the war. What we seek is to restore reasonable price relations. The patient has not a broken leg; he has rheumatism due to toxemia from infected tonsils. He does not need his leg amputated; he needs to have his tonsils—the export surplus—removed. The farmer will not overproduce grossly, because—

1. The export losses are assessed back on him.
2. The ratio price will not be high enough to give him great encouragement. Wheat above $2 for over three years heretofore brought a peak production of only 968,000,000 bushels; why should $1.50 be so enormously stimulating?
3. Increasing yield per acre is expensive and the farmer has no money to apply to this purpose—i. e., for fertilizers, new machinery, and more work stock.
4. Farmers and farmers' sons have been driven to town so that farms are running shorthanded. Besides farm wages are 100 per cent above pre-war.
5. Fertility has been progressively depleted and there are no new lands of attractive quality left in the United States.
6. With hogs and wheat both put on a ratio basis there will be little or no motive to devote corn land to wheat or vice versa.
7. It will take a period of years to turn the tide that is now running away from the farm back toward it. Indications right now are for a wheat crop under 750,000,000 bushels. And finally,
8. Why should people get so "het up" if the farmer should try to get himself out of the hole he has been put in by trying to produce in order to pay his debts?

The United States Chamber of Commerce magazine, The Nation's Business, talks about farm "bunk." This is the stuff the chamber and others are handing to the farmer; not what he is demanding shall be created for him, namely, a business agency to put him on an equality with commerce, industry, and labor, which are cared for by existing laws.

IT WILL DESTROY COOPERATIVE ORGANIZATIONS

That is what the enemies of the bill say. Most of them are also enemies of cooperation. Some among the latter, however, see the situation more clearly. These are members of the old-line grain trade. They say it will effectuate nation-wide cooperation at one stroke. What hundreds of organizations and thousands of individual cooperators think is shown by the following quotation from a telegram to the President:

> On behalf of 16,000 members of the North Dakota Wheat Growers' Association we strongly urge the passage of the McNary-Haugen bill in preference to all other farm relief measures introduced in Congress. We are convinced that this is the only measure that will give immediate relief. * * * Farmers of the United States will not be satisfied with relief measures other than this.

This sounds almost like a group of industrialists or business or labor representatives demanding something they want, like tariff protection. The orthodox economists tell us how bad the tariff is for them, but it beats all how they have thriven on over 100 years of it. The bill will not hurt the cooperatives. A special provision in the bill requires this.

IT WILL DESTROY OUR PRESENT WONDERFUL FUTURE TRADING AND GENERAL DISTRIBUTION

No one can tell fully what effect the bill will have on future trading. It will reduce hazards and fluctuations—effects agreed by almost all as desirable. It will probably reduce the volume of futures, but it will not destroy the system. As to the effect on the spot grain trade, note this quotation from a letter from a grain man of lifelong experience:

I believe the bill could operate practically to the great help of the grain and stock raiser and with no harm to the present dealers in the commodities affected. * * * When you brush aside all the foolish arguments the grain men and millers advance against the bill you expose the fact that they are afraid their business is going to be hurt, and while they profess an interest in the farmers' welfare that interest is lost sight of if they fear their own interests are threatened.

Prominent millers and grain men in many parts of the country share and have expressed similar views to those quoted above.

PASSAGE OF THE BILL WILL INVITE RETALIATION BY FOREIGN COUNTRIES

We sell our pork products to nations that are short of producing their own needs. The same is true of our wheat and flour. The corporation will sell at world prices. Just why will importing nations object to receiving things they need and want? The talk about dumping and reprisals is based on misrepresentation or on misunderstanding of the legislation. Our crops are now dumped. Under the McNary-Haugen bill they will be marketed in an orderly way through present channels under direction of a central supervisory organization. Now, the weight of our whole wheat crop bears on the world market; under the McNary-Haugen plan only the export surplus will so bear down on the world price.

As far as retaliation is concerned, look what has ever been said about our tariff laws and what in recent years has been said of our immigration laws. It is time, anyway, we considered our own interests as other nations do—trust them to look out for themselves.

Time forbids attempting to discuss more of the objections that are raised to the bill. One nationally known economist objects because successful operation of the plan will defer free trade 50 years more. Think of using the distressed and economically defenseless farmer as the fulcrum for the cruel lever that shall overturn protection of American industry and labor.

CONCLUSION

Genuine friends of the farmer should rather concern themselves with whether the bill will produce the results that are claimed for it. I have already indicated briefly the fundamental features as to its workability in my remarks. Subsequently I hope to develop this theme to show that the bill is absolutely workable and will produce the results. This the minority of the committee in its report said:

When this bill takes effect as to wheat, the price of $1 wheat will necessarily rise to over $1.50.

This will cure the officious price disparity between wheat and the commodities the farmer must buy; the same effect will be observed as to hogs and their products when they are brought under the effect of this bill. This bill is the only plan that seeks farm troubles where they exist and attempts to cure them where they are found. [Applause.]

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. ASWELL. Under the disposition of the time, Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. VOIGT] be permitted to speak.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman from Maryland withhold his point a moment?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. May I suggest to the gentleman that, under the rule, there is required a recess at 6 o'clock. If the gentleman should persist in his point and a call of the House came, that would take until a quarter of six, which would leave 15 minutes. Does not the gentleman think, under those circumstances, nothing would be accomplished?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio I think this is a very important bill and I think the Members ought to be here to listen to the discussion. I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, another roll call would consume time almost up to 6 o'clock and, under the rule, we recess at that time. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SANDERS of Indiana, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9033) declaring an emergency in respect of certain agricultural commodities, to promote equality between agricultural commodities and other commodities, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

Mr. ROSENBLOOM, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 8905. An act to authorize the settlement of the indebtedness of the Kingdom of Hungary to the United States of America.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL

Mr. ROSENBLOOM, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 2065. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of Chicago to construct a bridge across the Calumet River in the vicinity of One hundred and thirty-fourth Street, in the city of Chicago, county of Cook, State of Illinois;

H. R. 2498. An act for the relief of the East LaHave Transportation Co. (Ltd.), owner; A. Picard & Co., owner of cargo; and George H. Corkum, Leopold S. Conrad, Wilson Zinck, Freeman Beck, Sidney Knickle, and Norman E. LeGay, crew, of the schooner Con Rein, sunk by United States submarine K–4;

H. R. 1629. An act authorizing the removal of the restrictions from 40 acres of the allotment of Isaac Jack, a Seneca Indian, and for other purposes;

H. R. 837. An act to exempt from taxation certain property of the Daughters of the American Revolution in Washington, D. C.;

H. R. 694. An act to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief of the Saginaw, Swan Creek, and Black River Band of Chippewa Indians in the State of Michigan, and for other purposes," approved June 25, 1910;

H. R. 2881. An act to compensate three Comanche Indians of the Kiowa Reservation;

H. R. 2887. An act to authorize the extension of the period of restriction against alienation on the homestead allotments made to members of the Kansas or Kaw Tribe of Indians in Oklahoma;

H. R. 3183. An act for the relief of Rush O. Fellows;

H. R. 3800. An act to cancel an allotment of land made to Mary Crane or Ho-tah-kah-win-kaw, a deceased Indian, embracing land within the Winnebago Indian Reservation in Nebraska;

H. R. 3900. An act to cancel two allotments made to Richard Bell, deceased, embracing land within the Round Valley Indian Reservation in California;

H. R. 4122. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to revive, with amendments, an act to incorporate the Medical Society of the District of Columbia," approved July 7, 1838, as amended;

H. R. 4200. An act to provide for the cleaning of the exterior of the post-office building at Cincinnati, Ohio;

H. R. 4462. An act to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the payment of the Choctaw and Chickasaw town-site fund, and for other purposes";

H. R. 4494. An act authorizing extensions of time for the payment of purchase money due under certain homestead entries and Government land purchases within the Fort Berthold Indian Reservation, N. Dak.;

H. R. 4647. An act for the relief of the Underwood Typewriter Co. and Frank P. Trott;

H. R. 5808. An act for the relief of Edward T. Williams;

H. R. 6012. An act to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to ascertain the cost to the Southern Pacific Co., a corporation, and the amounts expended by it from December 1, 1906, to November 30, 1907, in closing and controlling the break in the Colorado River, and to render judgment therefor, as herein provided;

H. R. 6059. An act authorizing the conveyance to the city of Washington, Mo., of 10 feet of the Federal building site in said city for the extension of the existing public alley through the entire block from Oak to Lafayette Streets;

H. R. 6298. An act to authorize the leasing for oil and gas mining purposes of unallotted lands on Indian reservations affected by the proviso to section 3 of the act of February 28, 1891;

H. R. 6810. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Millersburg & Liverpool Bridge Corporation and its successors to construct a bridge across the Susquehanna River at Millersburg, Pa.;

H. R. 7913. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in any claims which the Creek Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes;

H. R. 7063. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State of Illinois and the State of Iowa, or either of them, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River connecting the county of Carroll, Ill., and the county of Jackson, Iowa;

H. R. 7846. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the North Branch of the Susquehanna River from the city of Wilkes-Barre to the borough of Dorranceton, Pa.;

H. R. 8229. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of St. Paul, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River; and

H. R. 8304. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of Chicago to construct a bridge across the Calumet River at or near One hundredth Street, in the city of Chicago, county of Cook, State of Illinois.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER. The Chair designates to preside this evening the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON].

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of a tariff on copper.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a statement compiled by Mr. F. N. Stacey, formerly a statistician in the Census Bureau, commenting upon the provisions of the McNary-Haugen bill.

Mr. TINCHER. I object.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Federal Constitution, including two brief papers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

THE M'NARY-HAUGEN BILL

Mr. LILLY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the McNary-Haugen bill is intended to, and will, in my opinion, benefit agricultural interests to a certain extent. While it will not give all the relief needed and deserved, yet it seems to me that the friend of the farmer could not refuse to support the bill. The farmer has suffered more severely during the past three years than he has ever suffered during the history of this Nation. He pays an enormous price for his necessities, and he is compelled to sell his products, when he can find a market at all, at a price far less than the cost of production. This bill is the only measure that has been introduced and sufficiently urged to bring about its consideration that tends in the least to give the farmer relief.

Mr. Speaker, the farmer has been unfairly treated. The Sixty-seventh and Sixty-eighth Congresses seemingly have tried to legislate to benefit every class of industry with the exception of the agricultural class, and unless we do something for this class the result will be that the agricultural interests will be reduced finally to such an extent that the Nation will be in danger. We all know that agriculture is the backbone of the entire Nation.

Who is to blame for the neglect and refusal to relieve the farmer? The answer is, the people and party who have had control of this Government since 1920. We are a productive Nation, and we produce and are capable of producing agricultural products far in excess of consumption. If agriculture is to prosper, we must have a market not only at home but abroad; we must have transportation rates that are not excessive; we must have commerce with other countries. You Republicans, who have been in control of this Government, by your actions have absolutely isolated us and deprived us of a foreign market. You have stood idly by and allowed transportation rates to be increased to such an extent that the shipment of farm produce is almost out of the question. You have refused to join the League of Nations or adopt any similar policy that will give us foreign trade; instead, you have enacted the iniquitous Fordney-McCumber tariff bill for the benefit of special interests, and other nations seeing these policies have retaliated by passing tariff laws which practically prevent the sale of our products in those countries.

I want to impress upon you that the farmer has had his eyes opened. He knows how he has been treated; he is holding us responsible for his losses and for the bank failures in the agricultural districts which have exceeded anything of the kind in the history of the country. It is time that we also wake up to a sense of our duty and give the interests of the farmers some consideration and progressive legislation; and this Nation had better adopt, and that just as soon as possible, some adequate foreign policy.

As I said in the beginning, this bill does not provide all the relief the farmer should have; it is not permanent, but since it is the only measure allowed to be reported we should vote for this bill without political prejudice.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, under the privilege of extending my remarks on the McNary-Haugen bill, I desire to insert the following letters, written by myself.

The first letter is to the editor of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat in reply to an article which appeared in that paper written by Hon. HENRY T. RAINEY.

The second letter is to the editor of the Boonville Advertiser, answering an article written by C. F. Kelley, a miller, which appeared in that paper in opposition to the McNary-Haugen bill. My reply was made at the suggestion of the editor, so that the farmers of that locality might have opportunity to hear both sides of the question.

To the EDITOR ST. LOUIS GLOBE DEMOCRAT,

St. Louis, Mo.:

The Hon. HENRY T. RAINEY, Member of Congress from the twentieth district of Illinois, is a very distinguished Member of that body. His service extends over a period of about 20 years. I have great regard for him personally and great admiration for his ability as a legislator. In a recent dispatch from Washington he is made to appear as answering a speech made by me on the McNary-Haugen bill. Having been placed in this attitude I feel that I should briefly make reply to Mr. RAINEY'S statement. I am a member of the Committee on Agriculture, which prepared and reported this bill. We have had it under consideration for the past four months, during which time we have had almost daily meetings upon it. I have attended all of these sessions of the committee, and I therefore believe I can speak as one having knowledge in regard to the provisions and objects of this important piece of proposed legislation.

Mr. RAINEY is opposed to the enactment of the McNary-Haugen bill. He has made a number of speeches against it, and the article which appeared in the Globe Democrat of May 13 is similar to others made by him. If fact, Mr. RAINEY has, probably without his own knowledge, furnished a great deal of material which had been used by the grain exchanges and the grain speculators of Chicago in their fight against this measure. One of his speeches appears in full in a publication issued by the grain dealers of Chicago.

In the article which appears in the Globe Democrat Mr. RAINEY says:

> "If I could make myself believe that the McNary-Haugen bill would accomplish what its proponents claim for it, I would be shouting for it from the housetops."

It therefore behooves me to convert him if it is possible for me to do so. I want to call his attention to the primary object of this legislation. The corporation created by this act will first ascertain the amount of the export surplus of the basic agricultural product and then it will go into the market and purchase at the ratio price that amount. The amount so purchased will be exported, not necessarily all at once, but if it be wheat or other nonperishable products it may be stored and held awaiting such time as the corporation may obtain a satisfactory price for it abroad. Thus the corporation will diminish the available domestic supply. By this process the price of the remaining product will be raised, and if there were no other provisions in the bill the very fact that the surplus would be exported would have a very strong influence in bringing about an increase in the price of the product remaining in the domestic market. If Mr. RAINEY doubts the fact that a diminishing supply increases prices, he doubts the operation of the law of supply and demand. I want to illustrate how this operates, and herewith give you some figures:

Sheep:	Head
1910	52,500,000
1920	35,000,000
Reduction	17,500,000

Value:
1920	$395,000,000
1910	232,000,000
Difference	163,000,000

In other words, in spite of a reduction of 17,500,000 head, the flocks of the United States were worth $163,000,000 more.

Take cotton as another illustration of the fact that a reduced supply increases prices.

Cotton:	Bales
1914	16,000,000
1923	10,000,000
Difference	6,000,000

Value, December 1 basis:
1923	$1,563,000,000
1914	549,000,000
Difference	1,014,000,000

Despite the fact that we had a crop of 6,000,000 bales more in 1914 than in 1923 the value of the crop in 1914 was more than a billion less. So that no matter how it may be brought about, if the supply is reduced prices will be increased. This same condition may be illustrated by taking other crops. Take potatoes, for instance.

Potatoes:	Bushels
1922	453,000,000
1923	412,000,000
Difference	41,000,000

But the crop, with 41,000,000 bushels less in 1923, was worth $76,000,000 more than the larger crop of 1922. Mr. RAINEY need have no doubt as to the efficiency of reduction of supply based upon exportation producing the desired result of placing farming on an equality with trade, industry, and labor. He says:

"A great many farm organizations are vigorously opposing the McNary-Haugen bill."

Scores and scores of farm organizations have petitioned our committee and the Senate committee to pass this legislation, and so far as I know only one or two have opposed it. One of these was the Oklahoma Wheat Growers' Association, which first opposed it and later advised the committee of the House that fully 90 per cent of its members had reversed their position, and that they had at first opposed it because of misrepresentation as to the purpose and effect of the measure. Not only have the farm organizations practically unanimously indorsed this bill, but it has also been indorsed by men who have had years of experience in the marketing of farm products. Managers and officers of marketing associations who have handled as high as $2,000,000 worth of livestock in a single year, and many million dollars' worth of wheat and other grain have come before our committee and indorsed the McNary-Haugen bill.

Mr. RAINEY says the directors of the corporation are given most unusual powers. As a matter of fact the powers conferred are almost identically the same as those conferred upon most any private corporation engaged in similar activities. In some respects the powers of the Agricultural Export Corporation are less than those of private corporations. The corporation created under this act is denied the right to construct, purchase, or to own processing facilities, such as packing houses, mills, elevators, warehouses, etc. We have endeavored in this act to give the corporation all the powers necessary in order that it may function properly; to do otherwise would be to make it inefficient and unsuccessful.

Mr. RAINEY's statement—

"No man can hazard a guess as to how many employees will be needed"— is an intimation that a very large number of employees will be necessary, whereas it is a fact that this bill will not require "an army of Government officials" to enforce it. The bill specifically requires that the corporation shall use the existing agencies, and gives it ample power to contract with the present agencies—millers, elevators, packing plants, etc. In these contracts provision will be made to compensate these agencies for services which they may render the corporation in helping to put this law into effect.

Mr. RAINEY says:

"May I suggest the following illustration: There is, let us say, a washerwoman who lives in the outskirts of a city, who has raised a pig," * * *

He uses over 700 words in describing what would happen to this woman if the McNary-Haugen bill is passed and she decides to sell her pig. I want to say frankly that if all the things set forth in Mr. RAINEY's illustration of the washerwoman and her pig were true there is not a man on the Agriculture Committee who would be in favor of the enactment of this legislation. There is nothing in the proposed legislation that warrants the statements made in this illustration. I can tell you in a very few words what would happen to this woman if the McNary-Haugen bill were passed. If her pig weighed 200 pounds when the butcher came to buy it she would receive for it at least $8 more than she would receive for it under the existing conditions. The butcher would pay her the ratio price for the pig, less the equalization fee. She would not have to make any report of it, but, of course, the butcher would have to make a report of the transaction when he made his report to the corporation or its agent at the end of the month.

The ratio prices and the equalization fees upon basic agricultural products are required to be published in the terminal markets, and, of course, they will be published in every market paper, in the city press, in the local county papers, and will be known far and wide throughout the country. The ratio prices do not change oftener than once a month and may not change that often, while the equalization fees are fixed annually. Let me say right here that it is through the payment of the equalization fees that the farmers of the country will pay the losses and the expenses of this corporation, and when the five-year period of emergency ends the $200,000,000 furnished by the Government as the capital stock of the corporation will be returned to the Treasury of the United States without the loss of a single dollar.

In connection with this unwarranted illustration of the woman and her pig I want to call the attention of Mr. RAINEY to the fact that in the case of livestock there are 257 firms in the United States that kill 65 per cent of the meat annually consumed in the United States. These firms are already under Federal regulation of the meat-inspection law. I believe that so far as it relates to meat not less than 95 per cent of the total volume of business will be brought under the operation of this law. Small interfarm transactions between farmers will not come under the provisions of this act.

Mr. RAINEY objects to the Government going into business. I would like to avoid that, if possible. I would not for a moment be in favor of this legislation or in favor of putting the Government into business if there were any other means whereby immediate relief could be brought to the farmers of the country. Agricultural conditions are critical; relief must come, and come at once. But the Government has already gone into business. It went into business when the first tariff law was passed. It went into business when the first immigration law was passed, because it decreased the supply of labor. It went into business when the Adamson law and the Cummins-Esch law were passed. It took the first step to go into business the other day when the House passed, with only one or two votes against it, a bill creating a corporation with a capital stock of $5,000,000 to operate certain boats on certain streams. There is only one industry in the United States for whose benefit the Government has not yet gone into business, and that is our greatest industry—agriculture—constituting about one-third of the people of America. We propose by this bill to go into business in its behalf. Through legislative enactment we have helped every industry in America except this one great basic industry—agriculture. Now is our time to help it.

Mr. RAINEY says the packers are not fighting this bill. In this Mr. RAINEY is mistaken. The packers are fighting it, and so are those who handle the farmer's products after they leave the farm—the miller, the elevator man, the grain trade, the packer, and the exporter. I do not mean to say that all of these oppose this bill, but as a rule all of those who do oppose it belong to one or the other of these classes.

Mr. RAINEY says that a representative of the packers drew the bill. I do not agree with Mr. RAINEY in this statement. However, whoever may have prepared the bill as originally introduced, it was taken up and rewritten from beginning to end by the Committee on Agriculture. For weeks and weeks we worked upon this measure, meeting every day. We took it up not only by paragraphs but line by line. We went over it again and again. We had four different prints made of the bill, something very unusual, and something which has never before been done by our committee. The bill we reported to the House and asked it to pass is the work of our committee, and the statement of Mr. RAINEY that a representative of a packer drew the bill is without foundation.

Mr. RAINEY makes an attack upon Mr. Charles J. Brand. It is not my purpose to enter into this controversy—I am sure Mr. Brand can take care of himself. I do not think, however, it would be out of the way, inasmuch as Mr. RAINEY'S article has been read by the people of St. Louis and vicinity, to insert here copy of a letter given to Mr. Brand by Hon. D. F. Houston, then Secretary of Agriculture, when he resigned from public service some years ago. Mr. Houston was formerly a prominent and highly respected citizen of St. Louis. The letter is as follows:

"You have been in charge of the organized marketing work of the department since its beginning in 1913. Starting with a modest appropriation of $50,000, the Bureau of Markets this year has had a budget of approximately $4,500,000 aside from the appropriation of $10,000,000 for the purchase and sale of nitrate of soda. Its activities have been greatly extended in many directions and it has rendered increasingly valuable service to the Nation. It is charged with the administration of a number of important and difficult laws. When you assumed your duties you were faced with a pioneer task. There were then no marketing agencies either in the Federal or State services solely designed to assist the Nation in the marketing and distribution of farm products. These matters had received too little attention at the hands of institutions training men for national service, as well as at the hands of legislative bodies. You were confronted with the duty not only of marking out in a definite way the paths of endeavor, but also of discovering and, in a measure, of training the men for the work.

"Throughout your period of service, both in peace and in war, you have discharged your task with remarkable ability and patriotic devotion. Wishing you the greatest success and happiness in your undertakings, I am

"Cordially yours,

"D. F. HOUSTON, Secretary."

It may not be out of place for me to say that the $50,000 for the Bureau of Markets referred to in Secretary Houston's letter was secured by me in 1913, by an amendment I made to the Agriculture appropriation bill.

These propositions, however, and others mentioned in Mr. RAINEY'S statement are beside the question so far as they relate to the provisions of the McNary-Haugen bill.

Mr. RAINEY calls attention to the fact of the difficulty that will confront the corporation in the handling of meat products. No one denies that so far as it relates to the meat the McNary-Haugen bill will be difficult to administer and yet these difficulties can be overcome. When the President appoints the members of the board of directors of the corporation, they will meet and organize, and prepare to put the act into effect. One of the first things they will do before any emergency is declared to exist, on either wheat or meat products, will be to arrive at a harmonious understanding with millers, packers, and the handlers of other commodities to the end that these agencies may conduct their operations with safety and outlive such contracts and agreements as will insure the hearty cooperation between them and the corporation in the administration of the law.

Mr. RAINEY criticizes the Committee on Agriculture by inference for giving careful consideration to this measure, to which it has devoted almost daily sessions for about three months. It was reported by the House committee by a vote of 14 to 6 and had been previously reported by the Senate committee by a vote of 10 to 2. He not only criticizes the bill itself, but he does not hesitate to criticize those who have given it profound study and care. Extensive hearings were held and men were invited from all parts of the country to come before our committee and were invited to criticize the bill and to offer suggestions in order to assist in perfecting it. As finally reported, this bill is workable, although like every other big undertaking it will have its difficulties. Mr. RAINEY, like one of the representatives of one of the packers, who appeared to oppose this bill, expresses great sympathy for the farmer, yet he criticizes everything that we propose and he has no constructive measure to offer in its place.

But, I must not prolong this discussion. Suffice is it for me to say that through legislative enactment we have helped every industry in America except the one great basic industry—agriculture. More than one-fourth of the people in America live upon the farms. They toil through all kinds of weather, both early and late. They seek no eight-hour law. They depend for their success more than any other industry known to man upon the elements. They plow, they plant, they cultivate, and if the sun shines and the rain comes in due proportion they harvest their crops. On the other hand, if perchance the rain does not come, or if it comes in too great abundance, the result of their labor is destroyed by a drought or by a flood. These are conditions that we can not regulate by legislation, but when the farmer reaps an abundant harvest, and takes his products to the market place, we want him to receive a just and fair price for those products. This is what we are trying to do by the passage of the McNary-Haugen bill.

THOS. L. RUBEY, M. C.,
Committee on Agriculture.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE BOONVILLE ADVERTISER

MAY 12, 1924.

Mr. EDGAR C. NELSON,
Editor the Boonville Advertiser, Boonville, Mo.

DEAR MR. NELSON: In a recent issue of the Advertiser there appeared a letter from Mr. O. F. Kelly, a miller of your city, criticizing the McNary-Haugen bill. I do not know Mr. Kelly personally, but I am sure he is one of your best and most conscientious citizens, and it is not my purpose to enter into any controversy with him. Your paper has a large circulation throughout central Missouri, and I would like for its readers to get the viewpoint of the proponents of this pending legislation, hence this letter.

Mr. Kelly is opposed to the passage of the McNary-Haugen bill. I am not surprised that he is if he bases his opinions upon the information which he has obtained through the reading of a statement recently given out by Julius S. Barnes, who is president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, and who is also one of the largest American grain exporters. I take it that Mr. Kelly has secured his information from this source, because some of his language is almost identical with the language set forth by Mr. Barnes in his statement.

Mr. Barnes has carried on an astonishing amount of misrepresentation of the McNary-Haugen bill. He is opposed to the passage of the bill, as all other exporters are, because he believes it will put them out of business. In advocating passage of the McNary-Haugen bill we are not seeking to help the exporter—he does not need any help. His profits run into millions and millions of dollars, and he needs no help from any source. But we are seeking to help the American farmer and to bring the price he receives for his basic agricultural products up to the point where those products will have their pre-war purchasing power.

The McNary-Haugen bill is advocated by farm organizations throughout the length and breadth of the country. It is opposed by those who handle the farmer's products after they leave the farm—for instance, the miller, the elevator man, the packer, the exporter, and the speculator. I do not mean to say by any means that all of these oppose this bill, but as a rule all of those who do oppose it belong to one of these classes.

These men have been sending out propaganda to the millers and elevator men and doing everything in their power to bring the McNary-Haugen bill into disrepute. They all say, as Mr. Kelly says, that they favor steps to help agriculture but they do not make any constructive suggestions as to how it may be done. Mr. Barnes, in his statement has gone further than that—he has recommended diversification, cooperative organizations; and he also says he believes in letting the situation cure itself. We all believe in diversification where conditions warrant it, and we are strongly in favor of cooperative organizations, but diversification will not restore the purchasing power of the farm crops. How can diversification or cooperation help the farmer to get 1,000 feet of lumber for $30, as he did in 1914? Now he has to pay $52 for it. How can they restore the purchasing power of the hog grower's dollar which is now only a little less than 60 cents of the pre-war value? Of course this can be done by destroying or putting out of business enough farmers of the country and reducing production. If one-half or one-third the farmers of America would cease production and could find other work to do, the price of the farm products would rise in value. At the same time we would increase the number of consumers, would put the country in a critical situation, and we would be confronted with the question as to where we would get sufficient to feed and clothe our own people.

The McNary-Haugen bill was prepared after careful study by some of the ablest men of the country. Mr. Kelly says that the bill is admittedly directed at wheat exclusively. This bill is intended to help the hog industry, which is in a worse condition than the wheat industry, although it is intended to help both. The hog grower now pays 2,973 pounds for a 22-7 grain drill that cost him only 1,471 pounds in 1913. The wheat grower gives 206 bushels of wheat now for the same drill which he bought for 132 bushels in 1913. In terms of hogs the price of drills has come up over 100 per cent; in terms of wheat it has gone up 56 per cent. This statement shows beyond any doubt that this measure is not and should not be intended as exclusively a wheat measure. Mr. Kelly evidently gets his figures from Mr. Barnes's statement, but the figures are wrong. Mr. Kelly's mention of Pennsylvania yield is certainly wrong, and this same statement was also made by Mr. Barnes. The average wheat yield for Pennsylvania is 17.4 bushels per acre instead of 25, based on five-year average 1918–1922. The Pennsylvania farmer gets along because he is near the market, in fact, the market is right under his nose. He does not have to pay large freight rates to get his products to market. However, many of the farmers of Pennsylvania came before our committee urging the passage of the McNary-Haugen bill. On the other hand, some of the western wheat-growing States have a relative high yield. The five-year average for the State of Washington is 22.6 bushels per acre, but the Washington farmer has more difficulty in getting his wheat to market.

Mr. Kelly states we should improve agricultural methods, and we all agree that farm methods should be improved, and we know that the farmers, through cooperative organizations, are doing much to improve their conditions, but there are some things over which the farmer has no control. How can he buy new machinery, fertilizers to make his soil more productive, hire the necessary labor when farm labor is 150 per cent higher than it was before the war, and everything he buys has advanced that much or more, and when the farmer's prices for his commodities have been going lower and lower all the time.

Of course the argument is made by those opposed to this legislation that it is unworkable. Mr. Kelly makes the statement that unscrupulous tactics and illegal evasions will bring unfair results to the honest farmer and the honest grain dealer, but the fact must not be overlooked that violations along the lines mentioned in his letter will result in fines, and if persisted in, in fines and imprisonment, or both. Some years ago when we passed the first income tax law the same argument was made that it would be unworkable, that it could not be carried into effect, and while we all know that there are violations of the income tax law, some men hide away their wealth, make false returns, and seek to evade payment of their income taxes, yet its administration has been fairly successful and billions of dollars have been collected in recent years through the income tax law.

This bill does not require an army of Government officers. It specifically requires that the corporation shall use the existing agencies and facilities and gives ample power to contract so that the present agencies, millers, elevators, packing plants, etc., may be contracted with and in these contracts they will be compensated for services which they may render to the corporation in putting this law into effect.

I can not see why the miller should be opposed to this bill. If he is an exporter the law protects him against loss in his export trade. If he manufactures his flour and sells it in the domestic market he will sell it for a higher price by reason of the increased price of the grain which he uses. Just before the bill was reported to the House I offered an amendment which was agreed to, which gives the corporation authority, if it deems it advisable, to extend the ratio price over a period instead of from month to month. Under this amendment, during certain months of the year, the corporation may fix the ratio price for a period of several months, and this will be of great advantage to the miller, and many of them have already expressed their approval of this change. In fact in the preparation of this bill, while our main effort has been to help the farmer, we have sought in every way to throw about it every safeguard that would protect the miller, the elevator men, packers, etc., from losses by reason of this legislation.

Recent figures from the Department of Agriculture indicate a reduction in the wheat acreage of the country for the coming year. It is believed that the reduction in acreage in 1924 over 1923 will be at least 12 per cent, so that the estimate made by Mr. Barnes and others in regard to the enormous amount of wheat that will have to be exported is, beyong doubt, greatly exaggerated. In 1919, when our crop was 968,000,000 bushels and the world price twice what it is now, we exported only 214,000,000 bushels. At the very height of the war in Europe, when its production was reduced to a mere fraction of pre-war production, our greatest export in all time was 332,000,000 bushels. Those who assume that there will be a possible export of 320,000,000 bushels of wheat with Europe, in its present condition, and with its destroyed purchasing power, are, it seems to me, doing so for the sole purpose of endeavoring by such means to defeat this legislation.

Mr. Kelly assumes the world market price, Chicago basis, to be 90 cents. He also assumes a 60-cent loss per bushel on an export of 320,000,000 bushels. These are imaginative export figures. If he would divide that in half and assume 50 cents per bushel as the difference between the domestic and foreign values he would be more nearly correct.

Mr. Kelly also says that it is admitted that the expenses of the corporation will be 5 cents per bushel. Who admits it? Certainly not the proponents of the measure. It is believed that the cost of the administration of this law will be between 1 cent and 2 cents per bushel. It should be remembered and understood that this bill specifically provides that the corporation, in the administration of its affairs, shall utilize existing agencies. We do not want to put the miller out of business, or the elevator man, or any other agency. We want the corporation to earnestly cooperate with them, and when that is done the cost of the administration will be comparatively small, and when the period ends the miller and other agencies of the country will not be injured, but can continue right on with their business the same as if this period of Government aid and help had not existed. The trouble with Mr. Kelly is that his figures are not correct, and with these figures as a basis for conclusion that the operation will be so expensive as to eat up all the increased price brought about by reason of the ratio price is entirely erroneous. It is idle to discuss figures, assuming such mistaken premises. Some one has said of Mr. Barnes, that in his argument he is speaking for Julius Barnes, the grain exporter, and not for the American farmer.

I note what Mr. Kelly says in regard to the grain futures act, which curbs speculation. In this connection it will be interesting to note that in a single year, 1921, on the Chicago Board of Trade alone about 12,000,000,000 bushels of wheat were traded in when only 45,000,000 bushels were received in Chicago. In other words, in a single year between five or six times as much wheat were traded in in futures as were actually delivered in Chicago in over 60 years. Some of the very best observers are certain, in so far as the grain futures act has had any effect, it has headed off a short-selling campaign that the speculators were afraid to put on that would have driven the price even lower than it went.

The McNary-Haugen bill does not fix the price of wheat, but what it does is to require the corporation to buy wheat at the various terminal markets, or through agencies elsewhere, if necessary, at the ratio price. The ratio price, when ascertained, will be published in all the terminal markets. The farmer will know that there is an agency which will buy his wheat at that price, less, of course, the cost of transportation, loading, and other charges such as exist at the present time. When the farmer knows this he can figure out about what he ought to receive for his wheat at the local market. He will also know the equalization fee per bushel, which is the amount he must contribute to make up for the loss and the expense of the commission, so that he will know what his net price will be for every bushel of wheat he sells.

Many estimates have been made by the proponents of this measure as to the amount of losses of the corporation and the expenses of the corporation, and taking wheat as an illustration, the most conservative estimate is around 15 cents per bushel, so that if the ratio price of wheat is $1.62 per bushel at Chicago the farmer at Boonville will receive $1.47 per bushel, less, of course, the transportation charges between Boonville and Chicago, and these same charges he must now pay under present conditions.

Very truly yours,

THOS. L. RUBEY.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, no subject before Congress in recent years has attracted such widespread attention and interest as the question of farm relief now under consideration. Few measures have affected so directly and so vitally the prosperity and well-being of the Nation, and certainly none have been so earnestly advocated and so bitterly criticized as the McNary-Haugen bill, formulated by the Committee on Agriculture and championed by the representatives of the farm organizations as the most practicable solution of this perplexing problem.

The bill has been the subject of exhaustive study and analysis. For weeks a steady stream of letters, pamphlets, newspaper articles, briefs, and monographs, from pen, typewriter, press, and mimeograph have alternately urged its merits and alleged its defects, and its critics and advocates include some of the most noted economists in the country.

But one of the most valuable and practical contributions on the subject yet submitted, one of those most frequently quoted, and perhaps the most influential in its effect on the actual drafting of the bill, is an open letter by Mr. William Hirth, editor of the Missouri Farmer. It is captioned "Agriculture is dying," and has been characterized on the floor of the House as "the best discussion of the situation of agriculture throughout the United States."

Mr. Hirth is high in the national councils of agriculture and is the founder of one of the foremost cooperative organizations in America. He has made an exhaustive and intimate study of farm economics and is recognized as an authority on the subject.

His letter has been so often quoted and there are so many requests for copies of it that I ask unanimous consent to reprint it in the RECORD as an extension of my remarks. The letter follows:

(An open letter to Congressman CANNON from the publisher of The Missouri Farmer)

Hon. CLARENCE CANNON,

House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CANNON: As per my promise in Washington some days ago I herewith submit my views with reference to the McNary-Haugen bill and why I think this measure should be enacted into law. And first let me explain briefly what, as I understand it, this bill seeks to accomplish:

First. It proposes to create a commission to be known as the United States Agricultural Export Commission, composed of the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Commerce, the chairman of the United States Tariff Commission, and three directors appointed by the President by and with the consent of the Senate. I believe a suggestion has also been made to provide an additional advisory committee composed of one member from each of the different Federal reserve districts, to serve without pay, except as to actual traveling expenses.

Second. The intention is that the commission shall establish a fair "ratio price" between the great surplus commodities of the farm (such as wheat, pork, beef, etc.) and the current all-commodities' price which is commonly referred to as the "cost of living." Or, to put it in a simpler way, the function of the commission shall be to bring the price of surplus farm products which during the last four years have been selling on the basis of destructive low world price levels in line with what the farmer has to pay for farm implements, building materials, clothing, dry goods, shoes, freight rates, etc. And in arriving at a fair "ratio price" pre-war conditions are to be used as a basis.

Third. To this end it is proposed that the commission shall have at its disposal a fund of $200,000,000 with which to buy up the surplus on such commodities as wheat, pork, and beef (and such other surplus commodities as the commission may decide to include in its operations) and, having removed such surplus as a factor in the home markets, to make the tariff 100 per cent effective with reference to the various "ratio prices" agreed upon.

Fourth. It is further intended that any loss sustained on the sale of the various surplus farm commodities shall be borne by the farmer and not by the Government, and to this end it is intended to issue "scrip," which shall be equalized at the end of the seasonal periods. Thus if the "ratio price" on No. 2 wheat is $1.50 per bushel, the farmer would perhaps be paid $1.30 per bushel in cash at the time of delivery and 20 cents in "scrip"; and then when the season's business on wheat is wound up and when the commission is in position to determine its expenses and loss on the surplus the farmer would receive such an additional dividend as may be due him. The same rule will apply to any other commodity included in the commission's operations, and thus the farmer will be assured of a fair price in the home markets less his share of the loss on the surplus and his part of the expense of conducting the commission.

Fifth. The act contemplates that the commission will arrive at a harmonious understanding with millers, packers, and the handlers of other commodities, to the end that such agencies may conduct their operations with safety and understanding.

Sixth. The act is regarded purely as an emergency measure, and is under no circumstances to continue for a period of more than five years. And in the meantime it is predicated upon the assumption that the farmers of the country shall immediately begin the perfection of cooperative marketing agencies so they will be able to exercise in a nation-wide sense the functions of the commission at the end of the emergency period.

Therefore, grouping the above provisions together, it may be said that the one and only purpose of the McNary-Haugen bill is to place the farmer on an even footing with organized industry and labor and to have the Government do for him in these premises what, in his present unorganized condition, he is not able to do for himself!

IS THIS LEGISLATION NECESSARY

No doubt the first question the average Member of Congress will ask himself is, "Is this legislation necessary—is the condition of agriculture so desperate that Congress will be justified in a time of peace in taking a step as far-reaching as the one contemplated in this act?" And as one who is, as you know, quite intimately acquainted with agricultural conditions not only in Missouri but in other of the great Corn Belt States, my unequivocal answer is that it is. In fact, I will go further and say that American agriculture is to-day facing the greatest crisis in its history; and even if the McNary-Haugen bill is passed, thousands of farmers will be sold out by the sheriff and hundreds of country banks that are considered solvent to-day will close their doors before aid can possibly come from legislation or from any other source.

And in saying this I need only point to the foreclosure sales on farms and the great number of banks that have gone upon the rocks in the great farming States during the last two years. Here in Missouri—one of the greatest agricultural States in the Union—we have thousands of farms that have been abandoned during the last three years because their owners could not rent them, and thus despairing of what they considered a hopeless and useless struggle they turned them over to the mortgage holders and moved to some town or city in the hope of getting hold of some of the "easy money" which has been so plentiful in these quarters since the time when the World War reached its crest.

"What is the trouble?" you ask. Fundamentally, it is very simple. When the World War came to an end, and when the frenzied demand for the surplus food products of this country ceased, the American farmer was suddenly thrown back completely upon the world markets; and thus for the last four years the price of American wheat, pork, beef, and other surplus farm products has been determined, not on the basis of the American farmer's production costs, not on the basis of our so-called American "living standards," but purely on the basis of the competitive value of these commodities in Liverpool and in other world clearing ports where the peasant and peon farmers of the four corners of the earth dump their yearly surplus. And these world price levels govern not only with reference to our surplus but they fix the price of these commodities in our home markets; and thus we have the remarkable situation where the daily wage of a bricklayer or plasterer during 1923 equaled the value of an average acre of wheat or of a 230-pound hog which it took seven months of the farmer's care and feed to produce. Mind you, I am not saying that the bricklayer or plasterer should accept less, for this precipitates a question which I do not care to discuss at this time. I am merely citing the cold facts as they are and why there is serious trouble out at the "crossroads."

On the other hand, while the conclusion of the World War suddenly threw the farmer back completely upon the world markets, both industry and labor, which are powerfully organized, were able for the most part to "hold their first-line trenches"; and thus to-day industry is fighting its battles from behind the great protecting walls of the Fordney-McCumber Act, while labor has not only held to most of the advantages it obtained during the war but in the aggregate I think I am safe in saying that the Nation's pay rolls have been increased to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars since the armistice was signed, and this isn't taking into account the tightening up of our immigration laws. And thus the American farmer finds himself between two fires: On the one hand, the selling price of his commodities is determined by the peasant and peon farmers of the wide universe, while on the other hand his living and production costs are determined under the highest merchandise values, freight rates, and taxes ever known in this country and under the highest wage scales that obtain in any nation in the world. And thus, like a great ship, American agriculture is being pounded to pieces on the reefs of low world price levels; and in these premises one of two things must happen: Either industry and labor will have to reduce the cost of their wares and service to the level of the farmer's living and production costs or, as certain as the sun shines above, the destruction of agriculture will follow.

IS THIS MEASURE "WORKABLE"

Already, as was to be expected, the critics of this bill say it isn't "workable" for a thousand different reasons, more or less. But why is it necessarily not a practical proposal?

When a governmental agency takes the surplus wheat, pork, or beef out of the domestic markets and fixes a definite tariff which will protect these commodities against the importation of cheaper similar commodities from the outside, then why will not such a tariff fix the domestic price? From time out of mind our great manufacturing enterprises that enjoy protection have charged a price within the United States, up even with the tariff wall—and when the export price lost them money they curtailed their output. But the farmer has never been able to "collect the tariff," because, unlike our great manufacturers, he is not in position to concentrate his selling—he is not in position to separate those of his commodities which are consumed in the domestic markets as against those which are exported, and therefore a tariff on wheat or other surplus farm commodities is as meaningless to him under existing conditions as the number of spots on the sun. And under these circumstances the fixing of tariff duties on surplus farm commodities has been nothing less than a ghastly political joke. Nor is the farmer in position to abandon the production of a surplus, as are our great manufacturers, first, because droughts, floods, and insect pestilence may disastrously affect his acre yields, while disease may devastate his flocks and herds. Again, with no organization or central directing force, about all our 6,500,000 farmers can do is to use their own best individual judgment, whether with reference to the production of grain or livestock.

But that a tariff can be made 100 per cent effective when the surplus of a given farm commodity is taken out of the domestic market, of this there is not the slightest question; and therefore we come back to the proposition which I made before, namely, that under this bill the Government would assist the farmer in doing what he is not now in position to do for himself.

And, furthermore, the Government can do this without the loss of a single penny. To illustrate, let us assume that the world price level on No. 2 wheat will be $1 per bushel f. o. b. Chicago on July 15 of this year. Unless the McNary-Haugen bill or a similar measure is passed, this is all the wheat grower could hope to receive under any circumstances. But if the "ratio price" established by the proposed export commission should say that No. 2 wheat is worth $1.50 per bushel f. o. b. Chicago, then the farmer would receive this amount less his proportionate loss on the exportable surplus and the expense of the export corporation. To illustrate further, suppose we produce 800,000,000 bushels of wheat during 1924, and that 600,000,000 bushels of this is required for home consumption, leaving 200,000,000 bushels for export; next let us assume that the "ratio price" within the United States is $1.50 per bushel while the world price is only $1 per bushel, thus representing a loss of $100,000,000 on the surplus, and this loss charged up against the domestic price would mean a reduction of approximately 17 cents per bushel; next, in order to play perfectly safe, let us assume that it will cost 3 cents per bushel to operate the commission, or a total charge off of 20 cents per bushel, which would still leave the wheat grower 30 cents per bushel "ahead of the hounds" at the end of the equalization period as against existing conditions.

And now here occurs the most serious difference of opinion I entertain against the McNary-Haugen bill; instead of attempting the issuance of "scrip" as a means of finally clearing up the transaction I would simply require the elevators, mills, and grain buyers throughout the country to keep a record of the amount and grade of wheat purchased from each grower and then as soon as the loss on the surplus and the costs of operation had been ascertained I would pay the balance due in the form of a patronage dividend.

And while I am stating my opinion on this phase of the matter in very general terms, I have no doubt that it could be worked out—and thus the final windup of the whole matter would be that the farmer would receive a "ratio price" based on the all-commodity price, less his share of the loss on the surplus and costs of operation and the Government would not have lost a cent in the transaction.

Therefore why isn't the plan "workable"? And why can not the commission and the packers arrive at a similar arrangement on pork and beef? And why can not the millers and packers of the country adjust themselves to this kind of a program if they really have a desire to do so? In the meantime, our choice lies between trying to make the thing "workable," or sending agriculture to certain destruction. There is no other alternative!

Moreover, those who insist that this bill is not "workable" ought to get busy and bring forth some other measure that is, for certainly agriculture has a right to expect something more than a mere "dog in the manger" attitude from them. If they think the farmer's present cry for help is unwarranted—that actual conditions have been overdrawn—then let them have the courage to say so frankly. But if they do not desire to assume this attitude, if they do believe that something needs to be done, then let us remember the old saying that, "where there's a will, there's a way!"

The suggestion that the Government may under this bill invest "billions of dollars" in packing plants, warehouses, etc., is to me the purest claptrap. My personal view is that the commission should not invest a single dollar in such facilities and if there is any doubt on this score as the act now stands it should be amended and made "foolproof" in this respect—for why acquire such facilities when they are already in existence and when all that the owners have a right to expect, is fair compensation for their use?

AS TO "PRICE FIXING"

I am perfectly aware that this measure is being assailed on the theory that it is "price fixing" and also that it seeks to "defy the law of supply and demand." But when a great manufacturing industry demands a tariff which shuts out foreign competition and when it then proceeds to collect a price in the home markets up even with the tariff wall which surrounds it—often selling for less in the foreign markets—in Heaven's name, what is this but "price fixing" and in such premises what becomes of the sacred law of supply and demand?

And likewise when the great labor unions through their organizations might demand and enforce the payment of stipulated wage scales, again what is this but "price fixing"—and what chance has the farmer who stands at the end of the line to escape these superimposed burdens which come down to him in the form of inflated prices for farm implements, building materials, clothing, dry goods, shoes, transportation rates, etc.? For he is the "Jones" who "pays the freight"—he is the fellow to whom everybody else "passes the buck" and who can not pass it on to anybody else.

Therefore what is the fairness of raising our hands in virtuous horror at the idea of "price fixing"? What is the fairness of delivering profound platitudes about the law of supply and demand—a sacred white ox that departed "to where the woodbine twineth" for lo, these many years? And when I say this I do not concede that the McNary-Haugen bill is a "price-fixing" measure as that term is generally understood. On the contrary, it merely seeks to establish a fair "price ratio" between certain great basic surplus farm commodities and the current cost of living which forms the inevitable basis of the farmer's production costs.

And again let me say that I am not pronouncing an indictment in these premises against the Fordney-McCumber Act nor against the wage scales of organized labor, regardless of what my views concerning them may be, were they under discussion on their merits. What I am trying to do is to show that through the exactions of these forces the farmer is confronted by a "condition and not a theory"—that while he himself is helplessly chained to the world-wide law of supply and demand, there is no such animal, so far as American industry and labor are concerned—and there isn't an intelligent or fair-minded student of economic conditions in this country who doesn't know that this is the simple truth.

As the sorely perplexed farmer realizes that the purchasing power of his dollar (as expressed in the fruits of his toil) has been knocked into a cocked hat, and when he thinks of the fact that it takes $2 of his money to pay off an old debt, while industry and labor can still retire their obligations on an even basis—in these circumstances when supercritical gentlemen prattle about the law of supply and demand, let them not believe that they are fooling the farmer who knows perfectly well that he is getting the "hot end of the poker" and who is pretty apt to demand an accounting from those who continue to make him do it.

"WORKING ITSELF OUT"

This chatter that we should not seek to "defy the law of supply and demand" comes chiefly from the boards of trade and certain big grain exporters who pose as "experts" in these premises. Of course, the boards of trade don't want dealing in futures interfered with, for this is one of their chief sources of income. And even so certain eminent grain exporters don't want a commission to step in and perform functions which, under existing conditions, are a source of great profit to them—but if the time has come when Congress must make a choice between these gentlemen and the preservation of American agriculture, should it find that choice very difficult?

These same critics who prattle about the inviolability of the law of supply and demand say that the farmer is the victim of "natural causes" and that "everything will come out all right if we will only be patient," etc. And if Congress takes them at their word, it will do so at the peril of the whole Nation. For where is there a sane man who believes that either industry or labor will or can submit to a deflation during the next two or three years that will bring them down to a level with agriculture? And remember this is the issue—to assume that "everything will come out all right for the farmer" is predicated upon the idea that just as the peon and peasant farmers of the wide universe are fixing the price of American farm products at home and abroad, that in a like manner the American manufacturer and the American workingman will consent to get down on an even basis of remuneration with the manufacturers and workingmen of Germany, France, and England. And I believe you will agree with me that if such a suggestion were seriously made it would produce a riot in industrial and labor circles within 24 hours.

LIVING IN A FOOLS' PARADISE

Since the armistice was signed our cities have been living in a sort of fools' paradise—in other words, we have been speeding on the "gas" that we inherited from the World War period, during which time construction work of all kinds had largely ceased and also the rolling stock of our great railroad systems was so nearly shot to pieces that hundreds of millions of dollars had to be spent for its rehabilitation—and this isn't saying anything about the enormous amount of other repair work that had to be done. And thus things have been going along as merrily as a marriage bell, and we have paid little attention to the tragedy that is taking place out at the "crossroads" and which is becoming more serious with each passing day.

But during recent months there has been a perceptible slacking up in business circles, and there is every indication that we will soon "catch up with the hounds," if, in fact, we have not already done so—and the reason is that the American farmer is out of the game, as in truth he has been for the best part of the last four years. In other words, he is out on a "buyers' strike," not because he wants to be—not because he doesn't need billions of dollars' worth of new building materials, farm implements, fencing, etc., but because since the deflation following the war struck him his one thought has been to keep his farm from falling into the clutches of the sheriff, and therefore interest and taxes have had his first consideration.

Of course, the passage of the McNary-Haugen bill will somewhat increase the cost of the commodities it touches, such as bread, pork, beef, etc., and yet if the handlers of these commodities do not use this measure as a profiteering pretext, then that increase will not amount to enough to seriously affect a single family in the country, for our so-called "high cost of living" comes not from food costs but from the output of our mills and factories.

In the meantime the fact that the American Federation of Labor has sent some of its leading representatives to the Agricultural Committees to urge the passage of the McNary-Haugen bill should be a tremendous eye opener to every Member of Congress. And back of this action are three exceedingly pertinent reasons—first, having compelled the passage of the Adamson law during the war, labor knows that it has greatly benefited by specific congressional action, and this isn't saying anything about the favors it expects to continue to receive with reference to the matter of immigration; second, it knows that if it expects to continue to enforce its present exceedingly generous wage scales, that then the 40,000,000 people who reside on our farms must be placed in position to once more become aggressive buyers of merchandise; and, lastly, it realizes that if farmers continue to flock to our great industrial centers by the tens of thousands that the soup house will be the final answer and that this time is not far away.

EMBARRASSING TO A DEMOCRAT

And now I have no doubt that the average Democratic Member of Congress who is deeply grounded in the old idea of a "tariff for revenue only" will find some difficulty in reconciling himself to a measure which so strongly invokes the principle of protection—but, like the farmer, we are confronted by a "condition and not a theory" in these premises. In the past, or before the World War, no one believed more steadfastly in the historic position of our party on the tariff than I did—and in proof of this I wrote from beginning to end the last Democratic platform adopted in this State under the old delegate convention system (in the latter part of the Folk administration), and I doubt whether the party ever gave out an expression in Missouri that contained a more deliberate arraignment of the protective system.

But the World War has changed many things, and even if Democrats were in undisputed power in Congress to-day I doubt very much whether we would have the hardihood to place the country upon a purely "tariff for revenue only" basis—and I say this because with our inflated wage scales I seriously question whether American industry is in position to hold its own against the low wage scales of Germany, France, England, and other foreign countries at this time. In other words, it is going to take time for both industry and labor to get down off the high horses they are riding, even should they honestly and earnestly strive to do so, and for the time being therefore it may be the part of practical wisdom to regard the Fordney-McCumber Act as more or less of a necessary evil. And by this I don't mean that it does not contain many iniquities which should be eliminated at the first opportunity.

And this makes the situation from the farmer's standpoint appear all the more alarming to me—the fact that if agriculture is to live the farmer must be provided with a dollar of as great purchasing power as the dollar of industry and labor (which is the basis of his production costs) and the deep-seated conviction that, considering the manufacturing profit margins and wage scales of Europe, American industry and labor will not and in fact can not place themselves on a level with our foreign competitors at this time. Therefore it brings us back to the starting point—namely, that if agriculture is to be preserved, then either the price of farm commodities must be raised or the wares and service of industry and labor must be brought down to a level with them—and the latter hope seems to me an idle dream for some years to come!

Therefore as a Democrat I would take the position that so long as industry and labor are beneficiaries of the protective system, that the farmer is entitled to his share of the spoils—and I would demand that if the Republicans think so, they make it more than an idle farce—that having given the farmer a tariff, they make it possible for him to collect it! And in these premises let me say that the McNary-Haugen bill is the "acid test," it is the greatest challenge to the sincerity of protectionists in the history of Congress!

AMERICAN AGRICULTURE IS DYING

Never, in my humble opinion, has Congress been confronted (in times of peace) with a question more profoundly grave than the one that is involved in the McNary-Haugen bill. If the measure is defeated, there will be no loud outcry at the "crossroads"—for the "crossroads" has long since grown accustomed to being told that its pleas are "impractical" for one reason or another, and therefore with stoical resignation it will accept its fate, whatever it may be. But in the meantime the sheriffs' sales will multiply, country banks by the hundreds during the next two or three years will close their doors, and the steady stream from the farms to the towns and cities will continue—make no mistake on this score, for the rising and setting of the sun is not more certain!

And if Congress believes that we can safely run the gantlet—if our great captains of industry and our eminent bankers think they can keep our mills and factories in full-time operation and that the buying power of the 40,000,000 people who reside upon our farms is no longer necessary to this end—if they believe that our railroads can pay the present price of fuel, steel, and labor without hauling merchandise out to the "crossroads," as well as grain and livestock away from it—in short, if they believe that agriculture has ceased to be the great "basic industry" of the Nation and that it is no longer necessary in compelling favorable international trade balances, why, then perhaps the fate of the McNary-Haugen bill is of no great consequence! But let gentlemen make sure of their ground—let them be willing to accept the consequences if they have guessed wrongly.

And then there is another side to it. During recent years the tendency toward socialism and radicalism in our great centers of population has grown apace, and it is from these realms whence comes evermore insistently the demand that the Government shall operate the railroads and the coal mines and that the decisions of the Supreme Court shall be subject to congressional review—and unless laughter and the joy of contentment is brought back to the "crossroads," unless the deadly decay which is eating its way deeper and deeper into the heart of American agriculture can be arrested in the not distant future, then instead of our myriad farm homes continuing to be the great bulwark against this ever-increasing tide of radicalism which they have been through all the years of the past, let no one be surprised if farmers shall be found in increasing numbers among those who are striving with might and main to destroy our venerable institutions of government which have made the history of the Republic as wonderful as an Arabian Night's dream. Under normal conditions the farmer is a wholesome conservative, intensely proud of his country, and a firm believer in individual effort and responsibility—in fact the latter tendency is chiefly responsible for his present condition of helplessness. But the farmer is also human, and as he contemplates the contentment and comparative luxury of those who fix his living and production costs and who seem to have no great difficulty in obtaining the ear of Congress, who will blame him if he voices the pitiful plea of Shylock, "If you tickle us, do we not laugh? If you prick us, do we not bleed?"

If the Republic of Washington and Lincoln is to remain anchored to its moorings in the years to come—if the sinister prophecy of Carlisle is not to be fulfilled—if in the future, as in the past, the farmer is to remain a wholesome "balance of power," who will say "Hands off" to those who would destroy the glorious handiwork of the fathers—then let Congress lose no time in directing its attention to the tragedy that is taking place out at the "crossroads," for, as certain as God reigns above, American agriculture is dying!

CONGRESSMAN RAINEY'S OBJECTIONS

The files of old Egypt were not more numerous than the objections raised against the McNary-Haugen bill by Congressman HENRY T. RAINEY, of Illinois, in a letter to S. H. Thompson, head of the Illinois Agriculture Association, and I shall therefore endeavor to answer only the more pertinent ones:

No. 1. "Will not the 'scrip' bring about an 'expansion in our currency' and increase our 'circulating medium without increasing our gold base'?"

Answer. The "scrip" should not affect our circulating medium in the slightest degree, for in substance it is nothing more than a "due bill" upon which a future dividend will be declared, and if there is any doubt on this score because of the present wording of the bill, it should be amended. Surely it is not intended that the "scrip" shall be "circulating medium."

No. 2. "Do you think farmers will be satisfied with 'scrip'?"

Answer. Well, in view of the fact that they will be just that much "ahead of the hounds"—that the "scrip" or whatever is decided on will pay them the difference between the "ratio price" and the world price, less the loss on the surplus and the commission's costs of operation—certainly they shouldn't raise any "kick" on this score.

No. 3. "Will it not make it necessary for the Government to slaughter food animals and to invest in packing plants, stockyards, etc., involving perhaps an "expenditure of billions of dollars in railroad switches, terminals, refrigerator cars, warehouses, etc., etc.'?"

Answer. No. Why should the commission invest a single dollar in these facilities which are already in existence? All on earth the bill seeks to do is to require existing agencies to operate under the "ratio price." If the intention was to have the Government finance such facilities and to build up an enormous pay roll, I would be against it unqualifiedly.

No. 4. "Is it not time to keep the Government out of business as much as possible?"

Answer. You bet your life; and whenever you take it "out of business" in such premises as the Fordney-McCumber Act and with reference to tightening up the immigration laws, then perhaps farmers will not ask for legislation like the McNary-Haugen bill. But since this would be a horse of decidedly different color—since, in fact, Congress could possibly not safely do this at this time—in these circumstances hasn't the farmer a right to expect the Government to "go into business" as much for him as it already has for the other fellows?

No. 5. "Do you not think that in the end the farmer will become the greatest sufferer from its imposition, should it become a law?"

Answer. With the peasant and peon farmers of the world fixing his prices at home and abroad, how can it make the farmer a worse "sufferer" than he already is? And if a fair "ratio price" is enforced in the home markets, as I have already said, won't he be just that much "ahead of the hounds"?

No. 6. As to MR. RAINEY'S reference to wool and cotton and how to apply the "ratio price" to meat products and the charge that it is only intended to help the wheat grower, I have already covered these points in my answer to Congressman ANDERSON'S objections.

No. 7. "Isn't it time to ask what benefits farmers have received from the alleged remedial legislation demanded by the farm organizations, etc.?"

Answer. Well, the organizations have demanded very little specific legislation, and about all Congress has done is to expand credit facilities, and what the farmer wants and needs is not additional credit so much as prices that will enable him to pay debts and to buy sorely needed merchandise.

No. 8. "Has the farmer benefited by the protective tariff Congress has given him on practically everything he produces?"

Answer. Not so that you could notice it with an ordinary magnifying glass. On a commodity like wool, of which we only produce about half enough to supply our home needs, it "brings home the bacon," while on such surplus commodities as wheat it is a delusion and a snare; and all farmers, as well as most Members of Congress, know this.

No. 9. "I notice hogs are going up on the Chicago market. Is this due to the protective tariff, inasmuch as there is no protective tariff on hogs?"

Answer. No; the tariff has nothing to do with it. The heavy winter runs are over, and most likely the packers are "stiffening" the market so as to unload the hogs purchased at a low price and which are stored away in their coolers, at a good profit. This is one way the big packer has of collecting a "ratio price" of his own.

No. 10. "Would it not be advisable (for farmers) to advocate a reduction in the tariff on all articles the farmer buys?"

Answer. Well, why not try it out on the dog? Why not put it up to the industries which only a few short moons ago insisted that the Fordney-McCumber Act was the only thing that could save them from destruction? Very likely they would say that to place them on the world price level, along with Germany, France, England, and other foreign countries, that this would put them out of business—and no doubt there would be much justice in this contention. But if this is true, then how can Congress expect the farmer to exist on the world-price level and carry protected industry and organized labor on his back to say nothing of enormously increased taxes?

No. 11. "How will the 'ratio price' be reflected back to the farmer through the local elevator?"

Answer. I would say that the local elevator would pay the farmer cash in hand such a part of the "ratio price" as would put the commission safe on the loss on the exportable surplus and its costs of operation, and then later on it could authorize the elevator to pay the remaining dividend when the season's business had been wound up.

No. 12. "Is there any authority in the bill by which the miller can be indemnified against possible loss?"

Answer. If the "ratio price" is applied to seasonal periods in the home markets, it will be a "lead-pipe cinch" for the miller, for then there will be no occasion to "hedge." As to export flour, this will have ot be equalized on the world-price basis, just as export wheat itself; and it won't make any difference to the commission or to the farmer as to the form in which the surplus is gotten out of the country.

No. 13. "How many employees will there be?"

Answer. There ought not to be very many, if the law is applied so that existing private agencies can perform its functions.

No. 14. "Can you point to any method so far adopted by this Government in the matter of controlling food prices which has been successful?"

Answer. You bet! During the World War the Government fixed the price of wheat at $2.26 f. o. b. Chicago, and it held it there, despite the fact that the price in Europe was as high as $4.50 per bushel.

No. 15. "Is it not true that the only way to maintain a price is to have a buyer willing and able to take everything offered at the price specified?"

Answer. Under existing conditions the American consumer is buying the farmer's food commodities on the basis of the world-price level, while in turn the farmer's living and production costs are determined by our so-called "American living standards," which were created and which are being maintained by organized industry and labor, and the farmer has no choice except to "dance to the music." And under the McNary-Haugen bill the consumer would have to "dance to the music" also; he would have to pay the "ratio price," while the surplus would continue to be dumped onto the world market. If the farmer has nothing to say about the cost of merchandise, freight rates, etc., then why should the consumer have any greater immunity with reference to the price of farm commodities? Why shouldn't he be fair, and who has any right to assume that he doesn't want to be fair?

No. 16. "What is a Member of Congress to do when two agricultural organizations—equally important and equally interested—reach absolutely different conclusions?"

Answer. Except for some of the smaller units of the wheat growers, there is no appreciable disagreement over this matter—the Farmers' Union and the American Farm Bureau Federation and other of the leading farm organizations are for it—in fact never before have the farm organizations been in as complete agreement as they are in demanding the passage of this bill or a similar one that will accomplish its purpose.

No. 17. "Would not the McNary-Haugen bill put the Federal Government actively into the grain business?"

Answer. The only difference between what the Government would do for the farmer under this bill and what it has been doing for industry for years under the protective system is that it would make the tariff mean something for agriculture—after having given the farmer a tariff it would help him to collect it and it would do this without the loss of a penny! Therefore it is just as fair to say that the Government goes into the steel business when it gives steel the benefit of a tariff as that it is going into the grain business when it gives the wheat growers the benefit of a tariff—except that under this act it will go one step further and help the wheat grower to do what, in his present unorganized condition, he is not able to do for himself. Hence the real question is not whether the Government should take this extra step but whether the producers of wheat, pork, and beef really need this assistance! If they do, then why should the Government hesitate to make this assistance effective?

No. 18. "Do you not think the Russian experiment with its dead numbering over 7,000,000 ought to dissuade our people from proceeding in that direction?"

Answer. Good Lord—if it is half as bad as this, by all means kill the bill!

OBJECTIONS OF MR. ROBERTS, VICE PRESIDENT NATIONAL CITY BANK, NEW YORK CITY

In an able address delivered at the University of Ohio on February 6, 1924, Mr. Roberts made certain observations which may come to the attention of Members of Congress, and therefore I offer the following comment:

No. 1. Speaking against governmental "price fixing," Mr. Roberts among other things said: "There is no remedy for the situation except by reducing the production of wheat. Any form of Government aid, such as price fixing above the market, which has the effect of inducing farmers to continue wheat growing on the present scale would be a mistake, because wheat growing on this scale is not needed."

Answer. The farmer isn't kicking on having to accept the world price on the yearly surplus of 150,000,000 or 200,000,000 bushels—what he is sore about and what he has a right to be sore about is having to accept the world price on the 600,000,000 bushels that are ordinarily required to supply bread for the consumers of the United States. And with the uncertainty of acre yields because of flood, drought, winter killing, and insect pestilence how is the farmer to plan a wheat crop that will exactly meet our national needs?

But remember that under the McNary-Haugen bill the "ratio price" will merely apply to domestic consumption and from this price will be deducted the loss on the surplus and the commission's costs of operation. Therefore the surplus is not an issue; the issue is, Is the American wheat grower entitled to a fair price for the bread he supplies to American consumers?

No. 2. "The remedy is simply for some of them to stop growing wheat and go into something else, or for them as a whole to scale down the production of wheat to such an extent as will bring the situation back into balance."

Answer. With 6,500,000 farmers scattered between the two oceans such teamwork would be extremely difficult, considering the farmer's present unorganized condition, for unlike the manufacturer the farmer can not regulate his production with exact precision. But for argument's sake, let us assume that such regulation had been practiced with reference to the 1924 crop and that we would produce a round 600,000,000 bushels, or just enough to supply our home demands; if this were true, let us suppose next that the spokesmen of the wheat growers would go to Congress and say, "You have extended protection to industry and labor with a generous hand, and turn about is fair play, therefore we ask that you give us a tariff that will make No. 2 wheat sell at $1.75 per bushel f. o. b. Chicago"—and could Congress consistently deny their plea and wouldn't this be "price fixing" with much greater vengeance than the McNary-Haugen bill has in view? The point I want to drive home is that if the wheat grower was in position to do what Mr. Roberts implies he should do, then he would ask Congress to "deliver"—to give him his "pound of flesh," and it could not consistently deny him!

But because the farmer is helpless; because he is forced to come to Congress with a plea rather than a demand; this is why he is told in substance, "We are sorry for you—we know you are in a mighty tight place—but we can't do anything for you."

Also it may be said if Mr. Roberts's advice is sound for the wheat grower, then it must be equally sound for the hog and cattle raiser, for the latter find themselves in an even worse position; and if these tens of thousands of farmers are to quit raising wheat, hogs, and cattle, then what are they to do? Would Mr. Roberts suggest that they take to raising peanuts, onions, and cauliflower? Well, these things don't grow very well in the Corn Belt, and anyway the country is already surfeited with them. Far be it from me to become facetious in these grave premises, and yet if out of sheer desperation these farmers go to raising h—— instead, let Mr. Roberts and certain gentlemen who dread the "ides of November" not be surprised! And in those premises I respectfully remind them on one MAGNUS JOHNSON!

No. 3. "If the Government is to guarantee a price for wheat, the natural question is—why not for copper, cotton goods, and everything else?"

Answer. Well, if Mr. Roberts doesn't think as the song had it some years back that "Everybody's doing it," let him get hold of the Fordney-McCumber Act and also take a squint at our immigration laws—and last but by no means least, let him contemplate the present wage scales of organized labor.

No. 4. "One might think from much that is written on the subject that there was danger of general desertion of the farms unless artificial means of some kind were adopted to improve the returns, etc."

Answer. And this is exactly what is taking place at this very moment. As I have said elsewhere, thousands of farms here in Missouri have been deserted and thousands of others will be sold by the sheriff before aid can possibly come. Therefore if Mr. Roberts means that this fact might cause him to view matters in a more serious light, his change of front is in order.

No. 5. "The Government could not for long continue to buy and store such commodities upon terms that would encourage their production above the rate of consumption."

Answer. The farmer doesn't ask this. All the McNary-Haugen bill seeks to do is to maintain a "ratio price" in the home markets, letting the surplus bring what it will in the world markets, meanwhile charging the loss and costs of operation up against the said "ratio price"—and the only "buying and storing" the commission would have to do would be through the process of getting the surplus out of the country and in determining the amount of such surplus.

No. 6. "Finally, if the plan was workable at all, it would divide society into warring factions, emphasizing conflicting interests instead of mutual interests. It would be worse than socialism, for it would be syndicalism, the end of individual liberty and of reward for individual efficiency."

Answer. If it is as bad as all this, then why doesn't the protective system, which can not be applied with scientific precision or equity, "divide society into warring factions"? And even so when through organized action our bricklayers and plasterers demand and receive two or three times as much per day as tens of thousands of school-teachers, clerks, bookkeepers, etc., why doesn't this "divide society into warring factions"? What eminent business men like Mr. Roberts and the Members of Congress must do and do quickly is to get themselves "located" on agriculture. If it has ceased to be the Nation's great "basic industry"—if we can afford to let it shift for itself and still keep our mills and factories going and our railroads running, why, then all right. But let them make sure that they know what they are doing in these premises!

OBJECTIONS OF MR. ANDERSON

I now propose to briefly answer the criticisms of Congressman SYDNEY ANDERSON, which have been widely published:

First, Mr. ANDERSON says that the bill applies to flour, corn, cotton, wool, swine, cattle, sheep, or any of the food products of these commodities, and then he doubts its practicability in these premises.

As to flour that is exported, undoubtedly the world price of wheat will have to be taken into consideration in behalf of the miller—and there is no reason why the difference between the domestic and world price can not be practically applied to export flour for the miller's protection. As to wool, he is correct when he says that we are an importing rather than an exporting Nation and this item should therefore be stricken from the bill, for the present wool tariff is 100 per cent effective. As to cotton, the future alone can tell whether an emergency should be declared with reference to it and therefore why not let the future decide? In any event, why not leave the door open if the cotton grower should need assistance? Manifestly any bill of this kind must apply to all the great staples of agriculture, should they be menaced in the world markets. With reference to corn, I am again inclined to agree with Mr. ANDERSON not only because our corn exports are negligible but also the price of hogs and cattle very largely regulate the price of corn and would do so (in my opinion) almost absolutely under the operation of this measure. I do not, however, agree with him with reference to rye, oats, and barley, which are merely incidental and related crops.

Mr. ANDERSON next concludes that the bill is intended only to pull the wheat grower out of the hole and that the inclusion of hogs and cattle is for "political purposes only"—and if I though so I would be against it. That its application to hogs and cattle will be more difficult than on wheat is undoubtedly true—and yet why should a commission made up of the Secretaries of Agriculture, Commerce, and of the Treasury, together with the other able gentlemen whom it is assumed the President will appoint—why should not such a commission be able to reach a workable understanding with the meat packers of the country that will preserve a "ratio price" in these premises? At least why not try? In any case, we can not make things worse than they already are—for the farmer can not continue to supply the Nation's meat at a tremendous loss to himself, and therefore the price must be raised by one means or another if the meat-producing industry is to live!

Next, Mr. ANDERSON concludes that to establish a "ratio price" between wheat (or any other farm commodity) and the all-commodity price is a "fundamental weakness"—that the "appropriate price for agricultural commodities depends upon economic factors, etc," and of course this is the well-known red herring about the law of supply and demand—and the simple answer which I have already given is that the farmer can not continue to pay tribute to organized industry and labor according to their standards of value and then permit the peasant and peon farmers of the world to fix a price on the products of his toil.

This is the foundation of this bill and it can not be waived aside by producing a smoke screen of mere technicalities!

As to the charge that the operation of this measure will make the all-commodities price go up, I do not think so to any appreciable extent—first, because a fair "ratio price" chiefly applied to wheat and meats will not perceptibly increase the "cost of living," and, second, the fact that prominent labor leaders are championing the McNary-Haugen bill without "saving their exceptions" would indicate that they are willing to "stand the raise"—that they prefer to see the farmer get back in the buying game, rather than to welcome the coming of soup houses.

As to his conclusion that a "ratio price" is "absolutely unsound" and "unworkable," why is this true? Has not the farmer the right to receive a dollar for his toil of as great purchasing power as the dollar of those who determine his production costs and whom he therefore helps to sustain, and is not this the equilibrium which the "ratio price" seeks to establish? As to Mr. ANDERSON'S suggestion that the "ratio price" must be determined by anchoring it to certain great terminal markets, in this he is, of course correct; but why not assume that the commission and the handlers of the commodities in question will be able to arrive at a "workable" understanding in this respect?

As to his statement that the commission would have to ascertain production "a year in advance," this would not be possible nor would it be necessary. With reference to wheat, once the crop is made we will know measurably where we stand, whether the exportable surplus will be around 200,000,000 or 150,000,000 bushels; therefore if the commission removes a safe quantity from the domestic markets through export channels, why should it not warehouse for the time being a sufficient additional quantity until it knows where it stands, and why should it not, through the aid of the great meat packers, pursue the same tactics with reference to pork and beef? I do not pose as an authority in these premises, but why assume in advance that practical problems of marketing are impossible of solution? The statement that we have different grades of wheat, hogs, and cattle is of course true, but why should not the "ratio price" be applied accordingly?

As to Mr. ANDERSON'S objections to the issuance of "scrip," this I have already covered elsewhere. As to his statement that the purpose of the McNary-Haugen bill is as "old as history itself" this also is partially true, and the reason it is true is because for many years under the protective system the great industries of this country have made the farmer stand for this principle whether he liked it or not, and even so our workingmen have been and are at this hour protected against the so-called "pauper labor of Europe." Therefore, can anybody blame the farmer for also hankering after a little of the "pie"?

And, finally, his suggestion that it will lead to "overproduction"; in the first place every intelligent farmer will realize that this would "kill the goose that laid the golden egg," and also the commission is empowered to withdraw its support whenever the menace of overproduction becomes manifest with reference to any given commodity. In the meantime, to oppose the bill on this score is a good deal like advising a starving man against eating on the theory that he might die of indigestion!

Trusting that you will consider these views for what they may be worth, I am, with best wishes,

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM HIRTH,
Publisher The Missouri Farmer, Columbia, Mo.

RECESS

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now recess until 8 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.) the House, in accordance with the order previously made, stood in recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION

The recess having expired at 8 o'clock p. m., the House was called to order by Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa, as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the point that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Doorkeeper closed the doors and the Sergeant at Arms was directed to bring in the absentees. The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

During the roll call the following occurred:

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman can not interrupt the roll call with a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does it relate to the roll call?

Mr. ASWELL. It does.

Mr. BLANTON. All the precedents are against the right to interrupt the roll call with a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. There is no roll being called now.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. That motion is not now in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Not until the result of the call has been announced.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion is not in order until it is ascertained whether there is a quorum present.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make an announcement.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that until the result of the roll has been announced nothing is in order.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Does the Chair hold that a motion to adjourn is not always in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no business in order until the roll call has been completed and the result is announced.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I think the Chair had better consult the parliamentarian on that proposition. If that be true, the House could never adjourn as long as the Clerk who is tallying the vote is busy.

The call was completed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. One hundred and eighty-three Members have answered to their names—not a quorum.

[Subsequently 36 Members appeared and answered to their names.]

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. And on that, Mr. Speaker, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. SANDERS of Indiana and Mr. KINCHELOE as tellers.

The House divided, and the tellers reported that there were 12 ayes and 115 noes.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present and object to the vote.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I demand the yeas and nays. The gentleman from Texas can not make the point of no quorum, because it does not take a quorum to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 2, nays 181, not voting 250, as follows:

Before the result was announced, the following occurred:

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a parliamentary inquiry is out of order during a roll call.

Mr. ASWELL. The roll call is ended, as I understand it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is well taken until the summary is made and the result is announced.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call, and on that I demand tellers.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that motion of the gentleman from Indiana is out of order. You can not move to dispense with further proceedings under the call when the call develops the absence of a quorum.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Oh, the gentleman is in error about that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the ruling just presented to the Chair the Chair finds that it is permissible to make that motion, and the point of order is overruled. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana to dispense with further proceedings under the call, and on that he demands tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. SANDERS of Indiana and Mr. ASWELL to act as tellers.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of dispensing with further proceedings under the call, and I am not demanding a count.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will then ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE] to act as teller.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana and Mr. KINCHELOE took their places as tellers.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 4, noes 73.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that under the present situation, when the House has four different times found itself without a quorum and is still attempting to do business, there is just one of two things to do—we have either to get after the Members who are absent or adjourn, and that has been held by every Speaker who has sat in this House for 52 years.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rulings this is an incidental motion.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to read the construction of Rule XV:

> The call of the House is ended by a motion "to dispense with further proceedings under the call," which may be agreed to by less than a quorum as well as by a quorum——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order of the gentleman from Texas. The gentleman from Ohio demands the yeas and nays.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a preferential motion. I move to send for the absent Members, it having developed there is no quorum.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that is not in order. I make the point of order that the motion of the gentleman is not in order during a division.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, the division is not complete. I am asking to complete the division by calling for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WINGO. But I was demanding recognition at the time the gentleman made his motion and I was demanding recognition when the Chair recognized the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, have I been recognized? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What is the point of order of the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I demanded recognition for the purpose of making a privileged motion. I did that even before the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] demanded the yeas and nays, and my motion is plainly a privileged motion. The House has found itself without a quorum and we have exhausted every parliamentary expediency to get Members here except to send for the absent Members. There is no excuse for this House acting like children. We have important business. Why not bring the absentees in?

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Why do not you tell them that the administration does not want any agricultural legislation?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the motion which the gentleman from Arkansas desires to make is a preferential motion as against the motion that was made to dispense with further proceedings under the call, but the motion was made to dispense with further proceedings under the call and the gentleman was not demanding recognition for the purpose of making the motion at that time. That motion having been made, and tellers having been demanded and ordered, the House having divided, and the yeas and nays being demanded, the gentleman from Arkansas can not now interrupt a division, and the vote on the motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call by saying that he has a preferential motion, even though it would have been preferential had he offered it at the same time that the motion to dispense was made.

Mr. WINGO. Oh, Mr. Speaker, my very point of order is that the Chair failed to recognize me when I was demanding recognition for something which was preferential over that of the motion of the gentleman who was recognized.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. That is after the motion was made.

Mr. WINGO. Oh, no; it was before the motion was made.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would like to inquire of the gentleman from Ohio if he still insists on the yeas and nays?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I ask for the yeas and nays in order to complete the division.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order of the gentleman from Arkansas and sustains the point of order of the gentleman from Indiana. All those in favor of taking this vote by the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. Evidently a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 7, nays 181, not voting 245, as follows:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this vote the yeas are 7 and the nays are 181, and the House refuses to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr Speaker, I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to notify and to send for and arrest absent Members in order to secure and retain their attendance, and that for that purpose the Speaker pro tempore issue his warrants, and that absent Members be arrested wherever they may be found by the officers appointed by the Sergeant at Arms for that purpose. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio moves that the absentees be arrested and that the Speaker pro tempore issue his warrants for the same, and that the Sergeant at Arms bring them to the Chamber.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. I think before proceedings should go any further the Chair should rule on the question. I think by now the Chair has discovered that he was in error in his ruling, so as not to appear as a precedent that the Chair——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As soon as the motion is put.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Now, if the House will listen for a moment, the Chair would like to make a statement in reference to his former ruling. The ruling to which reference was made a short time ago is to be found in Hinds' Precedents, volume 4, paragraph 3038, and is as follows:

On September 10, 1890, during a call of the House, a motion was made that the House adjourn. On this question there were 50 yeas and 92 nays. The Chair announced that there were 172 Members present, a quorum.

Then, a motion being made by Mr. Nils P. Haugen, of Wisconsin, that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with, there were 122 yeas, 15 nays, and 188 not voting.

Mr. Charles T. O'Ferrall, of Virginia, made the point of order that no quorum was present.

The Speaker pro tempore overruled the point of order on the ground that the former proceedings had disclosed the presence of 172 Members—more than a quorum—and that a motion to dispense with all further proceedings under a call did not require a quorum for its adoption.

The distinction is that in this case the previous roll call developed there was no quorum. In the other case it developed that there was a quorum. Therefore, the Chair was in error on the point of order made by the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. WINGO. I think the Chair should also state this, that a motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call is never in order until a quorum is developed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the Chair's understanding.

Mr. BLANTON. The apology of the Chair is accepted. [Laughter.]

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I make the further point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. My point of order is that the Speaker has heretofore ordered the Doorkeeper to close the doors. An order to arrest has been issued, but the doors have not actually been closed, and I fear this Republican filibuster may induce some of our brethren to escape if the doors are not closed again.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, Members coming in have a right to report as they come in?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the Chair's understanding.

During the foregoing roll call the following occurred:

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I am not largely versed in these parliamentary matters, and I would not ask a question facetiously or to interrupt the proceedings, but on behalf of several Members I would like to ask if the official roll call discloses the presence of one TINCHER, of Kansas? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In reply the Chair would state that the Chair has no information beyond what the roll call shows.

Mr. WINGO. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. The Sergeant of Arms has not yet reported the names of the persons who have been arrested and brought in. Now, the rule is very clear, and——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Sergeant at Arms has not returned anything.

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Speaker, another point of order, please. The Constitution of the United States forbids the infliction of "cruel and unusual punishments." I think it is unconstitutional to require the gentleman from Kansas to come here under arrest and listen to that singing in the hall. [Laughter.]

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I insist on the point of order. We should proceed in an orderly way. The precedents are very clear. The arrested Members are arraigned at the bar of the House and sometimes fined.

At the conclusion of the roll call,

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Two hundred and nineteen Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against that. The precedents and practice of the House are very clear. Those Members who appear voluntarily may be reported to the Clerk, but a Member who has been arrested by the Sergeant at Arms and brought in must be arraigned at the bar of the House. The House has to dispense with and dispose of that proceeding. The proper proceeding is for the Sergeant at Arms to make a return.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has not been informed that any arrests have been made under the warrants.

Mr. WINGO. But the House is informed that Members have been brought in by the Sergeant at Arms. Before dispensing with further proceedings it is in order——

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I was not arrested. I came voluntarily. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. I make the point of order that the Speaker of the House having issued his warrants of arrest, the presumption is that the Sergeant at Arms has done his duty.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The presumption is not well taken. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, while the House may, and in most cases does, dispose of the whole thing by dispensing with further proceedings under the call, I insist that the proper procedure is to vacate the order of arrest and release the arrested Members.

Here we have a great measure for the relief of the American farmer, and the House insisted on night sessions, and it is now 10 minutes after 10 o'clock before we could get a quorum for that night session. If we maintain a quorum during the remaining nights of this session, we have got to discipline the offending Members. I insist that the Sergeant at Arms make his return and that the offending Members be arraigned at the bar of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is overruled. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I appeal from the decision of the Chair. Plainly, we have a right to follow the order of arrest.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. We will hear the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WINGO. I insist that the Chair can not entertain a point of order against an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not debatable now.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Oh, no; everything stops. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear from the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman who has just moved to adjourn is responsible for all this delay.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order and insist on its being considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has already overruled the point of order.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the motion is dilatory.

Mr. WINGO. It is not competent for the gentleman to make a motion under the present status that he occupies before this House. The record shows that the gentleman from Maryland was not present. He was brought in only a moment ago.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to adjourn. All those in favor of adjourning will signify their assent by saying "aye"; those opposed, "no."

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes had it.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I insist on my appeal from the decision of the Chair. It is unheard of.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. I withdraw the decision on the point of order until I can hear from the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WINGO. Oh, you do?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I call attention to paragraph 753 of the Manual. The Manual, in relation to the arrest of absent Members, says——

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be heard on the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized at the present time.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I can get through while the gentleman is looking through the book he has in his hands. The rule is very plain.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio is ready to resume.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. All right.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I call the attention of the Chair to this paragraph, near the bottom of page 330 of the Manual:

> The call of the House is ended by a motion "to dispense with further proceedings under the call," which may be agreed to by less than a quorum as well as by a quorum, and when so agreed to ends all proceedings of the call.

This motion is plainly in order, and permits the House to proceed with its business, which has been interrupted by gentlemen upon the other side of the House.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The gentleman himself was not present early in the evening.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Further, Mr. Speaker, I call the Speaker's attention to paragraph 3039 in Hinds' Precedents, Volume IV, page 130:

> The motion to dispense with proceedings under a call is in order, although Members under arrest may not have had opportunity to make excuses.

That is plainly in point, Mr. Speaker, to the present situation.

On April 29, 1892, during proceedings under a call of the House, Mr. William W. Bowers, of California, presented his excuse for failure to attend part of the session of the previous day.

Mr. Richard P. Bland, of Missouri, moved that Mr. Bowers be excused, which motion was agreed to, 128 yeas to 53 nays. Then Mr. Charles J. Boatner, of Louisville, submitted the following resolution:

> "Resolved, That all further proceedings against Members for non-attendance at the sessions of the House on yesterday are hereby dispensed with."

Mr. Bland made the point of order that each Member who is included in the warrant of the Sergeant at Arms and is under arrest has a right to give his excuse for his absence and to make such explanation as he thinks proper, and that the resolution submitted by Mr. Boatner was therefore not in order.

The Speaker overruled the point of order and decided that the resolution was in order.

I again call the attention of the Chair to section 3039:

The motion to dispense with proceedings under a call is in order, although Members under arrest may not have had opportunity to make excuses.

Which is precisely the case which is now before us. I insist, Mr. Speaker, on my motion. Gentlemen upon that side of the House have been delaying the passage of a bill for the relief of agriculture, and I insist that these gentlemen have been responsible for whatever delay there has been.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to his motion.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I have said all I wanted to say.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio reads a decision and he relies solely upon the proposition that the motion is in order, notwithstanding the fact that the arrested Members have not been permitted to give their excuses. That is a different proposition from the rights of the House, and the rule is clear. Rule XV, paragraph 2, provides:

In the absence of a quorum, 15 Members, including the Speaker, if there is one, shall be authorized to compel the attendance of absent Members, and in all calls of the House the doors shall be closed, the names of the Members shall be called by the Clerk, and the absentees noted; and those for whom no sufficient excuse is made may, by order of a majority of those present, be sent for and arrested, wherever they may be found.

Now, the gentleman from Ohio was absent in the early part of the evening, but he got in early enough to make the motion after I had first made it and he found that he could not prevent it by dilatory tactics.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I am responsible for it and not the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. WINGO. The record shows the contrary. The rule further provides:

By officers to be appointed by the Sergeant at Arms for that purpose, and their attendance secured and retained; and the House shall determine upon what condition they shall be discharged. Members who voluntarily appear shall, unless the House otherwise direct, be immediately admitted to the Hall of the House, and they shall report their names to the Clerk to be entered upon the Journal as present.

The Members, if we insist upon the strict rule which is being followed here to-night, are not permitted to report their names to the Clerk unless the House permits it. We have acquiesced in their coming in, but we have issued, upon a proper motion, a warrant of arrest to the Sergeant at Arms. The presumption is that he has arrested and brought in Members, but we can not tell until he makes a return upon his warrant whether he has, and whenever that proceeding has been established I shall insist, and do insist, that the return of the Sergeant at Arms should be made and that we should dispose of the motion as to who are in contempt of the House and decide what punishment, if any, we shall administer to them.

Now, Mr. Speaker, how can I make a motion for punishment until I know who the absent Members are that have been arrested and brought in, and how can I tell about the punishment to be administered except upon the final return of the Sergeant at Arms?

All this talk about delay is mere bunk by the gentleman from Ohio. His party either is incompetent or can not or will not keep a quorum here, and we have had to send out and arrest them, very few Republicans being present. [Applause.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BARKLEY. The gentleman from Arkansas has yielded for a question. If the motion of the gentleman from Ohio to dispense with further proceedings under the call is adopted, will that discharge the Republican leader from the custody of the Sergeant at Arms?

Mr. WINGO. I want to be fair. The Republican leader, Mr. LONGWORTH, came in just before the order of arrest was issued.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I made the motion myself.

Mr. WINGO. Yes; I made a motion, and the gentleman tried to head it off by a dilatory motion which the Speaker has admitted was not in order, though the Republican leader wasted time by forcing a roll call.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And that was before the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] was present.

Mr. WINGO. I first made the motion, and then to save his face the gentleman from Ohio, seeing he could not prevent it, made the motion to bring in the absentees.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I want to make this suggestion with reference to the argument made by my friend from Arkansas. He suggests that the House having ordered the arrest of Members must proceed with it until arrest is disposed of, and that when a quorum appears a motion can not be made to dispense with further proceedings under the call. The motion made by the gentleman from Ohio is a motion to dispense with all of these proceedings. A quorum is present, and if the House desires to dispense with the proceedings and proceed with this important agricultural bill, it has the right to do that and does not have to spend two or three hours doing something else in a technical way.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Not just now.

Mr. ABERNETHY. How do you know a quorum is present?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. A quorum has developed on the roll call.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Let us ascertain and see if one is here.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. He is a mind reader.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The motion offered by the gentleman from Ohio gives the House complete freedom of action. The House has a right on that motion to dispense with further proceedings and immediately go on with the consideration of this agricultural bill; or if the House wants to follow the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas and spend two or three hours on some dilatory tactics, it can vote down the motion of the gentleman from Ohio; but I say that under the rules of the House, which are supposed to furnish liberty of action by the House, the House has the right now at once to dispense with any further proceedings and go right ahead with the agricultural bill.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, one further suggestion——

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield for a question before he yields the floor?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, there is no evidence whatever that any of the gentlemen who have arrived here in sufficient numbers to make a quorum have been arrested. We desire on this side of the House, at least, to proceed with the business of the House. We can proceed if my motion is carried, and I insist upon my motion.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection?

Mr. DOWELL. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be heard then on the point of order.

Mr. WINGO. May I state to the Speaker that I have assurances from the Republican leaders who have at last arrived that they want to go on and consider the bill and stop their filibuster, and with that assurance I withdraw my point of order.

Mr. DOWELL. I think the gentleman had better proceed with this bill.

Mr. WINGO. I am glad to see my friend is now here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio has moved to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request to proceed for one minute.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9033) declaring an emergency in respect of certain agricultural commodities, to promote equality between agricultural commodities and other commodities, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9033, with Mr. SANDERS of Indiana in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. VOIGT and Mr. ASWELL rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. VOIGT] is entitled to recognition. For what purpose does the gentleman from Louisiana rise?

Mr. ASWELL. I rise to yield myself three minutes of my time.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I did not understand the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. ASWELL. I am in control of one-fourth of the time, and I yield myself three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman for or opposed to the bill?

Mr. ASWELL. I am opposed to it, but I want to make a statement about this foolish, silly performance to-night brought about in this House by Members on the Republican side.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana is recognized for three minutes, and under the rule must confine himself to the bill.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. ASWELL. Am I recognized, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Louisiana yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. ASWELL. No; I want to make a statement of three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana is recognized for debate on the bill.

Mr. ASWELL. For more than two hours I have appealed to the Speaker of the House——

Mr. DOWELL. I object to the gentleman stating——

Mr. BLANTON. He is speaking within his rights.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield to the gentleman for any question.

For more than two hours I have repeatedly appealed to the Speaker for recognition to make the earnest appeal I now want to make, to proceed with the business of this House, which is the discussion of this bill. I tried several times to get recognition to make that request.

The next speaker in this debate, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. VOIGT], knows more about this bill than the father of the bill, or both of the two stepfathers of the bill, that are on the program. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I insist that in spite of the fact that the Republican leader on that side insisted and forced the roll call and delayed this procedure for nearly an hour and filibustered in every way he could—I insist, Mr. Chairman, that the committee proceed now to hear from a man who knows the inside and the outside of this bill, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. VOIGT]. [Applause.]

Mr. VOIGT was recognized.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Oregon to make a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. VOIGT. I do.

Mr. WATKINS. It is now 25 minutes past 10; does the rule fix 11 o'clock as the time for adjournment?

The CHAIRMAN. It does not.

Mr. VOIGT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I do not believe that I can live up to the powerful recommendation given me by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL], but I shall do the best I can to explain the fundamental features of the bill. I shall not take the time to recite to the committee the distress that exists in certain lines of the farming industry. Every member of the committee, and I believe every Member of this House, is satisfied that there is distress in certain lines of agriculture in the United States; and I am sure that every Member of this House wishes to relieve that distress by some fairly workable and reasonably sound measure from an economic standpoint.

I can not support this measure. [Applause.] My record in this House warrants me in stating that I am a genuine friend of the farmer. If I thought there was a reasonable probability of having this measure work out, I should vote for it.

Now, I want to discuss as briefly as I may some of the salient features of this bill, and then I want to take the time to apply the principles of the bill to the commodities mentioned in it and show to the committee why this bill can not do what its friends claim it will do.

First of all let me say that this is a price-fixing measure. I should not condemn this bill because it is a price-fixing measure if I thought that the bill was otherwise workable. The friends of the bill and the worthy chairman of the committee deny that this is a price-fixing measure. Let us see about that. There are three factors which determine prices under this bill, two of which are absolutely fixed. This bill takes the 10-year average of all commodities from 1905 to 1914 and calls that 100. Now, that is an absolutely fixed figure which the directors of the proposed corporation can not change. It fixes another factor, and that is the average price of the respective farm commodities that are mentioned in the bill respecting which it is proposed to declare an emergency. That is another 10-year average figure. So you have two absolutely fixed figures. The third factor is the so-called index number published by the Department of Labor. We all know that that factor fluctuates very little. It is composed of the average price of 400 and more commodities, and that figure is commonly known as the index number. That index number does not vary more than 1 or 2 per cent a month. So you have two absolutely determining factors and you have one practically nonfluctuating factor. From these three factors you determine the fourth factor by a process of arithmetic. How can anybody say that is not price-fixing? Let me read what the majority report says about that:

> Thus the whole matter resolves itself into a few simple arithmetical elements.

As I say, I should vote for the bill although it is a price-fixing measure if I thought it would do the farmer any good. But I can not conceive of a greater calamity that might fall upon the farmers of this country than is contained in the provisions of this bill—to put him up anywhere from 20 to 50 per cent and then drop him into a hole.

Mr. KETCHAM. Where is he now? [Laughter.]

Mr. VOIGT. He is not as bad off now as he will be if you put him up 50 per cent and then drop him. If this bill works at all you might put the farmer up on stilts for 30 days and then give him lower prices than he has now. This would disorganize the farming industry in such a way that the distress you have now will not be a fraction of what it will be then. If you embark on this scheme, as the Secretary of Agriculture told the committee, you will have to renew it—that is, providing it works. Therefore there is nothing in the contention that this is emergency legislation. You can not put prices up artificially and then withdraw your prop without causing the greatest panic this country has ever seen. You will be like the issuers of marks and francs, and your day of reckoning must come.

Of course, this bill is open to all of the objections which may be raised against a price-fixing measure. Price fixing is uneconomic. This bill says that under it the price of live hogs shall be, say, $11 a hundred. It is just as logical to say that it shall be $10 or $12. This bill provides that the price of hogs shall be determined by the price of 400 other commodities that have no relation to hogs; but they say that you take the 400 commodities and average them, and by what that gives you you establish the price of hogs, and similarly you establish the price of corn and of cattle.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOIGT. Yes.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. If the bill passes, what would the price of hogs be in August of this year?

Mr. VOIGT. August of 1924?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Yes.

Mr. VOIGT. It would depend upon the index number of that time.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I thought it was fixed.

Mr. VOIGT. It is fixed by that index number.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Would it be the same in October as in August?

Mr. VOIGT. There would be a very slight fluctuation. The point I make is this: You can not claim that this is not a price-fixing measure simply because the price of hogs may in three months' time fluctuate 20 cents a hundred. The majority report says that if the bill had been in force for the last four months the price of hogs would have fluctuated something like 23 cents per hundred pounds. As I said, the price fluctuates with the fluctuation of the index number, but your other two factors are absolutely nonfluctuating, so that you have a fixed and determined price which any office boy can figure out, except that it may vary as the average price of four hundred and some odd commodities varies. That fluctuation is so small as not to be taken into account.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOIGT. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. Does the gentleman not think that the farmer ought to have the ratio price for his products?

Mr. VOIGT. I say to you that I should be very glad to vote for any measure that I think would work out so as to give him that price.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOIGT. I must decline to yield now any further. After I get through making my statement I shall be glad to answer any questions. The friends of the measure ought to come before this House and say that it is a price-fixing measure.

You can not say that the price of hogs or the price of corn ought to be determined by the price of some other commodity.

That is just as logical as if you said that the price of a suit of underwear should be the equivalent of the price of two hats. That is just as scientific as the plan adopted in this bill. All of you gentlemen who have received any literature or propaganda regarding this bill have seen the working of the bill illustrated on wheat only. I have never seen anybody argue for this bill but illustrated the working of the bill on wheat. The chairman of the committee in his talk here this afternoon did not go any further than to illustrate the operation of the bill on wheat.

Mr. HAUGEN. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon, but I referred to hogs.

Mr. VOIGT. Yes; the gentleman referred to hogs, but I did not understand him to show how this bill worked out on hogs, and I am going to do that. The bill provides that the price of hogs shall be $11, and to satisfy some of my friends who say this is not a price-fixing measure I shall say that if the bill had been in operation there would have been a fluctuation in the past four months on account of the variation in the index number of about 23 cents on 100 pounds of hog, as I recall the figures. This bill provides that this export corporation which is created by the bill shall publish this price. The corporation has nothing to say about that price. This price is determined by the bill itself. When the corporation finds that the facts which call for the declaration of an emergency exist it certifies those facts to the President, and the bill provides that the President shall declare the emergency. It does not provide that he may, but it provides that he shall declare the emergency. So, then, if this bill is enacted into law, the directors of this corporation have no discretion whatever. They could not decline to declare the emergency because all the facts are present which authorize the declaration of the emergency. So, then, when you pass this bill in effect you are putting a price of 11 cents per hundred on hogs when the present market price is somewhere around 7 cents. It was down to 6½, I believe, last fall.

Let us see what that is going to do. According to the figures furnished by the Agricultural Department, we slaughtered in the United States, in 1923, 81,500,000 hogs, and in 1922 we slaughtered something like 67,000,000 hogs. In other words, in one year's time, from 1922 to 1923, we increased the slaughter of hogs in this country by 14,500,000, or about 20 per cent. If on a 7-cent market you increase the slaughter of hogs in one year 14,500,000 and you raise the price from 7 cents to 11 cents, what is going to be the production of hogs in the United States during the next year or two?

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOIGT. I shall yield later on. I have a small farm; and if this thing takes effect, and I see it is going to work out, and I find I was mistaken, I shall certainly raise about four times the number of hogs I raise on that farm now, and so would every other farm proprietor in this country. Now, you will not only raise 14,600,000 extra hogs when you raise the price 60 per cent, but probably raise thirty or forty million extra hogs. Now, what will take place when you do that? Your equalization fee, or tax, which is prescribed in the bill to meet the loss on the export, is going to be so high as to wipe out any profit to the farmer. Every extra hog you raise that goes for export, of course, increases the loss, and the loss has to be laid on somebody at home; and the more you export, the more you increase the production, the more the loss is going to be to the American farmer and consumer. To my mind this is just a Utopian dream on the part of some gentlemen advocating this bill. Now let us go into the operation of this bill on hogs.

This bill does not permit the corporation that is proposed to be created here to buy or build a slaughtering plant. When the emergency is declared, when hogs are selling under this bill at 11 cents a pound, live weight, the corporation is commanded by the terms of the bill to buy all hogs that are offered in the United States at that price. Just think of it, friends! How could any corporation carry out such a command as that? This corporation by law is commanded to buy all hogs offered at $11 per hundred in the principal markets in the United States, the difference in freight being allowed for.

Mr. VESTAL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOIGT. For a short question.

Mr. VESTAL. As I understand the gentleman's argument, this bill would prevent the making of any contract for the purchasing of hogs? There could be no individual contract to buy any number of hogs, but they would have to pay this certain price?

Mr. VOIGT. The bill says that when the emergency is declared the price is fixed by operation of law, and this corporation must buy all hogs that are offered at that price. Now, of course, that means that all hogs that are not needed for domestic consumption are going to be sold to this corporation. Anyone may sell privately, of course, but what this corporation will get is the exportable surplus, because, if the world buys hogs at, say, $7 a hundred no one is going to buy hogs at $11 a hundred for export. Consequently nobody will buy hogs for slaughtering in this country unless he knows he can get rid of the hog product in this country on an $11 basis. The surplus we are going to raise, the millions of hogs that will be raised by reason of this inducement of 60 per cent increase in the price, of course, have got to be exported, not in the live form but as hog products.

These hogs which will go for export will be forced upon the corporation, and it must maintain buyers in every hog market in the United States to stand ready every hour in the day to take these hogs at $11 per hundred, and the moment the corporation ceases to do that, then your scheme collapses. This corporation has no power under the bill to build a slaughtering plant. Now let us see what will happen. In the Chicago stockyards last year, 1923, there arrived over 10,000,000 hogs. There arrived in the Chicago stockyards in 1923 over 18,000,000 food animals—hogs, calves, sheep, and cattle.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOIGT. I will.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Do those hogs bring the same price regardless of grade?

Mr. VOIGT. No; the hogs that would be below the standard grade would be somewhat cheaper, and vice versa. This would be the average run of hogs, I take it.

Mr. REECE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOIGT. For a short question.

Mr. REECE. What would be the effect of a situation like this: Suppose the packers and livestock dealers should in May contract for hogs at a certain price to be delivered in November and in the meantime an emergency was declared to exist and the price should be fixed by the Government?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman allow a suggestion?

Mr. VOIGT. Just allow me to answer this question. This bill exempts existing contracts, but if the price should be raised by operation of law after that contract was made, of course the court would declare the contract void because a law had intervened and injected a new element into the contract.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOIGT. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I suggest to the gentleman that he say to the House that he does not yield to anybody, but proceed with his speech.

Mr. VOIGT. I thank the gentleman.

Now, let us see what will happen here. This corporation can not build a packing plant or a slaughterhouse. It is barred from that by the terms of the bill. The stockyards in Chicago—there are many other stockyards in the country, but those are the largest stockyards—are owned by the five big packers in Chicago. On one day last year 86,000 hogs arrived there. Over 100,000 food animals arrived in the Chicago yards in one day in July, 1923. This corporation, under the bill, can not even rent a packing plant, unless it first determines that it can not get facilities at reasonable rates. It can not commandeer a packing plant, nor has it the power of eminent domain.

What will be the consequence? Suppose a day arrives when there are 86,000 hogs in the yards. This corporation must have its buyers there ready to buy these 86,000 hogs at $11 a hundred.

Let us see. The big five Chicago packers that operate the yards say, "We can take 50,000 hogs for home consumption, but there are 36,000 that must go for export." Now, they will say to this corporation, "We will take those hogs at 4 cents a pound. We can not pay more on account of the condition of the export market." They cost the corporation 11 cents.

Now, what is this corporation going to do about that? They have got 36,000 hogs there in the yards of the packers. They must be taken away in the regular process of slaughter. You can not store them; you can not take them out of those yards; you can not ship them back. Consequently this corporation will take any price which the Chicago packers will pay for those hogs.

If there is any gentleman present—any gentleman on the committee—who can tell me a different solution, I should like to have him speak up.

Mr. HAUGEN. Oh, the only thing they would do would be to pass them on to the next town, to the next packer. [Laughter.] If further packers are found they would export the hogs.

Mr. VOIGT. All right. I will take your proposition.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOIGT. I will yield after a while.

Now, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture say that the corporation, if they were not satisfied with the price offered by the packers there, would reload those hogs and ship them on to the next town. What town?

Mr. HAUGEN. Most of them go to Buffalo. The gentleman knows that all the hogs that go to Chicago are not all slaughtered in Chicago. They are in transit, many of them, and go right through.

Mr. VOIGT. The Chicago packers, according to the report of the Federal Trade Commission made some years ago, handle about 60 per cent of the entire hog slaughter in the United States. You could not reship those hogs. You could not find packers to take them, because they have no facilities for slaughtering them. The big packers, and possibly a few others, are the only people engaged at the present time in the export business. The small packer can not use them. He has no foreign market where he can send the surplus hog products.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOIGT. No.

I say, gentlemen, this corporation would be absolutely at the mercy of the big five packers of the country. I can not see any escape from that conclusion——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin has used 30 minutes.

Mr. VOIGT. I yield myself five minutes more.

I am not willing to vote for a bill that will authorize transactions that will cost the farmers and consumers millions of dollars and put this corporation absolutely at the mercy of the big five packers.

A gentleman who has spoken on the bill says the big five packers are opposed to this bill. Let me tell what happened in the committee about that. A young man came before the committee from the American Institute of Meat Packers. He argued against this bill.

I never received any letter from any packer in the United States protesting against this legislation. When we had the packer legislation before our committee several years ago the packers came down here in droves. The head officials came here. Their high-priced attorneys came here. None of them appeared here and objected to this legislation. So, gentlemen, if I were a packer——

Mr. HAUGEN. I can supply the gentleman with the names of a number of packers who evidently do not think it necessary to correct the gentleman. Let me make just this one correction: The gentleman knows that the packing houses are now run on short time and at 60 per cent of their capacity. He knows the idle packing houses throughout the country. So that there is no trouble as far as the processing of hogs is concerned.

Mr. VOIGT. I want to say on that that we all know—those who are at all familiar with the slaughtering business—that the only people who are engaged in the export business are the big five packers, and they are the only people who can handle these millions of hogs. The only solution the gentleman has in case these packers ask an enormous profit is that they could ship the hogs to the next town, where you could not find adequate packing plants.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOIGT. For a short question.

Mr. CARTER. Would the corporation be any more at the mercy of the packers than the farmers and stockmen are now?

Mr. VOIGT. There is not any use of going into that. I am just saying here that I am not willing to vote for any legislation like this, and I think this corporation would be a great deal more at the mercy of the packers.

Mr. FUNK. Tell us why. That is a fair question.

Mr. VOIGT. I have tried to tell the committee just why, because there is nobody in this country, except the big five, that can take these hogs for export, and consequently they are going to buy them on their own terms.

Let me show you where this corporation will go broke in less than 60 days, and how during that short time it would do incalculable harm to the farmers, to consumers, and business in general. The packers of this country have four or five hundred million dollars worth of products on hand, not to say anything about the grain dealers and millers. They have a profit overnight of a couple of hundred millions. The corporation must declare the emergency, and the law says it must buy all these products at the fixed ratio price. Now, what would a packer do? I don't say he will do it because he is a packer; any man would do it. He would unload at once on this corporation and take his profit, because he can duplicate his stock at the same ratio price. The packers would run a race to the office of this corporation, to see which one could get his hands first on the $200,000,000 of its capital, and the capital would be exhausted long before it could meet the obligations imposed on it by the law. The bill says the corporation may borrow a billion dollars, but it also says that the Government is not liable for anything it borrows. What banker would loan this corporation money? Under the scheme outlined in this bill, this corporation must die immediately after it is born, leaving a legacy of ruin and panic.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOIGT. No; I decline to yield further. Let me show you another thing about this hog proposition. Under this bill any farmer can slaughter his own hogs for home consumption without paying the so-called equalization fee. Under this bill as it now stands a man has the right to buy a hog from a farmer, slaughter that hog himself, and escape the payment of the equalization fee. If you are a farmer and I am a city fellow and you slaughter a hog and sell him to me, I am obliged to pay the so-called equalization fee, which I estimate would run, on a 200-pound hog, anywhere from $2 to $5. Now, men are not going to pay that tax unless they are legally obliged to.

Here is the way the bill works out, according to the legal talent we have had before the committee: If I buy a dressed hog from a farmer, I am obliged to pay the so-called equalization fee. If I buy that hog from a farmer and slaughter the hog myself or have the hog slaughtered, I do not have to pay the fee. If I buy that hog from a farmer and pay the farmer 25 cents for slaughtering the hog for me as my property and have it delivered to me, I do not have to pay any equalization fee. Now, there are three cases where the net result of the operation is the same. In one case there is an equalization fee payable, and in two cases there is not.

Suppose that under this bill a farmer slaughters a half dozen hogs and turns them into sausage and smoked meat and ham, and figures he is going to use them for his own use. Then he finds he has too many hams on hand or he finds he has made too much sausage and he wants to take it to town and sell it.

Under this bill he would not have to pay any equalization fee on the products he sells, because when he slaughtered the hogs he did not slaughter them for market. Now, then, whether that equalization fee is payable or not, and whether the Government is going to collect a tax on that or not remains within the breast of the man who does the slaughtering. If he thinks he is slaughtering for market then there is an equalization fee payable, but if he thinks he is slaughtering for home use and uses his liberal judgment in his own favor there is no fee payable.

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. What will be the penalty if he practices fraud?

Mr. VOIGT. I can not take the time now to answer that. That same thing runs all through this bill. It applies to wheat, and it applies to all other products in the bill, so that there would be any quantity of the commodities mentioned in this bill which, by that simple operation, would escape the payment of the equalization fee.

Now, I say to you gentlemen, if by that easy process people can escape the payment of the equalization fee we are going to increase tremendously the local slaughter of hogs. People will not pay that tax if they can escape it, and they can escape it under the bill. Among those hogs which go to the packers you are going to have a very large percentage for export. On that portion which actually goes to the packers you have got to collect the equalization fee on this tremendous overproduction for export. That fee will be so large that there will be nothing left for the farmer and there will be no profit in the transaction for the farmer.

So I say to you gentlemen that to work this thing out on hogs simply can not be done, and the same applies to cattle, calves, and sheep, and all the argument I have made on hogs applies to all these animals.

Now, please bear this in mind: Some of the friends of this bill say that this corporation can start in by trying this thing out first on wheat. They say, "If it works on wheat, we will try it on hogs; if it works on hogs, we will take cattle; and then we will take corn," and so forth.

Now, that will not work for this reason: This corporation can not refuse, in my judgment, to declare an emergency on hogs, for instance, because the moment this bill becomes a law all the facts that call for the declaration of an emergency exist, and the directors can not justly refuse to declare it. Now, if you declare an emergency on hogs, you must immediately declare an emergency on cattle and sheep.

If you put up the price of pork 60 per cent, people are going to eat more beef. You are going to find that if you raise the price of pork 60 per cent, people are going to eat more poultry, fish, and other food, because the relative price will be cheaper. This will increase the amount of hog products for export.

In order to prevent this, the corporation will immediately have to declare the emergency on beef and sheep, although we are not at the present time exporting any beef. We are on an importing basis as to beef.

This bill will create an exportable surplus.

If you declare the emergency on pork, you must immediately declare the emergency on pork products. If you do not, then you make the packers of this country an immediate present overnight of at least $200,000,000.

Let us see about that. If you raise the price of hogs 60 per cent to-morrow, and that is the absolute price, because this corporation is commanded by law to buy all the hogs that are offered at $11 a hundred, then, of course, all the pork products that are in the country are going up at least 60 per cent in price, are they not? If you are a butcher and you have 10,000 pounds of pork on hand and the price of live hogs is raised 60 per cent, your stock is going up at least 60 per cent, and probably more. According to the last report of the big five packers of Chicago—I looked it up in Moody's book the other day—they had stocks on hand of $252,000,000. Most of that was pork, and if you increase the hogs 60 per cent, you are going to at least increase that $250,000,000 by 50 or 60 per cent, are you not. That is a pure present to the big five packers, and we have 200 other packers in the United States. The big five are interested in a couple of hundred subsidiary corporations, which will also reap a harvest. Therefore, unless you do something by way of levying a tax on the stock which the packers have on hand, you are going to make them a present of several hundred million dollars. You must immediately declare the emergency on hog products and cattle products and sheep products in order to prevent that gigantic gift to those interests.

That is not all. All other food products are going to rise in price when you raise pork 60 per cent. When you raise beef and mutton, other food products are going to rise in price sympathetically.

I dare say that if you put this bill in effect to-morrow, you would make a gift, not to the farmer, not to the man you are trying to help with this bill, but to the nonproducer, to the business man and speculator, who has the stocks on hand—you will make the business interests of this country an immediate present overnight of $500,000,000 by the operation of this bill.

I want to say a word about some of the other products in this bill. Corn is mentioned in this bill. The original bill had cotton in it; and the gentlemen representing the cotton States here had a meeting, I understand, and they unanimously decided—and they acted wisely—that this bill could not apply to cotton, because we export 65 per cent of our cotton, and they asked us to take cotton out. The result would be that if you had a ratio price of 20 cents on cotton, exporting 60 or 65 per cent of the product, if the world price should go down to 15 cents, there would be an equalization fee of 5 cents a pound on cotton. In other words, the people of the United States would pay 25 cents a pound for cotton and we would supply the world with cotton at 15 cents, and we would immediately lose the export of $200,000,000 worth of cotton manufactures, because no manufacturer here could manufacture cotton goods out of 25-cent cotton when the man in England or in Germany or in France could make them out of 15-cent cotton. We would lose that $200,000,000 of exports. That is a phase of this bill I have not time to touch on, but it is a very interesting question—how far a man is affected who is in the exporting business in this country and who is obliged to buy some of these commodities on which a ratio price has been set, or who is obliged to use part of these goods in the composition of anything he exports. He will be out of business in the export world, and there is not a word in this bill to save him. There is no fund established to which he can go. The only people that are provided for explicitly in this bill are the packers and the millers, and those interests have not put up more than a formal objection to this bill. They could not very well urge its passage openly.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOIGT. No; I can not yield.

I have said I would vote for the principle of this bill applied to wheat. I would put an artificial price—not a ratio price—on wheat for say two years, and then decrease the price for, say two years. But I would tax every bushel of wheat except that used for seed. Such a bill would be open to the objections against price fixing and would bring about overproduction. My only reason for supporting such a measure would be to give to the wheat growers of the country what I am satisfied they were deprived of during the war period. We fixed the price of wheat by law, and we intended the price to be a minimum guaranty, but the grain corporation by a system of licensing made that price the maximum price, and by that unjust operation deprived the wheat farmers of many hundred millions of dollars. Some have estimated it as high as $2,000,000,000. Equal and exact justice requires that we make that loss to the wheat farmers good, and I am willing to be a party to any plan that will give them what they are entitled to, whether that plan be economic or not. I just want some plan that will work temporarily to accomplish this object but I would not recommend such a plan as permanent legislation.

Now, let us see whether the bill could apply to corn. You will find a very interesting table in the Department of Agriculture year book for 1921, page 165. This table analyzes the corn crop and tells us where it goes. I shall not read all the uses that corn is put to but I will say that all the corn according to this table except about 9 per cent is fed to stock and other animals. According to the Haugen bill all corn used for feed is not liable for any equalization fee. Now, you have the same situation in regard to corn that you have in the case of cotton. You would have 8 or 9 per cent of the entire corn crop of the United States, on which you could collect an equalization fee to meet the loss on the corn that you export. What is the use of holding forth such a camouflage to the farmers of the country? I am unwilling to do that. I am a friend of the farmer, but I will not advocate a scheme, I will not hold out any hope to them, that I know can not be fulfilled. [Applause.]

It might perhaps be better political strategy on my part to favor this bill, but I think it is about time that the truth were told about what the trouble is with the farmer, and how far we can go by way of remedy. I want to say this, that I have studied the matter of agricultural relief for the past three years, and it is a mighty difficult matter for anybody to prescribe for the farmers' ills. We have examined in our committee one plan after another, and there is no plan that is going to give to the farmer an increased price which is economical and sound. You can not take a farm commodity or any other commodity and put an artificial price on it and say that you have something that will hold water, something that is economically sound. The two things do not go together. [Applause.]

One great trouble with us is that we can not find a market for our surplus at a profitable price, because our customer—Europe—has no buying power. The people in Europe are not consuming normal quantities of food. Even in France the per capita consumption of wheat is 2 or 3 bushels less than it was before the war. In my judgment our Government injured the American farmer to the extent of several billion dollars by failing to use its full moral influence to bring about economic restoration in Europe. The United States Steel Corporation has profited many millions by disorganization over there, because its competitors were put out of business, and possibly a few other lines have benefited, but the American farmer surely has been the sufferer.

The farmer should be relieved from legislation which is oppressing him. Reduce the tariff on many things he buys. I am not a free trader, but believe with many friends of the tariff that the existing tariff is an undue burden on our people. Repeal the Esch-Cummins law, or those portions which produce exorbitant freight rates, or by reclassification give the farmer preferential freight rates. Break up the unlawful trusts and price-fixing combinations which have been and are robbing the farmer and the city man as well. Assist the farmer by creating for him a great national cooperative organization, with State and local branches. Pass the Norris-Sinclair bill, or the Aswell bill, or a combination of these bills. Give the farmer economic equality, and he will take care of himself.

In addition to this, and as strictly emergency legislation, I am willing to vote for a bill which will give export certificates for 10 or 15 per cent of the value of wheat, rye, barley, and rice, which shall be good for the payment of import duties. Such a plan can not be applied to animal products, in my judgment. Try this for two years; in the third year make it half the amount, then a quarter, and then stop it. This plan alone will do more good than can be hoped for with the Haugen bill, and it is worthy of serious consideration.

Now they put rice and sheep into this bill, and they want to declare an emergency on them. The fact of the matter is that we have been on an importing basis on mutton for the last 10 years. How in all the world can you operate an export corporation to export mutton and sheep when you have been importing mutton year after year for 10 years? I call that camouflage.

We have got beef in the bill. According to the report of the Tariff Commission we imported millions of dollars worth of beef last year more than we exported. We are on an importing basis. That is a good thing for the farmer, and I hope that it will remain so, so that the farmer will not be dependent on the world price for beef. You are actually going to create an exportable supply of beef, to create the very situation for the farmer that you are trying to avoid, and you are doing it with other commodities mentioned in this bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will not the gentleman discuss his view of the tariff feature before he gets through?

Mr. VOIGT. Look at the bill. You have got sheep in there, and then to cap the climax the authors of the bill have put in wool. As a matter of fact, we import one-half of all the wool used in the United States. The ratio price of wool, if the bill should take effect, is almost 25 cents a pound below the present market price. I will leave it to you to guess why wool was put into the bill.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOIGT. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. What was the ratio price of wool when President Harding was inaugurated on the 4th of March, 1921?

Mr. VOIGT. I do not care what it was.

Mr. TINCHER. Why can you not have a ratio price?

Mr. VOIGT. I shall answer the gentleman's question. When Mr. Harding was inaugurated we were not exporting any wool. We are not a wool-exporting Nation. How could the directors of this corporation sign a document and notify the President that we have an exportable surplus of wool? How could they have done it at any time in the past 25 years? So, then, it does not make any difference what the price of wool was. In 1922 we imported over 250,000,000 pounds of wool; and there is more camouflage in this bill.

I want now to go into the tariff feature. The men who framed this bill originally did not have the slightest idea, in my judgment, about the tariff complications incident to the bill. They provided in the original bill that a tariff or embargo could be levied on the commodities mentioned in it, but they did not seem to think that if we put up the price of lard 4 or 5 cents a pound probably some people would be importing oils from other countries. Coconut oil, for instance, is used as a substitute for lard. Consequently this bill will affect several hundred items that are now on the tariff list, or if they are not on the tariff list we shall have to put them on.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed 20 additional minutes.

Mr. VOIGT. I shall take 10 minutes more. If you raise the price of pork 60 per cent, of course you are immediately going to be flooded in this country by every conceivable article of food which may be used as a substitute for pork, and consequently all such articles will have to be guarded against so far as import is concerned. It is going to be an almost impossible job for this corporation or for the Tariff Commission to keep on adjusting these tariff rates on hundreds of articles so as to prevent those articles and substitutes and derivatives from coming into the country. But it will have to be done or the purpose of the bill will be defeated.

I have advanced some views of my own in addition to the minority report. I have said that I should vote for this bill if the bill with some modifications were applied to wheat only. Under the present bill I think that at least 200,000,000 bushels of wheat would escape the payment of the equalization fee. We use in this country something like seventy or eighty million bushels of wheat for animal feed. If you raise the price of wheat 50 per cent of course no one is going to feed it if he can find something else to feed to his animals. The moment this thing goes into effect, people will feed substitutes, which they can buy 50 per cent cheaper. What will happen? Under this bill that which is now used for feed will enhance the exportable surplus of wheat.

Under this bill the producer of wheat has a right to grind his own wheat into flour for his own use. The farming population, if you speak of it as one-third of our population, eats one-third of the flour which is made in the United States. That one-third will escape the payment of the equalization fee. If a farmer takes his wheat to a mill to have it ground for his own use and he finds that he has had too much flour ground, he has the legal right to sell anyone that flour, and the buyer need not pay the equalization fee, because when the wheat was milled it was not milled for sale. How many people are going to take advantage of that? How many people are going to honestly overestimate their requirements? Right there 150,000,000 bushels of wheat under this bill will escape the payment of the equalization fee.

I have said that if those things were guarded against I would be willing to vote for this bill applied to wheat only, but let us not fool ourselves about this. These other commodities are put in here for logrolling purposes. Can anybody tell me why rice was put into this bill? Why was rice put in, and why was rye left out, and why was barley left out? Last year we exported about $28,000,000 worth of rye and about $11,000,000 worth of rice. Why not put those things into the bill? Those farmers have a right to be recognized if you are going to frame a logrolling bill here. The majority report says that the operation of this bill will cause a well-balanced agriculture, and that for that reason there will be no overproduction. Let us see about that. If I am a farmer and I can get by operation of law 60 per cent more for hogs than I can get at the present time and have it guaranteed to me by the Government, am I going to raise potatoes?

Why, no; we are all going to raise more hogs and less potatoes. The potato farmer will turn to raising hogs and we will have a tremendous export of hogs, and by reason of the scarcity of potatoes we are going to have a fairly high price for potatoes.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. If the gentleman will permit, will not that in consequence put the price of potatoes rather out of sight?

Mr. VOIGT. It will certainly raise the price of potatoes, but I can not say how high they would go. Now, the legal talent that we have in the committee informed us that the words in this bill, "cattle, sheep, or swine, or any food product, derived therefrom," did not cover milk from the cow.

The chairman this afternoon said it did cover milk from the cow. That is a very important matter. The dairy products in this country amount to something like $2,000,000,000 per year.

Mr. ASWELL. Does the gentleman recall that he himself offered an amendment to include milk?

Mr. VOIGT. Yes; I offered amendments to include the exportable surplus of practically all farm commodities, so as to bring forth some sort of a balanced bill here. If milk is a food product derived from cattle under the meaning of this bill, of course that would take in butter and cheese. If the emergency is declared on food products of cattle, and that should include milk from the cow, then every woman or housewife who buys a pint of milk will have to pay the equalization fee on that pint or quart of milk. The whole thing is unworkable.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOIGT. I will.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I want to ask the gentleman if under this bill hogs are worth 11 cents a pound on the basic price of these 400 commodities, and if the number of hogs increase, say, double in two years, would the corporation still have to pay the 11 cents a pound?

Mr. VOIGT. The corporation would pay 11 cents, but when the price got above 11 cents there would be no emergency.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Another question. If the average price of these 400 commodities goes up——

Mr. VOIGT. If the price goes up, of course your 11 cents will rise proportionately.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. And you would pay probably 12 cents by raising three times as many hogs?

Mr. VOIGT. Yes; it does not make any difference how many million additional hogs you raised, this corporation has to buy at 11 cents; if the index rises, your 11 cents will rise.

Mr. ASWELL. I do not know whether the gentleman is tired or not, but a great deal of interest has been manifested with reference to the increased cost of living, and the gentleman knows more about that than anybody. Will the gentleman discuss that phase?

Mr. VOIGT. I will take a few minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed one hour.

Mr. VOIGT. I will take five minutes more. Of course no one can say what this scheme would cost the people of the United States. The chairman did not go any further this afternoon than to say that it might increase the price of a loaf of bread one-half a cent. Now, I look at it in this way, gentlemen: The total farm crop of the United States is worth about $8,000,000,000. The major portion of that $8,000,000,000, with the exception of cotton, consists of the food animals, dairy products, and grains. The corn crop of the United States and the hog crop are the two biggest sources of food supply we have in the country. Now, the annual value of the crop on which this bill will operate is probaby between four and five billion dollars. Now, pork is increased 60 per cent, corn increased about 20 per cent, and it is proposed to increase wheat 50 per cent. Now, suppose we strike an average, and say it is on an average 40 per cent. That would be 40 per cent of, say, four or five billion dollars. I am satisfied that if this scheme were even put in practice—and I have no fear it will be, gentlemen—it would cost the consumers of this country an additional $2,000,000,000 per annum. Of course the farmer will pay more for wages and everything he buys. We consumed in the United States last year between nine and ten billion pounds of pork. The rest was exported.

Now, if you figure 4 cents a pound live weight—and, of course, when the hog is slaughtered it amounts to more than 5—you get the sum of $490,000,000 which it will cost the people of the United States, exclusive of those who raise the pork. Of course there is not much use talking about this increased cost, because this bill will never get that far. No President could sign this bill, and everything President Coolidge has said indicates that he would not sign it if passed up to him. It is a pity that we could not have devoted our efforts in framing a workable bill which at least would have given some relief. I am in favor of staying here all summer if necessary and do it.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOIGT. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. Does the gentleman advance as an argument against this bill the idea that the consuming public could not afford to pay to the American farmer the ratio price?

Mr. VOIGT. I have not made any such argument. Somebody asked me to state what in my judgment the cost of this operation would be to the American consumer. I have not made that statement as an argument against this bill. Somebody has asked me what I thought the cost would be and I have stated it.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOIGT. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. The gentleman has stated as one of the dangers that he sees in the enactment of this bill the possibility of increase in production all along the line. The only purpose of the bill is simply to give the producer, as I understand it, the same actual price as the producer received on the average during the period from 1905 to 1914, inclusive. What, then, will be the actual incentive to increase the production above what it was during that period?

Mr. VOIGT. I will say to the gentleman, take the case of hogs: If the farmers in this country produced for slaughter 81,000,000 hogs in 1923 at 7 cents per pound, how many hogs will they produce if you guarantee them 11 cents a pound? I think that answers the gentleman's question. [Applause.]

Mr. BURTNESS. Does the gentleman not overlook the fact that a good many of those produced last year were produced at a loss?

Mr. VOIGT. Yes. Let us assume that. How much more pork will they raise if you increase the price and guarantee an advance of 60 per cent by law?

Mr. BURTNESS. Does the gentleman think it would give the farmer an unusual profit?

Mr. VOIGT. No. I am not here to complain that this would give the farmer too much money. I am just stating what the bill would do.

This bill in no way cures the farmer's real troubles. If this thing should work temporarily it will do away with cooperative associations among farmers. The object of cooperation is to secure a better price, but if the Government fixes one price, and no one can get any more or any less, what is the use of cooperation? This bill would do more damage than the farmers could repair in years, and the farmer's great hope lies in the field of cooperation.

Dante M. Pierce, publisher of the Wisconsin Farmer and Iowa Homestead, who enjoys the absolute confidence of farmers, condemns the bill. Edward Nordman, commissioner of agriculture of Wisconsin, writes me that this bill "will simply fool the farmers into believing that something is being done for them, whereas the effect of such a bill will be to do agriculture infinitely more harm than good."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. VOIGT. I will grant myself five minutes more.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOIGT. Yes.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I wonder if the condition we find ourselves in is not due to this fact, which the friends of the farmer will not face, namely, we want to restore to the farmer, first, the power of his dollar, and we have taken from the farmer that purchasing power by virtue of the fact that we have increased the price of other articles that the farmer buys, and because of that we now want to give him increased prices for the commodities which he produces to the extent, as the gentleman says, of $1,500,000,000. Why do not these friends of the farmers advocate some scheme such as was suggested in the question of the leader on this side, which will reduce the prices on the articles which the farmer buys? [Applause.]

Mr. VOIGT. There is a great deal in what the gentleman says. I want to say this: I am satisfied that the present high tariff is a detriment to the American farmer. There is no question about that. [Applause.]

Now then the real remedy for this trouble is not your loading up the farmer and consumer here with this exorbitant tariff and then put on top of that what you might call an internal tariff. The people who advocate this bill propose, in order to right this wrong which they say exists against the farmer, which is a wrong against the consumer as well, to pile another wrong on both of them. They propose to cure one wrong by inflicting another.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Another question: Is it not a fact that, according to all the laws of economics, if you add two billion or a billion and a half of value—I think your figures are right; I think two billions or a billion and a half would be right—is it not a fact that if you increase values by two billions or a billion and a half you would increase the prices of these 400 articles so that your index number would change with the value of the article? You are going around a vicious circle all the time.

Mr. VOIGT. If you increase the price of these farm products a couple of billion dollars the general index number will rise; and when that number rises, of course, the price of these farm products will go up, and in each case your index number will go up, so that they will all be chasing each other around a circle.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. In other words, you will be going around a vicious circle all the time.

Mr. VOIGT. Yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOIGT. Yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The gentleman referred to the probability that the increased price of hogs of 11 cents a pound would greatly increase the number of hogs produced by the farmers. How does the gentleman explain the fact that during the war, when hogs were 15 to 19 cents a pound, we did not produce as many hogs as are now being produced at 7 cents a pound? Are there not other factors entering into that proposition? For instance, does not the price on corn determine the number of hogs that are produced?

Mr. VOIGT. Yes. Surely the price of corn determines whether it is profitable to produce hogs, and there is a very close relationship between the price of corn and the price of hogs.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. So that many other factors enter into the price of hogs?

Mr. VOIGT. Certainly. Of course during the war all other commodities were relatively high and transportation facilities were disturbed and we could not get the meat out of the country, but with an open market conditions have changed.

Mr. KETCHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOIGT. Yes.

Mr. KETCHAM. May I say that I agree with the very fine compliments which have been paid the gentleman with reference to his knowledge of this bill, and that is the reason I am asking this question. Very early in the gentleman's discussion he said that later on he would tell about this proposition of price fixing in response to the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VESTAL]. May I supplement his inquiry by this one: Did not the gentleman confuse the idea of price fixing with the idea of the ratio price, which everybody admits is a fixed price? This ratio price is not the price the producer would receive for his product, nor is it the price that the purchaser would pay. Either of these prices is a matter of individual contract between purchaser and seller.

Mr. VOIGT. I am very glad the gentleman asked that question. The majority of the committee say this is not a price-fixing measure, because anyone is at liberty to sell for any price and anyone is at liberty to buy for any price. Let us examine into that.

The price of hogs is fixed by the law at $11. Now, theoretically, of course, the farmer has the right to sell those hogs for $10, but no one will say that if the Government corporation stands ready to pay him $11 that he is going to sell for $10, and who is going to pay $12 for hogs when the established market price is $11? Now, $11, or whatever it may be, is going to be the absolute price of that article. [Applause.]

Mr. VESTAL. I do not know whether the gentleman understood my question or not. The proposition I want to get in my mind is this: Let me put a concrete proposition. Suppose the ratio price of corn, for instance, was 80 cents, and on my little farm I want to feed some stock. I want to buy some corn from my neighbor, who has 1,000 bushels of corn to sell. I want to know whether under this bill I can contract with my neighbor at a cash price for less than 80 cents, which is the ratio price.

Mr. VOIGT. Oh, yes.

Mr. VESTAL. Can I go in there and buy this corn from him and pay him cash for it at 70 cents, if he wants to make that contract?

Mr. VOIGT. Oh, yes; you have this situation. The Government stands ready to buy that man's corn at 80 cents. If he is willing to sell to you at 70 cents, he has a right to do that, of course.

Mr. VESTAL. But if the Government buys it at 80 cents, is there not an equalization fee of some kind to be paid?

Mr. VOIGT. Yes.

Mr. VESTAL. Suppose he wants to contract with me, can I buy it without any equalization fee?

Mr. VOIGT. If you are going to use that corn for animal feed then there is no equalization fee. As I said before, there is only 5 or 6 per cent of all the corn raised in the country on which you could collect that fee.

Mr. VESTAL. All I wanted to find out was whether I could make such a contract.

Mr. MORGAN. The gentleman referred to the tariff and its relation to the farmer. The gentleman must know that nearly all of the products on the farm or that the farmer purchases, including steel products, footwear, and the implements he uses are all on the free list, even the fertilizer. [Applause.]

Mr. VOIGT. I will say to the gentleman that I understand there is a tariff on steel.

Mr. MORGAN. There is no tariff on steel.

Mr. VOIGT. There is a tariff on certain steel products.

Mr. MORGAN. Only on certain products that enter into steel production, which is a very small per cent.

Mr. VOIGT. That may be, but that enters into the price of the wagons and the other implements that the farmer buys.

Mr. MORGAN. It is a very small per cent and does not amount to much.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman does not want to ruin the farmers' home market.

Mr. VOIGT. There is not much danger of ruining the home market. People must eat, and the farmer feeds us all. Mr. H. E. Miles, director of the Fair Tariff League, says that the steel and wire industries under the Fordney tariff law were given the privilege of adding $351,000,000 to their prices, to cost consumers twice this sum at retail, or $702,000,000. He says the tariff costs Kansas farmers over $41,000,000 and Texas farmers over $86,000,000 a year. In fact, all farm organizations who argue for the Haugen bill claim the tariff discriminates against them, and I voted against the Fordney tariff bill because I believed that to be true.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the committee rose and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. Sanders, of Indiana, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9033) declaring an emergency in respect of certain agricultural commodities, to promote equality between agricultural commodities and other commodities, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, was the hour of meeting fixed at 11 o'clock for to-morrow or Thursday?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Thursday.

TO PROVIDE FOR SCIENTIFIC AND SKILLFUL FARMING

Mr. GRIEST. Mr. Speaker, in these times of agricultural depression I am impressed with the importance of enacting into law H. R. 157, reported favorably by the Agricultural Committee, to authorize the more complete endowment of agricultural experiment stations.

A State or nation advances with the development of its natural resources. To use only part of these resources limits the prosperity, opportunity, and progress of any country.

Timber, minerals, water power, coal, oil, and gas have all been considered as valuable capital, yet there is no greater resources than the soil. Particularly suited to the oldest occupation of man, this Nation has recognized the value of the soil and has applied science to the promotion of better agriculture. The development of high-yielding grains, the improvement of livestock, the clearing of cut-over lands, the drainage of marsh soils, the development of rural sanitation, and the fostering of a better rural social life have all made up a part of the Nation's program of advancement.

We must constantly look ahead. Through the application of science to the everyday efforts of country life, new opportunities for progress are constantly open to the farmers of the United States.

True, since 1921 the farming industry suffered the most severe depression which has occurred in a generation. The situation in which the farmer now finds himself, in common with all other producers of raw materials, whether of food, fuel, shelter, or clothing, is that the commodities which he has to sell have gone down in price more than the finished products which he has to buy.

It is to be hoped that the relative price of farm products has reached its lowest level; but whether that is so or not, this outstanding fact remains—the agriculture of to-morrow must more than ever utilize the findings of science in conducting our farming operations. When the margins between costs of production and crop returns are wide, less care is likely to be exercised in applying all of those methods which cut out waste, eliminate leaks and losses, and consequently lower costs of production. Profitable farming in the future must utilize to the fullest all practicable measures to cut not only costs of production but costs of distribution as well. For unless farming can be made profitable and can insure a reasonable living standard the Nation can neither hope to hold its best farmers on the land nor can it expect to attract our best young men and women into farming as a vocation.

Progress in agriculture is possible only through the use of better methods, and these methods can come only by finding and trying out new ideas. The individual farmer has neither the time nor the money to work out many new ideas. Realizing this, our Federal Government, in conjunction with the several States, founded and has supported in the past the State experiment stations. The Purnell bill, under discussion now, calls for an increase in the funds to support experimental work in these stations, for the existing funds are proving entirely inadequate for their needs. And why? First of all, the development of the extension services of these States has multiplied the demands on the institutions for information and service. It must also be remembered that the purchasing power of money has so greatly diminished that the funds now available to each State will do vastly less work than when the early laws were passed. Then, too, new problems in agriculture, such as the distribution and marketing of farm products and the improvement of the rural social life, have arisen and are demanding exhaustive research.

Let us take the typical farm, go the rounds, and see wherein that farm has felt the results of research. A silo stands at one end of the barn. Whence came the silo? Research established the fact that corn preserved in an air-tight, circular container made a nutritious and palatable food for livestock during the winter. A uniform type herd of dairy cattle is grazing in a field of clover. The basis of selection of those animals for high milk production traces back to work in breeding for dairy type at experiment stations. The mouthfuls of clover they are consuming are very likely the result of combining the use of pure seed bred at a college station, good cultural methods established by experimental trials, proper fertilization founded on experimental evidence, and systematic rotation of crops based on experiment station teachings.

Look at the lengthy, upstanding, arch-back "porkers" over in the feed lot helping themselves to a balanced ration from a self-feeder. Where is the chunky, short pig of our forefathers' day? Experiments in feeding and breeding of swine at our experiment stations have shown that economical pork production demands the "1924 model" hog. Why the balanced ration and self-feeder? Feeding trials proved that the old method of raising hogs on corn and water in a dark, dingy pen was obsolete. A potato sprayer is operating in the near-by field. Grandfather would have sneered at the practice of sprinkling the potato field, but plant pathologists have proven that the yield per acre can be increased at least one-third by proper spraying to control plant diseases. And remember an increased yield means a lowered cost of production and a greater margin of profit to the producer. And so on down the line of farm practices we find the touch of the experiment station's hand, often unknown to the farmer himself. You might ask the farmer where he gained his information for improved practices. His answer might be, "From my neighbor or from my farm paper." But trace these improved practices to their true source and you will find that they emanated from an experiment station in some section of the country.

Thus far, I have been speaking largely in terms of generalities. Now, I am going to give you a few concrete examples of just how our own experiment station in Pennsylvania has been of service to the people of our State.

Take for instance the fertilizer experiments on the college farm that have been running for 40 consecutive years. Incidentally, they are the oldest in America. I am told that the lessons on crop rotations, manure and commercial fertilizers brought out by these experiments have been worth far more to Pennsylvania farmers than the entire cost of experimental work at the college.

The development of one variety of wheat, "Pennsylvania 44," has meant an increased yield per acre of over 5 bushels wherever it was sown. Last year over 100,000 acres were sown to this variety, which was bred by a plant-breeding expert on the experimental staff. Figures show that if this seed was used over the entire State, the value of the wheat crop would be increased $10,000,000 annually over the annual income derived from wheat before this variety was developed. And remember, it does not take any more labor to raise "Pennsylvania 44" wheat than it did to produce the old common varieties.

Experiments in plant breeding at our college have resulted in three other noteworthy contributions to the agricultural prosperity of the country. One strain and two new varieties of tomatoes and a superior strain of cabbage have been of great value to the truck growers and consumers of Pennsylvania. The Penn State Earliana tomato, developed at the college, has given an increased yield of more than 2¾ tons per acre in many instances. Recent tests conducted with Penn State bullhead cabbage, which originated on the station farm, show that it produced 20 tons per acre where supposedly good commercial strains under similar conditions yielded only 17 tons.

Nearly three-fourths of Pennsylvania apple orchards are in permanent sod, and the investigations carried on by the station have proven conclusively the value of nitrogenous fertilizers in sod orchards. As a result, hundreds of fruit growers in the State are using nitrate of soda and are finding it profitable.

Result of research work in animal husbandry have revolutionized the steer-feeding industry in Pennsylvania by proving the value and economy of feeding silage with a proper protein supplement. The value of forage crops for swine and the types best suited for this purpose were also determined and the majority of the hog men of the State have followed the recommendations with great success.

Southwestern Pennsylvania is the most important sheep-producing center in the State. Practically all the sheep grown are fine wools, so that the major portion of the income from these flocks is wool. To find another source of income for these farmers an experiment was started in 1915 to study the value of grade Merino ewes as a farm flock when bred to high-class mutton rams for the purpose of producing "hothouse lambs." I understand that this experiment resulted in these farmers securing a maximum amount of wool and at the same time marketing a high-class lamb at an early age.

Investigations in plant-disease control, carried on for several years, have led to campaigns of disease control out in the State that have saved thousands of dollars to the tillers of the soil. Potato spraying alone has reduced the cost of production per bushel to such an extent that the industry has been practically saved from ruin. Diseases of truck crops have been investigated at our branch station at Bustleton, Pa., and the results have led to the control of lettuce and rhubarb diseases that threatened the industry.

Lancaster, the county which I have the honor to represent, has been, as many of you know, the richest and most productive agricultural county in the United States for more than half a century, as the tabulated statement at the conclusion of these remarks indicates. For more than 200 years, these soils have been pouring forth bountiful crops and to-day most of the land is in a high state of fertility. The 10,000 or more farms in Lancaster County, with their neat, well-kept buildings, their trim fence rows, their bounteous crops, and improved herds, reflect the industry, the intelligence, and the foresight of the pioneers who settled the county more than two centuries ago. Probably in no other part of the world have the abundant gifts of nature been so well preserved for future generations.

And yet Lancaster County, with its naturally fertile fields and its intelligent, industrious class of farmers, will have to credit part of its success to the application of scientific principles in farming. Furthermore, farmers of Lancaster County realize that now, more than ever before, they must depend on science to enable them to maintain the leadership they have held so long and the prosperity that has been theirs.

We have an immense steer-feeding industry within the county turning out from 60,000 to 80,000 choice beeves in a year. For years the practice was to feed corn, bran, and hay as a fattening ration. It remained for science to prove the economy of feeding silage and cottonseed meal, and my constituents tell me that this substitution has really saved the industry in our present economic depression. Truly, it can be said that the many silos dotting the farmsteads stand as monuments to science. The open-shed method of cattle feeding, proven sound and economical by the experiment station, has replaced the old method in Lancaster County and in the leading beef sections of the country.

This county ranks among the leaders in the United States in tobacco production. Where most districts have shown a marked decrease in the yield per acre since 1890, a comparison of these early figures with the United States Government annual report of 1922 shows that the Lancaster County yield has shown a marked increase. And why? Tobacco growers tell me it has been due partly to the farming system practiced and partly to an improved strain developed by the experiment station. More than 50 per cent of the acreage at the present time is planted to this improved strain, which not only yields better but is also of high curing quality. Right in this connection I might say that the steam sterilization of tobacco beds in Lancaster County was originated by an experiment station staff member. This practice has now been adopted in every tobacco-growing district in the country.

Wheat is a part of the crop rotation on many of the farms in our county. For years we raised a score or more of different varieties, some of them ill adapted to our conditions. Then came the development of "Pennsylvania 44" at the station farm, and to-day Lancaster is headed toward a standardization of wheat that will mean not only a better yield but also a uniform, marketable product. Already 2,500 acres of this improved variety is being grown in the county, and the acreage is doubling each year.

Although only a small part of the experimental work has been cited, it is sufficient to prove the immense value this work has been to the producers and consumers. And yet, with all this work, the farmers are ever presenting unsolved problems to the experiment station. Most of the examples I have related have been along the line of production. There are those who argue that too much work has been performed on this side which has resulted in our present depression. I want to say that the main object and ultimate results of this work have not been greater production but more economic production.

Right along this trend of thought are the problems of distribution and marketing of farm products, which are demanding solution in our State and which are the subject of so much discussion all over the country. At the present time our station has a comprehensive research program planned on problems of distribution, marketing, and rural social life, which can not be carried out because of a lack of funds. Would it not be well for us to vote reasonable amounts of money, as carried in the pending bill, to support careful, sane, accurate studies on these problems?

Gentlemen, the future prosperity of the agricultural industry and the maintenance of the present standard of living of our ever-increasing urban population depend primarily on more economical production and proper distribution of our farm products. Just when there is a crying need for research in agriculture, when the very lifeblood and backbone of our farming population are despondent and migrating to cities, we can not afford to refuse to give our support to experiment stations that can do much to place agriculture back on its feet.

HAUGEN-M'NARY BILL

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks, I insert the following:

We have now reached a stage where agriculture has been taxed so long to support other industries that it has become almost useless to try to produce a profit on the farm.

I believe, however, that the great majority of the farmers of the country will refuse to be deceived any longer and will turn their attention to the real opportunities of relief that lie before them of cheaper transportation, and especially water transportation, and to cheaper fertilizers; to cooperation in marketing, to reduction of taxes, and to other feasible plans of relief whereby all the people will be afforded a distinct advantage over present conditions.

The farmer never has and never will ask for charity, for he is not a beggar. All he wants is an equal opportunity with other classes and not to be discriminated against to the advantage of other industries and to his detriment. He is tired of selling his product in the open market and being required to buy his necessities in a protected market, thereby selling at a low price and buying at a high price. The situation of the farmer is worse to-day than at any period in the history of the farming business in this country. It is a gloomy picture that is presented by everyone who has traveled through the Western States and is familiar with the agricultural situation. The wheat farmer is not the only one in trouble. Virtually every farmer is in a bad predicament and facing ruin. They find themselves unable not only to pay their taxes and debts, but they can not even pay their interest.

According to the annual report of the Secretary of Agriculture for 1923:

In 15 corn and wheat producing States 24½ per cent of owners of farms were, in fact, bankrupt; practically one out of every four bankrupt.

One million two hundred thousand left the farm to better their financial conditions in 1922.

In New York alone for the year ending February, 1923, 26,000 moved from the farms to the cities.

In Michigan 10 per cent of the Michigan farms are vacant, and 13 per cent more are only partly worked.

According to the annual report of the Attorney General on bankruptcy among farmers:

The number of Iowa farmers in bankruptcy increased from 60 in 1913 to 489 in 1923.

Farmers' percentage of all cases in bankruptcy increased from 16.8 per cent in 1913 to 52.3 per cent in 1923. In other words, 52 farmers to 48 of all other classes in bankruptcy. The number of farmers in all cases in bankruptcy in all the States increased from 942 in 1913 to 5,940 in 1923, an increase of 4,998 in 10 years.

Bank failures in the United States have increased by leaps and bounds. More State and National banks were closed in the last seven months than in the previous five-year period.

Many suggestions as to what ought to be done to relieve the distressing situation and insure a profit to the farmer for his wheat have been offered by men who assume a knowledge of conditions.

The great need of the farmer to-day is a steady market for his product and a relief from the burdens of the high protective tariff. The great underlying principle that governs the value of wheat in this country is the law that operates in supply and demand. I intend to vote for the McNary-Haugen bill, because it seems to be the only farmers' measure for which I will have an opportunity to vote. However, I am accepting this just as the farmer is accepting it. In their desperation and dire extremity they are like the drowning man grasping at a straw, their plight can be made no worse by this legislation. It is patent that they are not going to get much consideration from this session, so if there is any virtue in this bill let us have it.

I believe a study of the following statistical tables compiled by the Department of Agriculture will convince anyone that we have many customers in the world's markets who are large buyers of our wheat and flour and have been and are now buying in large quantities of these commodities:

Compiled from Commerce and Navigation of the United States, 1914–1918, and Monthly Summaries of Foreign Commerce of the United States, June, 1919–1923.

We should endeavor to increase this list of buyers by every legitimate means. The disposal of our surplus products in foreign markets at a fair price is the one vital thing necessary for prosperous times among the farmers. Temporary advantages may be gained by placing fictitious values on grain or by storing great quantities of it, but eventually this surplus must be disposed of or it will come back upon the home market if stored in this country or upon the foreign market if allowed to accumulate there. As soon as this condition arises the price of the farmer's product will fall or the markets both foreign and domestic will be glutted. So it is the duty of this Nation to see to it that the surplus is not only exported but consumed. The farmer is not greatly impressed with the idea that the Government can fix the price on his wheat by simply placing a fictitious and arbitrary price thereon, then relieve his anxiety by buying up his wheat and his troubles at fancy prices and dumping the surplus on a foreign market at whatever price can be obtained and without regard as to whether that particular country needs it or not.

What the farmer wants is to get down to the only real practical solution of the difficulty and that is to so cut down the cost of production and delivery to a market that is able and ready to eat and pay for what he produces so that there will be left to him a profit.

We must have an honest demand from foreign countries for our wheat as it comes upon the market. It must be kept moving toward the point of consumption in order to avoid congestion of both our home and foreign markets because congestion would cause a depression and lower prices. It is obvious the more active the demand for our wheat from outside buyers the stronger the markets here at home.

First, it is necessary for us to do all that can be done through our Government to broaden and expand a foreign demand for our wheat. Teach these people to eat more wheat bread. If there is no other way, I would favor an active, intensive advertising campaign throughout foreign countries to instruct and enlighten the people concerning the benefits to be derived from eating the derivatives of American wheat. This would stimulate the markets here at home and make for higher prices to the producer.

Second, we must lessen the cost of production and reduce the taxes, both Federal and State. Let Congress repeal the Fordney-McCumber tariff law, which is one of the greatest evils that was ever foisted upon the American farmer. This law levies a tax upon him every minute in the day by adding to the cost of everything he buys from his hat upon his head down to the shoes upon his feet. It decreases the demand for the farmer's wheat abroad, which is evinced by the falling off in our exports for the years 1922 and 1923 as against 1921, as follows: Wheat: Exports, 1921, 293,267,637 bushels; 1922, 208,321,091 bushels; 1923, 154,950,971 bushels; a difference of 138,316,666 bushels, or nearly one-half. Wheat flour: Exports in 1921 were 16,179,956 barrels; in 1922, 15,796,819 barrels; and in 1923, 14,882,714 barrels; a difference of 1,297,242 barrels. Wheat, including flour: Exports in 1921 were 366,077,439 bushels; 1922, 279,408,777 bushels; 1923, 221,923,184 bushels; a difference of 144,154,255 bushels.

It increases the cost of production. This is shown by the following table, which gives the cost of farm machinery for the year 1923 as far in excess of that for the year 1914, when the farmer's wheat was sold at practically the same price.

STATEMENTS SHOWING THE COST OF PRODUCING AND DELIVERING TO MARKET FOR THE DIFFERENT YEARS MENTIONED A BUSHEL OF WHEAT IN SOUTHERN INDIANA ON LAND OF A HIGH AVERAGE PRODUCING QUALITY

These statements are based upon the cash value of the land for the year mentioned, taking 15 acres of land with an average yield of 18 bushels per acre as a basis.

For the crop harvested in 1914 on land valued at $100 per acre; assessed at $66 per acre

Interest at 6 per cent, on $1,500	$90.00
Taxes at $2, on $990	19.80
Plowing at $1.25 per acre	18.75
Harrowing and rolling four times	9.00
Drilling at 26⅔ cents per acre	4.00
Cutting at 50 cents per acre	7.50
Twine, 2 pounds per acre at 10 cents	3.00
Putting in shock—two men, one day each	4.00
1¼ bushels of seed per acre at $1.10 per bushel	20.625
Total cost of production	176.675
Threshing 270 bushels at 8 cents per bushel	21.60

Labor, harvesting	5.00	5 bushels at $1.

It increases the cost of living in every way, not only of farm machinery but of everything else that the farmer has to use in the manufactured line. This all goes to make up a high cost of living, which prevents the farmer from enjoying a profit for his labor on the farm.

Source: The Agricultural Crisis and Its Causes. Report of the Joint Commission on Agricultural Inquiry, Part 1.

Third: The transportation rates from the country elevator, where the farmer's wheat is marketed, to the great seaboard shipping points are too high. No matter how high or how low these rates may be the farmer pays the freight; so if these rates can be reduced, the farmer is benefited to the extent of the amount of that reduction. Reduce transportation by completing the inland waterway system which will give an outlet from the great wheat-producing States of the central, west, and northwestern part of our country directly to the Gulf and to foreign markets at a great saving to the shipper. We must have cheap transportation to meet the competition of the wheat-producing countries of the world. This competition is enormous, as shown by the following tables.

SUMMARY

Therefore, reduce taxes; lower transportation rates; repeal the Fordney-McCumber tariff law; broaden our marketing conditions; stimulate more consumption of wheat abroad.

The farmer is no fool, he is not asking for advice or special favor, he has been as patient as Job. Too much agitation keeps his mind disturbed; too many measures introduced or talked about build up hope for relief in his mind only to be followed by disappointment at failure of realization. For three years Congress has held out "farm-relief measures" to the farmer and with no results.

We are within 10 days of adjournment and still no downright whole-hearted action on the part of the administration to solve the farmer's problem. The farmer is tired of "sop" for political prestige. He knows better how to handle the problems out on the farm than the man in the office or on the street. He is tired of being told that he ought to diversify his crops, or that he ought to produce less of this or more of that—all he wants or expects from this Government, that he so nobly supports, is just an equal chance with his fellowman. He wants a square deal. I am sure if he gets that he will be able to take care of himself.

This agricultural bill for the relief of the farmer has met with only lukewarm assistance from the leaders of the majority side of this Chamber. I have a 100 per cent roll-call average and have been on the floor of the House every day during this session. Anyone sitting here in Congress can very easily see that the majority party, which is responsible for legislation, is not afire with that unbounded enthusiasm about the farmer's dire distress, even at this eleventh hour of the session, that characterized their every ingenuity and resourcefulness to come to the aid of the wealth of this country in the early days of this session.

The farmer, by his experience during the last two years or more has learned this fact, which is now deep-seated in his mind—that in so far as any kind of special legislation in his behalf is concerned, there is none to be expected.

There has been nothing, so far, of a practical nature submitted to Congress for the relief of the farmer, nor is there likely to be until the political complexion of the two branches change, for the measures that are necessary to bring such relief to the farmer are in themselves political.

It is of great importance to the welfare of the Nation that the farmer gets some real relief from the situation that is not only facing him but is now upon his back like a ferocious wild animal crushing the very life out of him.

I appeal to the Members of this House to place the farmer upon an equal basis with the rest of the business world. Legislate for him as you do for other lines of business, so he, too, may enjoy some of the blessings of prosperity. If you will do this you will soon find this Nation happy and prosperous.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, the question is asked, Why not include fruit, alfalfa, and truck crops in this bill? The McNary-Haugen bill in its direct application is limited to major farm products that dominate farm prices that enter largely into foreign trade and the prices of which are fixed in foreign markets. But the very evident fact should not be overlooked that when you give a fair price to two and a quarter million wheat farmers and millions of corn, hog, and cattle growers you increase the purchasing power of many millions of people who become better customers for other farm commodities.

Again, the application of this bill can not be localized. In many States the farmer can with about equal financial returns devote his acreage to producing the things named in this bill or he can turn his attention to dairying, fruit growing, trucking, and so forth. Evidently a fair price for corn, livestock, and wheat will prevent undue encroachment upon other specialized farming.

My friends, let us not forget that our interests are all interrelated. For many years I worked on a diversified farm—grew corn and wheat, oats and hay, milked the cows, suckled the calves, fed the hogs, and gathered the eggs. Later I carved a cotton plantation out of the jungles of Mississippi where cane and timber stood thicker than the hair on my head and mosquitoes were more numerous than the locusts of Egypt; later I grew barley and spuds, and developed from raw land an irrigated ranch on which we grew apples and berries and alfalfa; on another ranch we grew nothing but wheat. Naturally I am for the farmer. However, the observation I wish to make is this—that when the big branches of agriculture are prosperous their prices are generally reflected to other farm crops and we all prosper. Forty million people connected directly with agriculture in the United States form the best market in the world for our factories and wholesalers and retailers.

No class, no industry can long prosper alone. Labor and capital, farmer and manufacturer, city and country are each dependent upon the other; in justice we should and economically we shall move up and down together.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, anyone who has given thoughtful consideration to the economic system under which the farmers of the country are laboring must realize that the farmer is greatly handicapped under present conditions and is entitled to any relief and encouragement that can be afforded by Congress. I believe that the bill under consideration will bring relief and hope to the farmer, where dismay and discouragement now prevail.

Having been born and reared on a farm, familiar with the implements of tillage, conversant with the conditions that enter into the life of the great army of producers on the soil and fortified by a degree of practical knowledge gained by experience and study, I feel that I am speaking advisedly.

It was declared by the late James J. Hill, the "empire builder," that we solve problems not by side-stepping but by grappling with them, by arousing public interest, forming public opinion, and engaging the thoughtful consideration of all who may be interested in the public welfare.

There must be something economically wrong, in the light of present-day conditions, when the consumer is required to pay more than he should pay in a market of abundant commodities, while producers—the farmers—are facing bankruptcy.

The prosperity of the manufacturers and lack of it in the farming section is proof that a disarrangement of our economic system exists. What logical or satisfactory answer can be made to the farmer who asks why he should pay greatly increased prices for agricultural implements, harness, shoes, and, in fact, everything that he and his family must buy, while his wheat has steadily declined from $2 a bushel to 70 cents, and during this time he must face a substantial increase of his taxes?

There must be found an adjustment of this unfair discrimination, and, in my opinion, the provisions of this bill, if honestly and faithfully carried out, will solve the problem.

This measure creates an agricultural export corporation, with an authorized capitalization of $200,000,000, which is under the management of a board of directors and an administrative director appointed by the President.

It is proposed that this corporation shall purchase and export surplus wheat and other commodities of the farm in the world markets, which will have the effect of increasing the price of those commodities in the domestic market.

A CRUCIAL TEST

Opposition to this bill has been expressed in some quarters on the ground that it is paternalistic and is a price-fixing proposition; that it will encourage the overproduction of wheat and other products in disregard of the normal demand.

Much of this opposition comes from grain speculators and exporters. They predict that the bill, if enacted into law, will interfere with their prosperity; that by artificial methods which will interfere with the law of supply and demand business will be completely demoralized.

It is argued by some well-informed authorities that exporting of surplus farm products under the provisions of the proposed law is impracticable and unprofitable. They assert that unprofitable production rights itself by driving the surplus producers out of business.

On the other hand, it is contended by those thoroughly familiar with the workable basis of the measure that it is practicable, and that once in operation would add $2,000,000,000 to the buying power of the farmers. After an analytical study of the bill, I share this latter opinion.

The corporation would fix ratio prices, make purchases and sell abroad. To guard against loss a certain percentage would be deducted from the ratio price when purchases are made. The amount returned would depend upon the sales abroad.

There is a further strengthening of the system by giving to the President the power to impose embargoes on importations of foreign commodities when foreign competition threatens to reduce domestic prices below the ratio figure.

There is strong sentiment for this bill, not only among individual farmers of the West, but from nearly all the large farm associations such as the Farm Bureau Federation, the Farmers' Union, and the grange.

The argument is advanced, and justly so, that the Government has helped the railroads and the wage earners, and it is high time that the farmers should now be helped; that the farmer should get American prices for his products when sold in America.

The farmer is surfeited with advice about the kinds of crops he should plant. He is told to diversify his products. He is urged to align himself with cooperative marketing associations. I dare say there is no one who has greater faith in the efficacy of cooperative commodity marketing than I have; but the very first step necessary to put the farmer on his feet is the enactment of this measure and the speedy application of its provisions.

DESERTING THE FARMS

According to the statistics compiled by the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation, since last year another million people left the farms for the cities. This, too, in the face of an increase in population of 1,400,000. This means that there were 2,400,000 more persons to feed and a million less producers to do the feeding.

The report states that—this condition warrants industrial and commercial leaders doing something definite to help the farmer get on his feet.

What is the significance of this desertion of the farm for the city? What is causing the farmers to leave the homes and flock to the industries where good wages enable him and his family to live in comfort? It is not so much overproduction as the need of cheaper distribution.

In 1922, 1,120,000 persons left the farm, and 7.3 per cent of the habitable farmhouses were standing vacant, while the cities are having a building boom for needed homes.

Bank failures in agricultural regions have been greater in the first seven months of this fiscal year than the combined failures for the five previous years.

As a result of this great exodus to the cities, what will be the inevitable outcome? Underproduction. Unless relief, such as this bill provides, is extended to the farming industry, we are liable to awaken to find ourselves in the throes of economic disaster.

RAILROAD FREIGHT RATES

One of the greatest handicaps under which the farmers of the West have been placed in the matter of getting their products to market is excessive freight rates.

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 107) passed the Senate on May 12, 1924, directing the Interstate Commerce Commission to adjust freight rates to relieve depression in any basic industry, particularly agriculture. It was reported to the House on the 27th instant.

On the 19th instant the Senate passed Senator GOODING'S bill (S. 2327) to amend section 4 of the interstate commerce act, which will be considered by the House at the next session.

The readjustment of freight rates, as proposed in these measures, will enable western farmers to transport their products on a fair and equitable basis, thereby rendering great aid to the farmer.

With reduced freight rates and the proper functioning of the pending bill when enacted, a foreign market will be opened up for the farmers who are producing more than our market will consume, and through the application of the provisions of this measure the foreign market can be reached.

A BASIS OF PERMANENT SUCCESS

Mr. Speaker, while I earnestly hope the enactment of this bill will afford immediate temporary relief to the farming industry, I am mindful of the fact that permanent rehabilitation of agriculture, so essential to the farmers' success, can be accomplished only through the establishment of a system of cooperative commodity marketing.

By means of the organization of a cooperative marketing system, the great spread between the farmer and the consumer must necessarily be eliminated. Not counting cotton or tobacco, the consumer paid the farmer in 1922 for his crop $22,500,000,000. Out of this stupendous sum the producer, or the agriculturist, received only $7,500,000,000. The middlemen, railroads, commission merchants, and so forth, pocketed the rest.

Turning to a serious consideration of the system of cooperative commodity marketing, we are forced to a realization that we are living in the midst of a thoroughly organized and highly trained business world. In the industrial world, labor is holding a commanding position by reason of its perfect organization. Every line of worth-while business and industry is organized. The farmer must be educated to the advantages of cooperation, accept the principle and put it in practice.

Efforts to organize from the standpoint of production have not been satisfactory, but organized from the standpoint of marketing is quite a different proposition and can be and is being made a success.

Cooperatives in California dispose of their products every year in excess of $250,000,000. Why is it not just as practicable to organize the potato growers as it has been to organize the tobacco growers?

The farmer is receiving about $1 for potatoes for which the consumer pays $3. Does it not stand to reason that the farmer should receive more of the price the consumer pays?

A few weeks ago I saw an article in the Evening Star of this city giving the results of an experiment of cooperative commodity marketing tried out by the growers and canners of tomatoes of eastern Maryland. One of the outstanding features of the experiment showed that it did not result in higher prices to the ultimate consumer. Success was due to the fact that the plan eliminated waste, allowing canned tomatoes to be sold at prevailing market prices, but with a large profit to the producers.

Both growers and canners were allowed cost of production, and profits were then divided on a basis of 60 per cent to the grower and 40 per cent to the canner. The canner paid one-half of the cost of hauling the tomatoes to the cannery. Heretofore the farmers had to bear the entire cost of hauling.

After full settlement was made the farmer found that he had received 27 cents a basket for his tomatoes. This price was 2 cents above the highest contract price and considerably more than 2 cents above the average contract price.

Judging from popular opinion it is very evident that the plan will be tried elsewhere in Maryland during the coming summer. It means higher return to the grower through elimination of waste. That is efficiency—the same thing that every manufacturer is striving for.

Mr. Speaker, the time, study, and consideration given to the system of cooperative commodity marketing as a means of solving many of the difficulties under which the farming industry is now laboring convinces me that the farmers would be benefited by its adoption.

I am so thoroughly convinced of its practicability that I shall ask the indulgence of the House while I present an analysis of the more important phases that enter into a discussion of the question.

A VERY EFFECTIVE MEASURE

Among the deluge of agricultural bills introduced in the present Congress in my opinion one of the outstanding bills is that introduced and sponsored by Representative ARTHUR B. WILLIAMS of Michigan.

Application of the provisions of this bill would result in eliminating waste in the marketing of farm products. Prices would be stabilized to the benefit of the farmer and the consumer. Distribution would be so regulated that community needs will be satisfactorily met. Gluts and famines would be avoided.

As a basis for carrying out President Coolidge's recommendations as to cooperative marketing I regard this bill as a practical application of principles involving the very best interests of the farming industry.

A practical farmer, successful manufacturer, and financier, Representative WILLIAMS of Michigan has embodied in his bill the result of years of study from every angle of the agricultural problem. If enacted, it would enable the administration to fulfill the desired permanent relief of the farmer.

Individuals and associations that have considered measures of relief so far introduced are loud in their praise of the Williams bill as a solution of the marketing problems of the farmer, and especially cooperative marketing. This method is presented in a simple yet comprehensive manner. The fundamental basis of success is the establishment of a marketing agency. This agency functions in carrying products from local cooperatives to the consuming public.

In general the farming industry is divided into production districts. The marketing agencies gather up produce from the cooperatives within these districts and ship the same to the big terminal markets, such as Chicago, New York, and other established centers. The district marketing agencies are in league with the terminal marketing associations handling agricultural products.

This enables the district cooperative agencies to keep closely in touch with prices, and eliminates the hazards that have surrounded such shipments when the farmers, ignorant of marketing conditions, ship their products without a sale in advance.

There is a provision for inspection as to grading, quality, and condition at points of origin, and, if necessary, in transit and at terminal marketing destinations.

All of these associations are under charter; that is, a certificate of approval is issued by the Federal Marketing Bureau upon condition that the associations will agree to the provisions set out in the act. Each association agrees to arbitrate rules prescribed by the Federal Marketing Board as regards disputes that may arise as to inspection or condition of products shipped. In such case the shipper is protected at terminal markets, even without a sale in advance. The buyer is likewise protected in purchasing at long distance, because he knows what he is to receive.

Commodity organization, which experience has shown is the only kind of organization that can best serve in the cooperative movement, is the basic theory of the bill.

Administration of this act is vested in a Federal Marketing Board of seven members. Five of these members are appointed by the President. The Secretary of Commerce and the Secretary of Agriculture are ex officio members.

Commodity boards of one or three members may be appointed by the Federal Marketing Bureau. These boards may be discontinued as Federal boards if the commodity is sufficiently well organized to establish and maintain its own board.

Members constituting the Federal Marketing Board shall be men known to be interested and friendly to the cooperative marketing idea. In cases of vacancies nominations are to be submitted to the President by cooperative marketing associations as to three of the members and by the terminal marketing associations as to the other two members. In this way the board will be made up of men familiar with the problems involved within the scope of the act.

There are many other splendid features of the Williams bill having for their object the stimulation, encouragement, and development of these various organizations.

An appropriation of $7,500,000 is authorized under the act for each of the two following years, and any unexpended balance may be used by the Federal Marketing Board as a revolving fund from which to make loans payable within a limited period to cooperative marketing and clearing house associations for the purpose of extending their membership.

It is well understood that great waste is now going on due to oversupply in some markets and undersupply in other markets. Such conditions result in deterioration of products and price fluctuations leading to speculation. This must be paid for either by the consumer or the farmer.

The Williams bill would provide for orderly distribution and marketing of farm products and bring the farmer into intimate contact with marketing problems. This will enable the farmer to gain greater knowledge bearing upon diversification and adaptation of products to demand. The handling of products will be reduced to a minimum. Cross hauls, where products are looking for a market, will be eliminated. The great spread between the producer and the consumer will be greatly curtailed.

If for any reason it should be determined that the McNary-Haugen bill can not reach enactment, I am strongly in favor of substituting the Williams-Capper bill as the most feasible solution of the farmer problem. I believe, too, that it would not be necessary to set up any new Federal agency. This could be handled very efficiently by the Department of Agriculture in cooperation with the Department of Commerce.

The Williams-Capper bill is a sound, practical measure, designed to meet conditions as they now exist, have been existing, and are likely to continue to exist if steps are not taken to adopt remedial provisions.

COOPERATIVE MARKETING IN DENMARK

Cooperative marketing is not a new and untried innovation. Not only in this country but in other countries of the world ample proof of its success is a matter of record.

In this connection I wish to quote briefly from "Cooperative marketing in Denmark," by Mr. Chris L. Christensen, investigator, Division of Cooperative Marketing, United States Department of Agriculture:

> In less than 50 years Denmark has changed from a nation of peasant agriculture to the most highly organized agricultural nation in the world. More than 92 per cent of the farmers in Denmark own the land they cultivate.
>
> On his farm, ranging from 5 to 60 acres in size, organized on an efficient business basis for the production and marketing of butter, bacon, and eggs, the Danish farmer is not only self-sustaining but is financially independent. Through cooperative marketing he places on the market a highly standardized product that finds ready demand. His marketing organization costs have been cut to a minimum, so that he receives the largest possible share of the consumer's dollar.
> More than 86 per cent of the 205,000 Danish farmers are members of local cooperative marketing organizations which assemble and process the farmers' products.

The major portion of Denmark's surplus production of butter, bacon, and eggs is consumed by the English market. The consumer knows that any product with the Danish stamp is of high quality, and that a regular supply may be depended upon.

The present position of Denmark in the agricultural world is remarkable, by reason of the apparently short time in which it has been attained. With similar cooperative marketing methods this country is capable of attaining the same degree of success.

There was a time when the disorganized efforts of individual Danish farmers to meet the English consumer's demand for a high quality of butter resulted in the shipping of quantities of mediocre products which affected the prices of the higher grades. In other words, there was not a sufficient quantity of uniform standardized grade to make proper merchandizing possible.

After several years the farmers realized that concerted action to meet the demand was needed. An organized effort to produce and market a uniform product regularly throughout the year met with large success, and by 1890 there were 600 cooperative creameries. The secret of the project was that every effort was devoted toward furnishing the consumer with the high grade of product that he demanded, and for which he was willing to pay high price. There are now 1,335 cooperative creamery associations in Denmark.

Compare 250 cooperative organizations of various kinds in 1885 with more than 5,000 at the present time, and we have food for thought in the farming industry of Denmark. In my opinion, only through such methodical, businesslike cooperative marketing organization will the greatest amount of benefit result to the agricultural interests of the United States.

We are all familiar with the high standard of the Danish bacon. Before they set up a cooperative organization the Danes were forced to market their pigs in Hamburg, Germany, where they were slaughtered and the bacon shipped to England. To shorten the market lane and to receive more of the prices paid by the consumers the hog raisers decided to assemble their products locally, combine the process of killing the pigs and curing the bacon in their own cooperatively owned plants, sending the finished product direct to the English market.

The first cooperative bacon factory was organized in 1887. To-day there are 46 such factories distributed throughout Denmark.

Similar marketing problems confronted the egg producers. A standard quality product was demanded in the foreign markets. There are now 550 egg-collecting associations federated into one central selling agency, which annually markets 300,000 cases of eggs on the basis of 360 eggs to the case.

There are agricultural societies organized to promote the technical and educational side of agriculture and which do not engage in marketing. Fully 90 per cent of the Danish farmers have membership in these societies, which have been an important influence in the production of standardized products.

COOPERATIVE MARKETING AS A BUSINESS PROPOSITION

For years cooperative marketing has engaged the attention and study of men deeply interested in the subject. They are familiar with it as a business organization; they understand it from an economic point of view; they know its scope and limitations.

If a business enterprise formed and organized by groups or associations of farmers for the purpose of marketing their commodities can attain a higher degree of success than could be obtained by individuals working independently, it is inevitable that the system of organization will ultimately be adopted. All that is needed is leadership in the movement. These leaders, however, must be men versed in every detail of cooperative marketing.

In this connection I am taking the liberty of quoting from an address delivered at Cornell University February 12 of this year by Mr. Lloyd S. Tenny, one of the foremost authorities in this country on the all-absorbing subject of cooperative commodity marketing. In part he says:

> In the United States Department of Agriculture we have collected information regarding 9,000 active cooperative organizations. These organizations did approximately $1,700,000,000 worth of business for the farmers in 1923. As far as form of organization is concerned, there is no single fundamental plan that runs through these 9,000 organizations.
> Too much emphasis has been placed on forms of organization. The impression that the building of a cooperative machine is the primary essential is too widespread. The first essential is getting farm people ready to work together. Then comes the organization, and then the more important problems of guiding and directing this machine in such a way that you will reach the goal you are seeking.
> The first cooperative associations developed around local shipping points. This was a logical starting point. Ten or fifty people with common problems cooperating—working together—to meet these problems. Cooperation could not begin between a dozen men here and a dozen somewhere else, or between a thousand men scattered over a large territory. Cooperation comes from contact. It develops from problems that you can not solve as individuals, but may hope to solve collectively.

It is further stated by Mr. Tenny that cooperative commodity marketing is a recent development in cooperation. It represents in many respects an ideal development.

Through centralization of authority certain things can be accomplished that are fundamental to ultimate success in marketing. For example, a group of farmers in the dairy business combine to build and operate a factory for the manufacture of butter. Collectively they are able to standardize their product, and do many other things that they could not do individually.

These farmers are able to secure better prices for butter, because their product is standardized, and because it can be sold in large uniform blocks. They have improved conditions, but this can not generally affect the market for that commodity.

A small group can not control the distribution of the commodity, and is unable to attain the commanding position in the market that the farmer should have. Only when industry is organized and a large volume of business secured and controlled will the farmers be able to secure the full benefit of collective activity.

The commodity marketing organization, therefore, represents from a business standpoint the highest development of cooperation and is in the main the kind of organization best adapted to meet the larger problems of marketing.

In his very able address Mr. Tenny makes plain so many important points along the line of cooperative commodity marketing that I should like to incorporate, if space would permit, many of his splendid practical observations.

He has such an excellent grasp of the subject as to impress me with the fact that it is not essential to success to set up a separate, expensive agency to handle work that is now being so efficiently performed by the Division of Agricultural Cooperation of the Department of Agriculture.

By enlarging the scope of this important division and making more liberal appropriations of money for the carrying on of its vast and highly useful activities, a great and lasting benefit to the farming industry would be the inevitable result.

THE LARGEST INDUSTRY IN AMERICA

Agriculture is the biggest industry in this country. The development of big commodity organizations, representing large farm interests, is proper and encouraging. When the farmers can say that they are members of an organization that has banking facilities, that has agents all over the world, a new life comes into agriculture. It takes on a new dignity and importance.

At a recent conference in New York 16 of the largest bankers in the city were present. They were there to discuss marketing credit. They said their resources were at the disposal of farmers' cooperative organizations that could furnish as collateral the receipts of warehouses licensed under the Federal warehouse act. The large cooperative commodity marketing organizations have given cooperative marketing standing in the business world. This is an important step forward.

Large commodity marketing organizations are able to secure the economies that come from large-scale organization and operation. Many of these larger cooperative organizations, it is true, have not demonstrated their ability to secure the saving they might have. When these organizations are efficiently directed and managed they will get the advantages and savings of large-scale operation.

It is further stated by Mr. Tenny, and we who are familiar with the subject of marketing will subscribe to his premises, that one of the most important problems in marketing a commodity is distribution. Standardization is even more important, because a product can not be distributed and sold successfully if it is not standardized.

The consumers are educated by manufacturers of every product, from automobiles to breakfast foods, to buy by brand. These brands have been standardized; each represents a product of a certain quality. Consumers have come to depend on these standardized products, and it would be impossible to get them to experiment with miscellaneous products of uncertain quality. They are developing the same attitude toward farm products, and the larger cooperatives are taking steps to cater to this demand.

As a result we have oranges, raisins, butter, eggs, and so forth, represented by brands, products that have been brought to a high degree of standardization. The large cooperative marketing associations can standardize farm products not only by communities but on a larger scale by commodities. The farmer, the dealer, and the consumer are all benefited.

Another advantage of a big organization is that it is possible to secure good business management and good sales management. Such things are specialties. It takes different types of men to manufacture and to sell. Not many farmers are good salesmen. This is not a criticism of the farmer, because salesmanship represents specialized knowledge.

Big organizations, if properly conducted and managed, can get good salesmen. They can employ men who are trained to interpret crop and marketing information, who can look outside the community and determine what effect the activities of other farmers in the United States and in foreign countries may have on marketing conditions.

These large organizations can establish brands for farm products. These brands have a definite value. The values of our farms are not determined entirely by the number of dairy cows or fruit trees on them. There are other things that go to make value. For instance, brands and trade-marks that represent the products produced. A large cooperative organization makes it possible to establish brands and to make these brands assets of the farmer.

Large cooperative marketing organizations can produce economic advantages through the distribution of the product in respect to time and place. Take eggs for example. Consumption goes on regularly throughout the year; not so production. Eggs are produced in the largest quantity during certain months and consumed in fairly uniform quantities every month of the year.

How can the farmer expect to get the full market value for eggs when he sells them at the time they are produced without regard to supply or demand? An organization that distributes the product uniformly throughout the year is able to overcome, to the extent that its shipments affect the total supply, the alternating periods of oversupply and shortage which the individual farmer can not influence.

This is distribution with respect to time. Distribution with respect to place means putting the products where people are, with all the complex factors of transportation, financing, and wholesale and retail distribution that enter into it. The advantages a large organization enjoys in dealing with the agencies that transport and handle farm products are apparent.

In big cooperative marketing associations there is an overemphasis of the question of control and price. Control, if properly developed as to time and place, is splendid.

But there is always danger in beginning these new movements for the idea to get abroad that it is possible to control price; that during this control in some mysterious way the farmers will obtain larger returns for their commodities. Control of the product from an economic standpoint must be classed among the outstanding advantages of commodity cooperative marketing.

There is danger, however, of spreading broadcast the impression that arbitrary price fixing is feasible. Prices are always relative and not absolute. If the producers feel that through large organizations these prices may be made absolute without regard to the law of supply and demand; if they go beyond the price control that may be obtained through orderly distribution, irreparable damage will be done to the cause of cooperative marketing.

Those of us who have studied the subject know, as Mr. Tenny well exresses it, that—> there are great possibilities in cooperative marketing. It must be directed intelligently, however, and strong leaders are needed. We can raise our whole industry, our standard of living, our vision and outlook on life by doing our part to establish and maintain our cooperative marketing organizations.

PROGRESS OF THE COOPERATIVE MOVEMENT

A casual review of statistics collected and disseminated by the Division of Agricultural Cooperation, United States Department of Agriculture, should convince those skeptical of the success of cooperative marketing that since 1918 progress in this great field of human endeavor has been phenomenal.

On page 124 of Agricultural Cooperation of April 7, 1924, the number of selling and buying associations reported as active in 1924 is 10,160. This is an increase of nearly 2,000 organizations in less than three years.

Progress has been so rapid that the number of cooperators, the number of commodities handled, and the volume of business done are now enormous. Just how much can not be definitely determined, even after careful study, because of the size and rapid expansion of the movement.

Farmers are turning to cooperation as a solution of their marketing problems. The great amount of energy now being expended in cooperative efforts presages a further expansion of the amount of business done by cooperative organizations. The high type of men in leadership in the various phases of agricultural cooperation is an absolute guaranty of the permanent success of the cooperative movement.

In an address delivered February 8, 1924, before the National Council of Farmers' Cooperative Marketing Associations in this city, Secretary of Agriculture H. C. Wallace gave such pertinent facts relating to cooperative marketing that I earnestly commend his observations to those seeking enlightenment on this very absorbing subject.

Among other things Secretary Wallace says:

> There are limits beyond which the department can not properly pass in the field of organization of cooperative associations. It can not take part in the work of organization of business activities, cooperative or otherwise. We can properly seek out and make available sound principles upon which successful cooperation depends. We can point out conditions which make for success and those which make for failure. We can present historical facts which ought to help those who are interested in the organization and conduct of cooperative enterprises to profit from the experience of similar efforts in the past, both in this country and abroad.

Secretary Wallace states that the department believes in the cooperative marketing of farm products, desires to be helpful to the largest possible degree in giving information as to the sound organization of cooperatives, and proposes to be of the largest possible service to them when organized.

Again the able Secretary of Agriculture says:

> Success in cooperation, as in everything else, depends mainly upon the skill, energy, and efficiency of the management. Therefore, we think that one of the most important services we can render is to help establish and maintain operation.
>
> Among the services we are rendering to cooperatives of various kinds are—
>
> Estimates, forecasts of crop and livestock production, an absolutely essential service to the business administration of cooperative enterprise.
> Prompt publication of volume of crops harvested, with comparisons with different years.
>
> A comprehensive marketing news service, reporting shipments, receipts, prices, condition of commodities, etc., distributed by telegraph, by leased wire, by radio, by mail, and through press releases.
> The establishment of well-defined and generally accepted standards for farm products. The standards already established are now being used for many of the most important fruits and vegetables.

The Secretary refers to the licensing of public warehousemen under the United States warehouse act, administered by the department, as being of great assistance to cooperative marketing associations, not only in securing improved credit facilities but in contributing toward more orderly marketing.

Mr. Speaker, the bill under consideration is designed to relieve a condition in the farming industry that unfortunately for several years has been exceedingly distressing.

There is no question before the Congress of greater importance to the prosperity and welfare of the country than that of farm relief legislation. It is highly essential to place the farmer on his feet and get him going. In order to enable him to get the start he needs all the aid the Government can give along sound and practical lines, and now is the accepted time to render that assistance.

Apples of the Delicious variety grown in my orchard in Idaho last fall would not command more than a cent apiece, boxed ready for shipment. On the menu in a café in Chicago, where I ate breakfast on my way to Washington, the price of a baked apple was 35 cents. And this unwarranted spread in price between producer and consumer prevails in all lines of commodities, except, perhaps, in the case of producers who are members of cooperative marketing associations.

I have gone somewhat into detail on the great advantages to be derived from a system of cooperative commodity marketing in the hope that after the present emergency has been met there will be an impetus to follow out this line of endeavor as a means of protecting the products of the farm against sudden slumps and price fluctuations. The only thing needed to make farming one of the most profitable industries of the country is a well-organized system of marketing.

Mr. Speaker, we of the West have been patient and forbearing. We have looked on with a complacency that at times belied our feeling at the assistance given other industries since the signing of the armistice.

We have felt that the depression in the great agricultural industry would appeal to all fair-minded men that some measure of speedy relief should be our due. So far we have waited in vain. The propitious moment has arrived when temporary relief afforded by this measure will give to the membership of this great body an opportunity to demonstrate that the farming industry of America is no longer to be ignored.

I trust that by your votes, emphatically expressed in support of this bill, a new era of prosperity, happiness, and contentment will be vouchsafed to that industry that is the sustaining force of our physical life—our very existence.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 41 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, May 21, 1924, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. BEERS: Committee on the District of Columbia. S. 703. An act making an adjustment of certain accounts between the United States and the District of Columbia; without amendment (Rept. No. 790). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. DENISON: Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. H. R. 7757. A bill for the abandonment of a portion of the present channel of the south branch of the Chicago River; with an amendment (Rept. No. 791). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. LINEBERGER: Committee on Rivers and Harbors. S. 1942. An act to protect navigation from obstruction and injury by preventing the discharge of oil into the coastal navigable waters of the United States; with an amendment (Rept. No. 794). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. McSWAIN: Committee on Military Affairs. S. 3211. An act authorizing the sale of Gasparilla Island Military Reservation; without amendment (Rept. No. 795). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota: Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. S. 2704. An act to amend paragraph (3), section 16, of the interstate commerce act; without amendment (Rept. No. 796). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. WURZBACH: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 3556. A bill for the relief of Herman R. Woltman; with an amendment (Rept. No. 792). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. WURZBACH: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 8192. A bill for the relief of Frank Rector; without amendment (Rept. No. 793). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. WURZBACH: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 5257. A bill for the relief of Alonzo C. Shekell; without amendment (Rept. No. 797). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. WURZBACH: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 6775. A bill for the relief of Francis Forbes; without amendment (Rept. No. 798). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7631) for the relief of Charles T. Clayton and others; Committee on Claims discharged, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

A bill (H. R. 9088) granting an increase of pension to Ruth M. E. Standage; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 9274) granting a pension to Henry F. C. Toedt; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged; and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. KETCHAM: A bill (H. R. 9342) for the purchase of a site for public building at Sturgis, Mich.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. KNUTSON: A bill (H. R. 9343) authorizing the adjudication of claims of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. McFADDEN: A bill (H. R. 9344) to amend section 8 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, as amended; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. WILSON of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 9345) granting the consent of Congress for the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River between Vanderburgh County, Ind., and Henderson County, Ky.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. WOLFF: A bill (H. R. 9346) to permit a rural letter carrier to engage in any business or other occupation; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. ELLIOTT: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 267) to amend section 2 of an act to revise and equalize rates of pension to certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil War and the war with Mexico, to certain widows, including widows of the War of 1812, former widows, dependent parents, and children of such soldiers, sailors, and marines, and to certain Army nurses, and granting pensions and increase of pensions in cases approved May 1, 1920; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. REED of New York: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 268) for the participation of the United States in an international exposition to be held at Seville, Spain, in 1927; to the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions.

By Mr. MEAD: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of New York, requesting that Congress make liberal appropriations for the carrying out of the spirit of the national defense act; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ACKERMAN: A bill (H. R. 9347) for the relief of the United States Portable Building Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. COLE of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 9348) granting a pension to Joe S. Castor; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ELLIOTT: A bill (H. R. 9349) granting an increase of pension to Martha Shoemaker; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GLATFELTER: A bill (H. R. 9350) granting an increase of pension to Margaret A. Foose; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JACOBSTEIN: A bill (H. R. 9351) granting an increase of pension to Adeline Ringelstein; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9352) granting a pension to Sarah Morley Gillette; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9353) for the relief of the Rochester Merchandise Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McREYNOLDS: A bill (H. R. 9354) for the relief of William P. Quarles, known as Qualls; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9355) granting an increase of pension to George W. Pinion; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MacGREGOR: A bill (H. R. 9356) granting an increase of pension to Mary Bershig; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RANKIN: A bill (H. R. 9357) for the relief of the estate of R. C. Bumpass, deceased; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 9358) granting a pension to Adah I. Tomlinson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SNELL: A bill (H. R. 9359) granting insurance to Lydia C. Spry; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

By Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 9360) granting an increase of pension to Mary Collins; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

2817. By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of employees of the Maintenance of Equipment Department, Pennsylvania Railroad system, southwestern region, protesting against the Barkley bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

2818. By Mr. ARNOLD: Petition of the executive committee of the Marion County (Ill.) Farm Bureau, in favor of the McNary-Haugen bill; to the Committee on Agriculture.

2819. Also, petition of the Richland County Farm Bureau, Ill., favoring the passage of the McNary-Haugen bill; to the Committee on Agriculture.

2820. Also, petition of the Crawford County Farm Bureau of Illinois, indorsing the McNary-Haugen bill; to the Committee on Agriculture.

2821. Also, petition of the executive committee of the Clinton County Farm Bureau, Ill., favoring the passage of the McNary-Haugen bill; to the Committee on Agriculture.

2822. By Mr. CRAMTON: Petition of the Romeo Monday Club, protesting against the drainage of the Winneshiek bottom lands along the upper Mississippi; to the Committee on Agriculture.

2823. By Mr. GARBER: Petition of Chamber of Commerce, Fairview, Okla., urging that sufficient appropriations will be made by Congress to carry out the provisions of the national defense act of 1920; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

2824. By Mr. KIESS: Petition of citizens of Tioga, Pa., opposing any bill proposing a modification of the existing prohibition law; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

2825. By Mr. KINDRED: Petition of board of aldermen, city of New York, N. Y., indorsing congressional bill for increase in salaries of postal employees; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

2826. By Mr. KVALE: Petition of S. R. Simonson and 222 other residents of Benson, Swift County, Minn., urging Congress to protect eggs as a source of farm income by an adequate tariff; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

2827. By Mr. MOORE of Illinois: Petition of the La Grange Chapter of the Izaak Walton League of America, indorsing bill for the conservation of the upper Mississippi known as the game refuge bill; to the Committee on Agriculture.

2828. By Mr. MORROW: Petition of Dona Ana County Federation of Women's Clubs, Mrs. Thomas Branigan, president, Las Cruces, N. Mex., favoring results obtained by the special commission on narcotics, recommending that conference be held in England; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

2829. By Mr. RAKER: Petition of W. D. Allen Manufacturing Co., Chicago, Ill., opposing passage of Howell-Barkley bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

2830. Also, petition of L. D. Pike, commander Glendale Camp, No. 67, United States War Veterans, indorsing passage of Bursum pension bill over President's veto; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

2831. Also, five letters from residents of Tacoma, Wash., in re bill to change the name of Mount Rainier to Mount Tacoma; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

2832. Also, petitions of A. Goodman, secretary Golden Gate Brass Manufacturing Co., Los Angeles, Calif., and Hans Barkan, M. D., San Francisco, Calif., indorsing San Carlos Dam bill (S. 966); and Wm. A. Brunnette, president White Earth Reservation, Mahnomen, Minn., opposing passage of bill giving $50 per capita payment to the Red Lake Indians only; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

2833. Also, petition of Robert D. McCrimmon, Tacoma, Wash., and Fred L. Arndt, Groveland, Calif., in re bill to change name of Mount Rainier to Mount Tacoma; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

2834. Also, 35 letters and telegrams in regard to the Howell-Barkley bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, May 21, 1924

(Legislative day of Tuesday, May 20, 1924)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, it has been suggested to me that it might be well to have a quorum.

Mr. EDGE. Will the Senator withhold that just a moment?

Mr. HOWELL. Certainly.

Mr. EDGE. The pending question is the motion made by myself that Senate bill 1898 shall be made the unfinished business. If the Senator will yield for the purpose, I shall appreciate it very much, that the motion may be put so the matter can be settled; and I shall then yield to the Senator from Nebraska, of course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield for that purpose?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think we had better have a quorum. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The principal clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Fernald	Ladd	Shields
Ashurst	Ferris	Lenroot	Shipstead
Ball	Fletcher	Lodge	Shortridge
Bayard	Frazier	McKinley	Simmons
Borah	George	McLean	Smith
Brandegee	Gerry	McNary	Smoot
Broussard	Glass	Mayfield	Spencer
Bruce	Gooding	Moses	Stanfield
Bursum	Hale	Neely	Stephens
Cameron	Harreld	Norbeck	Sterling
Capper	Harris	Norris	Swanson
Caraway	Harrison	Oddie	Trammell
Colt	Heflin	Overman	Underwood
Copeland	Howell	Pepper	Wadsworth
Cummins	Johnson, Calif.	Pittman	Walsh, Mass.
Curtis	Johnson, Minn.	Ralston	Walsh, Mont.
Dale	Jones, N. Mex.	Ransdell	Warren
Dial	Kendrick	Reed, Pa.
Edge	Keyes	Robinson
Edwards	King	Sheppard

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART], the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are attending a meeting of a special investigating committee of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-seven Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6820) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes; that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 30, 31, 44, 45, 55, and 59 to the aforesaid bill; and that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 8, 25, 28, 40, 43, 48, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, and 60, and concurred therein severally with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 8905) to authorize the settlement of the indebtedness of the Kingdom of Hungary to the United States of America, and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

POSTMASTERS AND POSTAL EMPLOYEES

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion made by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] that the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1898.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I have the floor, have I not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But the Senator from Nebraska yielded to the Senator from New Jersey to allow the Chair to put the motion that has just been stated by the Chair.

Mr. HOWELL. Very well; let the motion be put.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Jersey yield to enable me to introduce a bill?

Mr. EDGE. I hardly feel, under the arrangement entered into with the Senator from Nebraska, that I really have a right to yield. It is through his courtesy that I have been able to ask for a vote on my motion, which will only take a moment. Then I am quite sure the Senator from Nebraska will yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Jersey.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1898) to readjust the compensation of postmasters and reclassify and readjust the salaries and compensation of employees in the Postal Service, which had been reported from the Committee on Post Office and Post Roads with an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

THE FARMERS' PROMLEMS—ADDRESS BY SENATOR LADD

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered on the 3d instant by my colleague, the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD], on "The Farmers' Problems," before the Political Study Club, in the city of Washington.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the address will be printed accordingly.

The address is as follows:

Ladies of the Political Study Club: Any complete understanding of the farmers' problems or of the farmers' place in modern society involves a far more comprehensive study than is possible in the hour at our disposal. Only a few of the most important angles of the subject can be more than briefly indicated.

Organized society originated in the more or less permanent settlement of nomadic pastoral families at places where soil and climate, with volunteer and rudely cultivated crops, offered abundant pasture for cattle and ample food for man. Civilization began when the solitary human animal abandoned the venatic or hunting stage for the nomadic, pastoral stage. Families and tribes were nomadic, wandering groups, which moved with the seasons and according to the need and supply of pasturage for flocks and herds, which furnished their food and clothing.

It was a great step in advance when these wandering people became sedentary—forming permanent settlements and increasing the supply and variety of food even by a primitive cultivation of the soil.

As population increased and flocks and herds enlarged these settlements became the objects of plunder by predatory and unsettled tribes. This made every member of the settled tribes a warrior, subject to call at any moment for the defense of his tribe and its property.

At this stage of social development came the first great division of labor. Special aptitudes indicated those individuals best qualified to be the fighting members. These, the warriors of the tribe, or groups of tribes, called clans, enjoyed certain privileges and special advantages. They were largely exempt from other than warrior services; their families were supported by the labor of the group; their privileges became hereditary. From among them chiefs, kings, and aristocracy developed. With further increase in populations a fiercer competition for locations led to larger apportionment of tribal wealth to the support of its warrior establishment and the fortification of towns and cities.

Increasing demands for greater variety of goods led to further division of labor, still further enlarging the burden of social support on the food producing farmer; that is, leaving the farmer a still smaller share of the products of his labor, but with no increase of his facilities, while adding to his labors.

As we follow the course of agriculture down to Homeric and Mosaic times we find firmly established a system of agricultural production in which, in the most highly civilized countries—Egypt, Mesopotamia, Greece, and India—the land belonged to an aristocracy of overlords, while farm labor was performed by slaves. A rigid caste system prevailed—an arrogant priesthood shared with monarch and military overlord all the wealth produced by agriculture except a bare subsistence.

ROME'S RISE AND FALL

About the middle of the fifth century B. C. the Romans occupied a territory about 20 miles square. There were not more than 150,000 people who lived on this land. Most of the families had small holdings, where father and sons lived and worked together, growing wheat, for the most part, with a patch of vines or olive trees. Most of their tools and clothing were made at home. Even the patricians were peasants, farming and working with pick and plow. These families were free. They owned their land, and the noblest families were farmers. Roman history relates the account of Cincinnatus and the plow. The proprietor worked his own fields and tended his land and stock as faithfully as any of his less wealthy neighbors.

Yet with the growth of Roman power and the extension of Roman dominion the status of the free farmer was changed from freedom to serfdom.

Roman wars were essentially slave-hunting expeditions, with land grants to a corrupt senatorial oligarchy and slaves selling at from $3 to $50 a head. The free farmer soon vanished. He became a slave himself with his family, or drifted into the city to become submerged in the cloaca gentium that was Rome. From the second century A. D. to the beginning of the twelfth there was a transformation of social order in Europe that is without parallel in history. The entire framework of society broke down. Population dwindled, commerce, arts, wealth, and freedom vanished. The people were reduced by poverty and misery to the most degraded conditions of slavery and serfdom. Regardless of various explanations that have been given of this phenomenon, it marks the lowest ebb in the tides of social progress. In all the recessions from social well-being to social degradation it is the farmer who first feels the shock of approaching depression, and he is the last to feel impulse of a revival of activity and progress.

FROM CHARLEMAGNE TO NAPOLEON

The status of the farmer, the food producer of the state, was fixed for centuries by the feudalism established by Charlemagne in the eighth century. Feudalism lasted in Continental Europe until destroyed by the armies of Napoleon. Chattel slavery existed in France at the time of the revolution, and the church was the last slave owner to emancipate its slaves.

History repeats itself. Agricultural development, as related to the industry as a whole and as to individual farmers in America, is following the course outlined from the beginning in other lands and other times. First a freeman, a citizen, economically independent; the pioneer, the adventurer who enters upon and tames the outlying lands, subdues the continent, and breeds the men who fight the battles of his country and direct its early policies. By whatever means the result is brought about, under any form of government the same tendencies are found in operation to reduce the farmer to an inferior economic and social position. The Sudra in India is the Helot in Greece, the peon in Spanish America, the serf in Russia, the tenant farmer in our own country. Even our small capitalistic farmer feels the effect of forces operating in the social body to fulfill the predictions of our early statesmen.

On August 7, 1787, Mr. Madison, speaking to the suffrage provision of the proposed Constitution, in the Constitutional Convention, said:

> "In future times a great majority of the people will not only be without land but any other sort of property"—

And he goes on to say what may be the result—

> "These will either combine under the influence of their common situation—in which case the rights of property and the public liberty will not be secure in their hands—or what is more probable, they will become the tools of opulence and ambition, in which case there will be an equal danger on another side."

On the same day Gouverneur Morris said:

> "The time is not distant when the country will abound with mechanics and manufacturers who will receive their bread from their employers. * * * Nine-tenths of the people are at present freeholders."

The time predicted by Madison and Morris has come, much sooner, probably, than was believed possible by these far-sighted statesmen; the time predicted by Macaulay when the free land of America has been exhausted or absorbed and the real test of democracy in America be applied. As always, the acceptance of the régime of civil society by the farmer and laborer is not the result of any free choice on his part, but the effect of his condition of practical peonage, brought about by the absorption of opportunity—i. e., free land—which forces him to accept the economic and political domination of the proprietor class. The first, then the primary, factor in the farmers' problem is the question of access to land. Even under existing conditions when the farmer buys land he only buys a job, pays for the opportunity to work, pays for the right to produce wealth for other people to use. Before, however, enlarging upon this feature, I want to call attention to the contributions made by American farmers to the American people in other ways than by following his avocation.

FREEDOM AND THE FARMER

Emerson has recorded in imperishable verse how "the embattled farmers stood by the rude arch that spanned the flood, to fire the shot heard round the world." In the rush and clamor of a materialistic age we lose sight of the moral consistency of the farmers who gave life and being to the Republic, for without them the Republic could not have been. The warrior service of the farmer of those far-off colonial days must not be forgotten when we reckon up his account. Again, fourscore years later, it was the American farmer, then, as now, the largest single group in industry, who led the agitation to abolish chattel slavery in America. Think for a moment of the position of free men engaged in agriculture with half the country operating farms by slave labor! Neither capital nor labor devoted to agriculture could possibly compete with a system operated by unpaid labor. Either unpaid labor must be raised to the economic level of paid labor or paid free labor must sink to the level of unpaid slave labor.

Again the issue came at a time before there were continental railways. The only economic outlet for the products of agriculture from the vast areas of the Northwest was by way of the great rivers, the Ohio, Mississippi, and the Missouri. All these streams found their way to the ocean highways of the world through the heart of slave labor territory, and would thereby be subject to the exactions and impositions of a foreign state. It was Lincoln's happy phrase, "the Mississippi flows unvexed to the sea." It was no purely philanthropic spirit that led the farmers of the Nation to take up the sword when all compromise had failed to free themselves from the economic tyranny of a slave oligarchy; to free themselves they were obliged to make others free as well. And this has always been the spirit of the farmer at every stage of his development; from the time when the first mechanic murdered the first farmer in the Garden of Eden.

LAND, OPPORTUNITY, FOOD

Reverting to the first factor of the farmers' problems—access to land—we realize that land is opportunity. All wealth is the product of labor as applied to opportunity. If opportunity is free, the cost of wealth to the consumer is the cost of the farmer's labor only—the consumer pays only the wages of the farmer. If, however, the farmer must pay for the privilege of producing wealth, the cost of his opportunity must be added to the price the consumer pays for the farmer's products. That is one reason, although not the only one, for the high cost of living. A glance at the records will show the steady advance in the market price of lands during our life as a Nation, namely, the farmer's opportunity.

Another factor of the farmer's problem lies in the discrimination against the farmer in the distribution of the burdens and benefits of civil government.

SPECIAL PRIVILEGE FOR WHOM?

From an early period in our history as a Nation, even before, while we still were 13 ununited States, we adopted a policy of granting special privileges to manufacturers of commodities necessary to a civilized life. Massachusetts erected tariff walls against other States. Connecticut, Rhode Island, New Jersey, New York—others did the same.

The theory was that with abundant national resources and intelligent labor it would be unwise to permit other nations, particularly Great Britain, to possess the American market, sending raw materials and coin to England as payment. Also, that by giving American manufacturers power to monopolize our market domestic competition would bring about such reduced prices that imports would be unprofitable and therefore impossible, when our infant industries would be able to stand alone. It is a cardinal principle of the political party with which I affiliate that protection, wisely gauged so as to avoid creating monopolies and to develop all the Nation's resources, is undoubtedly a great advantage in preventing the leveling of labor the world over. Unfortunately, for the success of this theory, the laws of competition were set aside by the selfish, avaricious beneficiaries of the tariff system through combinations, price fixing between them, market zones, division of market territory, pools; numerous effective devices were adopted to the same end.

THE FARMER PENALIZED

The tariff system has operated at the expense of the farmer. While he was being told that the system was building up the home market for his produce, the price for his produce in his home market was fixed in a foreign market where he has to sell all his surplus in competition with all the world. The price for the bulk of all produce is always fixed by the price of the surplus. Everything the farmer buys he buys in a protected market and pays, as a rule, all the traffic will bear. If the drawback provision of the present tariff law which was inserted at the instance of the large milling combinations of the country were repealed, the farmers of the spring wheat region would no doubt reap the benefit of the tariff on wheat, for the reason that there is usually a shortage of the hard spring wheat which the millers must have to mix with the softer grades in order to meet the market requirements as to flour.

Another factor to be considered is trans-Atlantic shipping. We have spent 60 years trying to recover the supremacy we had in world merchant marine that was destroyed by British influence during the Civil War. We have given tariffs to ship makers at the expense of ship users. It has cost about twice as much to build ships in America, or, it is so claimed on rather doubtful evidence—as it costs to build the same ships in other countries. That is—half the cost of American ships is dead capital and can only be supported by excess rates for service. When we recall that the freight is taken out of the farmers' selling price; that his wheat and other products sell at a price that pays the freight, all of which is taken off the price he would otherwise receive, it is seen at once as a serious loss. But that is only the index of the farmer's loss. Only 5 per cent of all American commerce ever sees salt water. Of this 5 per cent, one-half consists in farmers' produce. (We are speaking here of normal times.) So that 2½ per cent of all American commerce fixes the price of 97.5 per cent of all the commerce of the Nation in the products of agriculture.

THE RAILROADS DEVELOP

Another factor in the farmer's problems is that of transportation. On the 4th day of July, 1828, Charles Carroll of Carrollton, the last surviving signer of the Declaration of Independence, laid the first rail of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. Mr. Carroll said he considered that event second only to that of signing the Declaration of Independence, if even second to that. In a few weeks it will be 96 years ago. The story of the American railroad is an epic with all the elements of cosmic drama. Within a century the American people have developed the greatest system of railroad transportation the world has ever known, or is likely to know, under the existing dispensation.

Without noting in detail the steps by which results were obtained, it is sufficient to say that with the physical expansion of the system there was a progressive development of political and economic power that practically dictated the life of industry by railroad authorities and of courts and legislatures.

They discriminated between cities building up on the one hand and destroying on the other, to further the private interests of those in control. Every device to evade responsibility to local control was made use of to continue their abuses, until in 1887 the interstate commerce law was enacted for the express purpose of erecting a "buffer state" between the railroads and an outraged public opinion. Pending its adoption, the combined railroad interests set to work to change the provisions of the bill, and it received the signature of the President in such form as to be practically worthless. Unjust discrimination still continues, reckless combinations are entered into, passes are issued to officials, and where it is deemed necessary, blocks of railroad stocks are bestowed in liberal quantities. In nearly every State when railroad commissions have been established they have proven to be failures. When a determined stand has been taken against encroachments of railroads by commissions, the courts have set aside the verdict of the commissions. In the leading cases decided by the Supreme Court of the Republic, the court, usually by a divided court, undertook to determine the reasonableness of legislation and assumed, under a thin disguise, the functions of an upper legislative body, which, while it could not originate legislation, could absolutely veto laws touching the use or protection of property.

It assumes that the fixing of rates is a judicial question, against the time-honored principle of all Anglo-Saxon courts; that the determination of questions of public policy is a function of the legislature and not the courts, whose only duty is to lay down a rule and not to vote on the wisdom of a policy. Not only so, but in order to decide, as in the Minnesota Rate case, the court had in effect to reverse itself and overrule the decision it had handed down in previous cases when the same issue, practically, had been presented, as in Munn v. Illinois.

The effect of these decisions filters down through all the Federal and State courts and becomes the law of the land.

TAKING ALL THE TRAFFIC WILL BEAR

While imposing rates for service, delicately adjusted to "all the traffic will bear," these monopolies exert their powerful influence on public officials to shift their fair share of the expenses of government. In a near-by county in Maryland, it is said, a railroad earning 8 per cent on a capitalization of $200,000 per mile of double track has been assessed at $7,500 per mile, while the farms it runs through are assessed at more than they would sell for, or cost their owners, at the same time that splendid crops of peaches, canteloupes, melons, tomatoes, potatoes, cucumbers are rotting in the fields or being fed to swine because the railroads want more than these fruits would bring to haul them to market in near-by cities.

It is probable that abuses of the sovereign power delegated to the railroads of the country have done more to arouse popular resentments than any other one influence. Consolidations, discriminations, and extortions by railroads started the granger movement in 1867. By 1877 the Supreme Court sustained the constitutionality of granger laws, only to see them repealed through the political power exerted by railroads. But the necessity for relief kept the farmers in action to curb the excesses of their principal oppressors, at that time the railroads.

FARMERS BEGIN TO ORGANIZE

This is neither the time or the place to follow the historic development of the different methods or organizations through which the farmers endeavored to protect themselves against their abuses by monopoly. Yet the grange movement was only one and the earliest expression of the farmers' awakening consciousness of his position. He found himself like the Hindoo, Sudra—at the bottom of the economic scale; there was no one below him to whom he could pass the burden. Through every economic stratum of organized society the higher was always able to shift its burden to the one next below, while the farmer stood on the ground and had to dig his living out of the earth with his own hands. He had to support with his labor the many-storied economic structure, the foundation of which rested in his own fields while its towering pinnacles glittered in the palatial stock exchange, board of trade, and the bankers' temples of Mammon.

It was as evident to the farmers of 1867 as it is to them in 1924, that the only remedy for his troubles must come through political action; therefore, organization must be developed to that end. With granger laws repealed, nullified, further organization was necessary. Independent farmers' organizations sprang up in 1873-74 in many States of the Middle West, all having the same general purpose. There were independent parties, reform, antimonopoly, farmers' parties; all the result of an ardent will to remove the causes of the injustice felt by this great group and to do this by constitutional and lawful political means.

THE FARMERS' FIGHT

Continuously since the late "sixties" there have sprung up sporadic groups of farmers animated by these principles, Farmers' Alliance, Farmers' Union, Farmers' Cooperative Unions, Equity Societies, Agricultural Wheel, Farmers and Laborers Union, Southern Alliance, Northwestern Alliance, Populist Party, People's Party, Nonpartisan League. The backbone of all these movements consisted of actual farmers, although there were large numbers of citizens of rural towns and villages in full sympathy who felt the farmers' troubles as their own. These movements are now history, yet their inspiration survives and the experience they developed has helped the farmers in dealing with the later forms of oppression. While the farmers' present problems still include the problems of the past, there are new problems that are but slightly and indirectly felt by those who are not farmers; these grow out of conditions and legislation of recent origin.

SOME FARMERS' REAL PROBLEMS

Consider there are 15,232,658 automobiles and gasoline trucks in operation in the United States as shown by a recent report by the Government. Accurate estimate is impossible, but if we can assume each of these vehicles displaces two horses, 30,000,000 horses furnished a market for the agricultural produce of not less than 60,000,000 acres of good farm land. At the modest figure of $10 an acre of profit the farmer has an income less by $600,000,000 than he would if there were no automotive vehicles in the country. I am aware that some, possibly many, automobiles now in use would be wanting if the owners had to use horse-drawn vehicles; yet you will appreciate the fact that the farmer is met with a condition that seriously affects the value of his land and the market for his produce. It is not a question of the value of the automobile to society as an improved mechanical device, it is purely a problem and a condition to which the farmer must adjust himself.

Again, recent legislation has abolished the farmers' market for 108,000,000 bushels of grain, 2.3 per cent of the total grain crop of the country that formerly was consumed in making alcohol and malt, spirituous, and fermented beverages; that is, 2.3 per cent of the total grain acreage of rich land must be converted to other crops or lie idle. Here, again, it is not a problem in ethics as related to the farmer. It is a condition to which he must adjust himself as the facts of a changing order overtake him in the flowing stream of social history, and the farmers' readjustment makes readjustment necessary for all other groups and industries.

THE MERCHANT MARINE DESTROYED

We have helped to destroy the merchant marine that had cut the cost of ocean transport down to half or less than half it was prior to the World War, and I sometimes wonder if that was not one factor in making the war. Yet the fact remains we have helped to ruin the market for the American farmer, both at home and abroad. And this also, is not to be discussed here; as a problem of ethics it is purely considered in this connection as a serious factor in the farmers' problems. So serious is it that since these laws—Esch-Cummins law, immigration law, and Federal reserve law—have been operative not less than 3,000,000 farmers have forsaken their profession, abandoned their farms, and added their families to the number of consumers rather than producers of food. This is not a situation peculiar to the West and Northwest. In New York and Pennsylvania alone more than 4,300 farms have been literally abandoned, thrown away, in the last three years. So serious is it, I am advised, that in this year of 1924 more than 1,500,000 more farmers will also forsake their farms and flock to the cities, just as they did in the same circumstances in old Rome, when bread and circuses were provided by the state to keep them from rebellious outbreak.

LAND PRICES AND PROPERTY

These contributing causes of the farmers' problems are reflected in the market prices of farm lands, which are only from 25 to 50 per cent of 1920 inflated prices. When the significance of the situation and the methods employed to bring about present conditions are considered, we approach the central factor of the farmers' problems.

I wish to quote the conclusions of a distinguished American, scion of a distinguished family, a family intimately associated with generations of American history, the son and grandson of Presidents, whose name he bears—Brooks Adams. In his historic contribution to modern scholarship, The Law of Civilization and Decay, he outlines a philosophy based on the experience of thousands of years. It is as follows:

> "Throughout the ages it has been the practice of the moneyed class first to create a period of high prices, to encourage investment, enterprise, speculation, during which they sell property and commodities of all kinds, lands especially, and then to cause a deflation period of swift panic, during which prices of all properties fall rapidly, and at the lowest level of prices they proceed to buy in, at panic prices, the properties they had previously sold; on which they again proceed to elevate prices to former levels, only to repeat the process. The means by which the process is conducted vary from time to time, yet the result is always the same, the mortgage engulfs the pledge."

This process has been demonstrated by 16 such periodic panics in less than a century and a half of our national life. With us, as in practically every case since the panic in Rome under Tiberius, the means was by creating an immense expansion of the amount of money or in modern days by enlarging the volume of bank credit (concentrated or controlled) by virtue of the power granted under the Federal reserve bank act. We should not forget, however, the administrative abuses which have been made possible under private control and monopoly.

Without undertaking to discuss this act itself, it is enough to say that on a basis of less than five billions of actual money there was issued a volume of credit of more than $60,000,000,000. As a result the price level of all commodities was raised correspondingly.

HOW PANICS ARE MADE

On May 18, 1920, without a word of warning or notice, the balloon credit structure was punctured, discounts were raised, loans were withdrawn, cut down, refused, and the entire fabric of American commerce, exchange, manufacture, transportation, plunged into chaos, and threw 6,000,000 workers on the streets, by the most heartless, vicious, cruel, and unconscionable stroke of avaricious depravity known in the business history of the civilized world. The Federal reserve bank act was represented as intended to stabilize prices, to make panics impossible, to give a flexible, adjustable monetary device that would assure security to business ventures. Yet it was deliberately used to rip over $60,000,000,000 from the possessors of property and commodities and hand it over to the interests which secured the enactment of the law.

Can those who see the situation as does the farmer marvel that he feels that he has a problem?

Several problems? That he feels that he has a duty to perform?

Market bulletins in the summer of 1920 showed that the price of fat lambs, carload lots, dropped from 22 cents to 8 cents a pound within a few days. This precipitous fall in prices was general. It cut the market price of all commodities and services in the same way and to the same extent. It was observed at all primary markets and affected all forms of farm products. Nor was it a transient matter; it continued and now prevails.

It is important to note that under governmental control and by monopoly manipulation that same year, while the price received by the farmer for his wheat dropped nearly 50 per cent the price of mill feed—bran and shorts—increased in retail price nearly 100 per cent. I have seen the farmers bring in a load of wheat and sell this wheat for less than another farmer paid for the same weight of wheat byproudets, mill feed, being delivered at the rear of the same elevator as feed for the farmers' dairy animals. In other words, it would have been more economical for the farmer to have fed the wheat itself.

As to wheat growing in the United States, the future is not reassuring. This is a problem not only for the wheat farmer but for all other farmers and business men and all men engaged in industry. There are opening up vast areas of wheat-producing lands in Canada, in the Argentine, Brazil, Manchuria—virgin soils, cheap labor. There are no artificial tariff barriers that prevent consumers of wheat produced in these parts of the world from paying for the things they buy in things they produce.

Advances in the agricultural arts have made it possible for one man adequately equipped with apparatus and understanding to handle more acres of land than a dozen men could properly cover half a century ago. The fitness of certain soils for certain crops, intensive culture, a knowledge developed by experiment of chemical relations in plant foods, foreknowledge of weather conditions, food values for livestock at different stages of growth and preparation for market, the "farm factory" principle that "finishes the farm product most nearly for consumption"—all these and others have tended to reduce the cost of production of farm products. The most important of these is the great advance in machinery. In place of the forked stick that still is the Hindoo Sudra's plow, or the wooden spade of the Peruvian husbandman, we have the giant tractor-drawn gang plows that turn six furrows at once, cultivating machines operated by gasoline engines, harvesting machines, threshing machines that practically abolish human and animal labor on the great farms of the country. Yet with every advance in technique, every multiplication of power, not a single hour of toil has been lifted from the back of labor.

The economy of effort, the advantage from all these improvements has been absorbed largely by the cost of the machines to the farmer, who must use them or fall behind in the fierce competition he must meet; and partly also by the increase in the market price of land. Competition does not affect the price of the implements and machinery the farmer must use, for the reason that the great bulk of all the farmer's machinery is made by a combination of manufacturers—Harvester Trusts—that have grown to international proportions. It is no solace to the farmer's troubles, no solution of his problems to tell him there is no tariff on farm machinery, for the simple reason that the trust controls the production of all such commodities.

Again, the reflection of higher technique in higher land values, merely adds to the farmer's burden. If he is to have a return of 6 per cent on investment, he must work more than twice as hard on $100 land as he would have to work on $50 land. Therefore, while with better roads, telephones, rural free-delivery mail, superior technique and apparatus, some farmers may have made money as land speculators, only an insignificant few have made financial successes as cultivators of the soil.

FERTILITY DEPLETED

Meanwhile, as an offset to any advance in land values there has been a constant decrease in fertility, soil exhaustion, owing to unintelligent cropping. The average production of corn, wheat, and other staple crops has suffered a steady and progressive decline. Lands that once produced from 30 to 40 bushels of wheat or 60 to 75 bushels of corn per acre now produce only 12 to 20 bushels of wheat and 25 to 40 bushels of corn, notwithstanding all improvements in farm methods.

This condition has given rise to the fertilizer problem and the fertilizer combination. The World War concentrated official attention to this problem, which was not only a farmer's problem but a national problem and one which has not yet been placed in satisfactory course of solution. As a result of acute shortage of the important element of nitrogen in commercial fertilizers the Government, under the Department of Agriculture, has been conducting experiments through the Bureau of Nitrogen Research in order to develop methods of extracting nitrogen from the atmosphere, in quantities and at a cost making it available for agriculture.

It is encouraging to be able to say that these experiments have demonstrated the possibility of producing atmospheric nitrogen at a cost of less than half of that shown by other processes. But the fertilizer combination or monopoly still operates to levy all the traffic will bear for this vital necessity for successful agriculture. When it is necessary to use 1 ton of highly nitrogenous fertilizer on each acre of land in order to raise potatoes economically, it becomes important to know whether it will cost $35 or only $20 a ton, and also whether potatoes will bring 15 cents or 75 cents a bushel on the markets.

THE FARMERS HAVE A GAMBLER'S CHANCE

As a matter of fact, the farmer is the greatest gambler on earth. He gambles on the seasons and the weather; he gambles on the labor market and on grasshoppers, army worm, chinch bugs, the boll weevil, and other vermin. He takes a chance on accident and disease for himself and all his creatures. His horses and cattle, his sheep and swine, his poultry, and his orchards sicken and die. He contends with the blackleg in his pastures and with other blacklegs at every step of the way from the farm to the bank, where he has often had to overdraw in order to pay freight and commission after selling for less than the cost of raising his crop.

The barest outline of the market problems of agriculture fully explain the sense of resentment universally felt by farmers against conditions and influences responsible therefor. It has, quite by accident, of course, come about that "after harvest" the farmer is expected to be in funds and most anxious to discharge all his obligations. Therefore his fixed obligations—interest on his mortgage (if he has been fortunate enough to borrow money), store bill, taxes, fertilizer bill, machinery account, blacksmith and doctor's bills, and all and sundry accounts payable—are presented for payment. Now, it has, quite by chance, of course, usually happened that from July to late November there has been a money stringency; money has been "tight," absorbed in "moving the crops." This naturally presses the farmer to take lower prices for his crop in order to meet his bills with ready money. Then, too, owing to the same cause, cars are scarce, hard to get, "moving the crops," which also tends to force down the price. Last December there were thousands, hundreds of thousands, of tons of wheat lying on the ground at shipping points in Montana and North Dakota for want of cars; wheat hauled in from 30 or 40 miles to shipping station, only to be piled out in the weather till the railroads could (?) take care of it. Elevator space gorged with wheat, private houses commandeered to store wheat.

In Michigan and Minnesota hundreds of acres of potatoes were left to freeze and rot in the ground because they would not pay the labor cost of digging them. Millions of tons of alfalfa, the finest stock feed on earth, rotted down in the stack in Colorado, Wyoming, and other States because it would not pay for hauling to the shipping point.

It is an economic truth demonstrated by all commercial history that the flow of manufactured goods must be balanced by the flow of farm products, foodstuffs, and clothing materials. Otherwise manufacturing would stop. All trade, all commerce, is essentially exchange of the products of different industries. Quite apart from questions of theory, political or social, voluntary trade can not exist on any other basis. Under an imperialism such as Rome developed, enforced trade—i. e., tribute—was enforced upon her colonies—Sicily, Spain, Gaul, Egypt—and paid very largely in wheat, while from the Balkans immense quantities of pork were constantly flowing to the capital city. The lack of adequate or equivalent return in goods resulted in the impoverishment of the colonies and insurrection and rebellion only held in check by military force that only added to the burdens of the colonial population. So long as Rome was able to pay her frontier armies, Rome and the Empire was secure. When, however, the gold and silver money of the government was exhausted, when the mines of Spain were worked out and Rome could no longer pay her soldiers, the armies evaporated, defenses broke down, and the eager northern hordes broke through. The initial blunder lay in the idea that the natural laws of economics could be ignored and defied, even by the mistress of the world, the Empire of Rome. It might be an advantage if modern states could profit by the blunders of ancient times.

WHERE THE FARMERS' PROFITS GO

There are three general groups who share in the division of the wealth produced in America. These may be roughly described as, 1, the capitalist group; 2, the municipal labor group; 3, the farmer group. The income and excess profits tax reports indicate the composition of the first group with sufficient clearness. The second group may be considered as represented by organized labor, although organized labor strictly construed consists of only a minor number. The third group embraces all farm labor or farmers.

The share of our annual wealth enjoyed by these groups, respectively, may fairly be estimated by the individual income received by the average member of each group. The bureau of Economic Research in the Department of Agriculture has issued a report on farm incomes for the year 1922, showing the average daily earnings of American farmers, including as cash at market prices the home-raised commodities required for subsistence, with the cash returns for produce sold, and reckoning the average number of actual farm workers at two and one-half persons per farm, it shows the average daily income per farm to be within a fraction of 78 cents per day.

In contrast, consider the cash income of the workers in the building trades of our cities. At this time, here in our Capital City, the bricklayers are demanding an advance from $12 to $14 per 8-hour day for a 5-day week. In the Pittsburgh district, plate rollers have been receiving cash incomes of from $460 to $650 per month, while their employers, specially protected manufacturers, pay dividends running toward 100 per cent on stock that is a watery capitalization of the privilege of private taxation.

PRODUCERS—FARMERS—MUST ORGANIZE FOR POLITICAL ACTION

The principle of "organization" has been urged upon the farmers as their only means of self-protection. The Hon. SIDNEY ANDERSON, chairman of the Agricultural Commission and also chairman of the agricultural conference here, after many months of investigation said to the assembled representatives of agricultural organizations, in effect:

> "There is no fairy wand of legislation that can afford relief to American farmers. Your oppressors are organized; you must adopt their tactics—organize!"

To organize farmers means the organization of all the people not included in the two first groups; that means the coordination of interests as divergent as the potato farmers of Maine and the sheep herders of New Mexico, the apple men of Oregon and the cotton men of Alabama, the dairy men of Wisconsin and the beef raisers of Texas, the tobacco men of Connecticut and the citrus men of Florida and California.

It must be evident to all that this kind of organization is impractical. In cases where groups of farmers engaged in similar production, as wheat growers, have undertaken to organize, and as organizations took action to prevent unlawful acts to their injury, as in the case of the Chamber of Commerce of Minneapolis, in 1917, seven years ago this month—no final result has as yet been obtained while the unlawful practice complained of is still in operation; and it would appear that the way is being paved to reject the findings and justify the Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce in continuing the practices so well known to all grain growers in the Northwest. As in the granger laws previously mentioned, when the Supreme Court sustained these laws, the only escape for monopoly was to amend or repeal them, and that was what happened.

There is a method of organization, however, that will bring relief to farmers and so help to solve the farmers' problems. If they are denied the opportunity and benefits of economic organization, they are driven to the only alternative of political organization.

The weary years of hope deferred, the disillusionment, the loss of faith in parties has been a bitter experience; but even so, they have had their value. They have been a training school, severe and relentless, yet out of it they are coming, as the children of Israel came out of the wilderness, disciplined, hardened, fused into a compact mass with a common idea.

THE FARMER AND SOCIETY

While the farmer may become unduly self-conscious under the concentrated gaze of the society in which he suddenly has become so conspicuous and important a part because of "problems" that seem peculiarly his own, the fact is that these so-called farmers' problems are social problems and are equally important to all the groups making up society. Society, the social body, is organic not mechanistic. It has a vitality, a consciousness, even though this consciousness be as yet unconscious of itself—dormant. Society is the more or less truthful embodiment of the principle of cooperation, and its political organization, method of social expression, must be either cooperative or coercive in form and function. Evan a casual study of history embracing the field now available for purposes of comparison shows that the earliest method of subjugation of men was through physical force. Can we visualize a society in which scholars, philosophers, artists, physicians, poets were chattel slaves? Yet Plato was a slave in the quarries of Syracuse until redeemed by a wealthy Athenian. Seneca and Epictetus were slaves. Horace was the son of a redeemed slave.

FEUDALISM AND THE LASH

The next step in the emancipation of the masses of mankind came with the establishment of military feudalism under Charlemagne, by which the masters enforced unrequited labor through overlordship of land. Economic domination was even more complete under feudalism than under the chattel slavery. The lash of hunger entwined with the lash of ambition sufficed to compel a surplus production that glutted the avarice of overlords and built the cathedrals that are the wonderful monuments of a credulous people's faith and of a religion that was the chief instrument of their enslavement.

THE MONEY OR CREDIT EVIL AND MODERN SLAVERY

In our time the means of subjugation is the monetary system, the confiscation of the people's credit power through a law-made power to manufacture substitutes for money. The principal business of those to whom this power is delegated by government is the manufacture of debts. And if people will not willingly submerge themselves in debts, so great has this power grown that debts are forced upon them through the agency of war. International "financiers" are this very day working out a program that, if it succeeds, will chain the world into lock step for centuries, as they have chained the peoples and the industries of all nations.

There is, however, and most fortunately, a simple and effective way of escape from these conditions, one that assures future immunity, only waiting for the intelligence and patriotism of the people to awake to their power and opportunity—that is, for the Nation to reassume the exercise of its sovereign power to issue and regulate the value of the money of the people.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. ROBINSON presented memorials of sundry citizens of the third congressional district of Arkansas, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Howell-Barkley railway labor bill, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota presented numerous petitions of sundry citizens in the State of Minnesota, praying for the passage of legislation providing an equipment maintenance allowance to rural mail carriers, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. FERNALD presented a resolution adopted by the National Canners' Association, favoring the appropriation of an additional $75,000 for a plant disease survey, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the National Canners' Association, favoring a substantial reduction in taxes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the National Canners' Association, favoring an amendment to the Constitution relative to the regulation of child labor, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WILLIS presented petitions of sundry citizens of Wilmington, Lebanon, and Oregonia, all in the State of Ohio, praying an amendment to the Constitution granting equal rights to women, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented numerous petitions of sundry citizens in the State of Ohio, praying for the passage of legislation providing an equipment maintenance allowance to rural mail carriers, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a resolution adopted at the annual meeting of the Congregational Conference of Ohio, representing 225 churches, favoring a reconsideration of the action of Congress relative to Japanese immigration on the immigration bill, and the founding of measures hereafter upon friendly diplomatic negotiations consistent with the historic friendship of the two nations, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a resolution of the Bellevue (Ohio) Chapter No. 15, Izaak Walton League of America, favoring the passage of House bill 4088, to establish the Upper Mississippi River Wild Life and Fish Refuge, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a resolution of the Lakewood (Ohio) City Council, protesting against the passage of legislation authorizing the Sanitary District of Chicago to increase the amount of water diverted from Lake Michigan, so as to further lower the level of Lake Erie, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. KEYES, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7113) to establish a dairy bureau in the Department of Agriculture, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CAMERON, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (S. 3093) granting certain public lands to the city of Phoenix, Ariz., for municipal, park, recreation, playground, or public convenience purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 569) thereon.

Mr. BURSUM, from the Committee on Pensions, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 6426) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War and to widows of such soldiers and sailors (Rept. No. 570); and

A bill (H. R. 6941) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war (Rept. No. 571).

Mr. LADD, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, submitted a report (No. 572) to accompany the bill (S. 3047) authorizing joint investigations by the United States Geological Survey and the Bureau of Soils of the United States Department of Agriculture to determine the location and extent of potash deposits or occurrences in the United States and improved methods of recovering potash therefrom, heretofore reported by him without amendment.

Mr. NORBECK, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 127) to provide that the powers and duties conferred upon the Governor of Alaska under existing law for the protection of wild game animals and wild birds in Alaska be transferred to and be exercised by the Secretary of Agriculture, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 573) thereon.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon;

A bill (H. R. 2882) to provide for the reservation of certain land in Utah as a school site for Ute Indians (Rept. No. 574); and

A bill (H. R. 2884) providing for the reservation of certain lands in Utah for certain bands of Paiute Indians (Rept. No. 575).

Mr. CAMERON, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 498) providing for a recreational area within the Crook National Forest, Ariz., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 576) thereon.

Mr. LADD, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon;

A bill (H. R. 656) to add certain lands to the Plumas and to the Lassen National Forests in California (Rept. No. 577);

A bill (H. R. 1442) authorizing issuance of patent to Charles Swanson (Rept. No. 578);

A bill (H. R. 4481) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to exchange land formerly used as a site for the Point of Woods Range Lights, Mich., for other lands in the vicinity (Rept. No. 579); and

A bill (H. R. 7109) to authorize acquisition of unreserved public lands in the Columbia or Moses Reservation, State of Washington, under acts of March 28, 1912, and March 3, 1877, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 580).

Mr. BURSUM, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (S. 3024) providing for the acquirement by the United States of privately owned lands within Rio Arriba and Taos Counties, N. Mex., known as the Las Trampas grant, by exchanging therefor timber within the exterior boundaries of any national forest situated within the State of New Mexico, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 581) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 2979) to extend the provisions of the homestead laws so as to allow certain credit in lieu of permanent improvements for the period of enlistment to soldiers, nurses, and officers of the Army, and the seamen, marines, nurses, and officers of the Navy and the Marine Corps of the United States, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 582) thereon.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. UNDERWOOD:

A bill (S. 3353) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to remove the quarantine station now located at Fort Morgan, Ala., to Sand Island, near the entrance of the port of Mobile, Ala., and to construct thereon a new quarantine station; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts:

A bill (S. 3354) to authorize the appointment of Machinist Henry F. Mulloy, United States Navy, as an ensign in the regular Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. SMITH:

A bill (S. 3355) granting the consent of Congress to the counties of Marion and Florence, in the State of South Carolina, to construct a bridge across the Peedee River at or near Savage Landing, S. C.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. EDGE:

A bill (S. 3356) for the relief of Joy Bright Little; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (S. 3357) to amend sections 2 and 5 of the act entitled "An act to provide the necessary organization of the customs service for an adequate administration and enforcement of the tariff act of 1922 and all other customs revenue laws," approved March 4, 1923; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. FERRIS:

A bill (S. 3358) for the relief of Morgan Miller; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LODGE:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 130) for the participation of the United States in an international exposition to be held at Seville, Spain, in 1927; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

AMENDMENT OF TRANSPORTATION ACT OF 1920

Mr. RANSDELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3315) to amend section 206 of the transportation act, 1920, approved February 28, 1920, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed.

THE PERIL OF NARCOTICS

Mr. CAPPER submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 10), which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there shall be printed as a Senate document an eight-page article entitled "The peril of narcotics—A warning to the people of America," by the International Narcotics Education Association, and that 50,000,000 additional copies shall be printed, of which one-half shall be for the use of the Senate and one-half for the use of the House of Representatives.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE SENATE CHAMBER

Mr. COPELAND submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 231), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Architect of the Capitol be authorized and directed, under the supervision of the Senate Committee on Rules, to consult with architects of repute and expert in ventilation and acoustics with a view to improving the living conditions of the Senate Chamber, and giving attention to rearrangement and reconstruction, including a plan to place the Chamber in direct contact with the outer wall or walls of the building, and to report with plans to the President pro tempore of the Senate on the first Monday of December, 1924. The expenses hereunder, not to exceed the sum of $10,000, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

CLAIMS OF THE CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW INDIANS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5325) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in any claims which the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. HARRELD. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. HARRELD, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. KENDRICK conferees on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7877) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes, requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. ANTHONY, Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa, and Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 2922) to authorize the President to reconsider the case of Frederic K. Long and to reappoint him a captain in the Regular Army, and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

FARM LOAN BOARD

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, as stated at the outset of my remarks on yesterday, the names of four nominees for membership on the Federal Farm Loan Board are now on the Executive Calendar awaiting action by the Senate. The candidates were selected by President Harding and hence have been in office as recess appointees. Two have served approximately 15 months and the other two about 12 and 11 months, respectively. In short, these nominees have been a majority of and in control of the Federal Farm Loan Board for nearly one year, and to all effects and purposes, considering the circumstances, since March 4, 1923. Therefore, in passing upon these nominees it should be kept clearly in mind that the Senate is not dealing with recent appointees, but with those who have records as members of the Farm Loan Board. As a consequence the question to be decided in considering these nominations is not one of mere personality, but whether the Senate can afford to place its stamp of approval upon the records of these recess appointees.

For several months past the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency has had under consideration the nominations in question. Various persons have appeared for and against confirmation and evidence has been adduced and facts developed at such hearings, which I presented yesterday.

The Federal Farm Loan Board, and hence its nominees, constituting a majority of the membership thereof, in my opinion stand convicted of the following charges, which I discussed yesterday.

1. Violation of a cardinal principle of public policy, enunciated in section 6 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States, prohibiting a legislative officer from enjoying the emoluments of any office created during his incumbency.

2. Unlawful procedure in approving of the creation of a new official for the Federal farm-loan system to be known as fiscal agent.

3. Looseness and gross carelessness in the conduct of the affairs of the board, indicating incompetency.

4. The unlawful withdrawal of funds from the Treasury of the United States and the disbursement of such funds without the authority of Congress.

5. Looseness and neglect in the disbursement of funds.

On yesterday I discussed these charges, so far as I have read them here at this time. I will not attempt at this period in my remarks to recapitulate, but will proceed with the next specification, which is——

6. Misapplication of funds.

As pointed out yesterday, some $37,000 were transferred from the Treasury to an account in the Franklin National Bank in the name of the farm-loan commissioner, Mr. Lobdell, and this account was checked upon from time to time until on February 16 of last year there remained in the account but eighty-six dollars and some cents. This account was established in September of 1922. So during that period of about 16 months this $37,000 was expended by checks drawn by the farm-loan commissioner.

I have pointed out here that checks were drawn payable to employees. Those checks were cashed; the money was used; and the board has no record as to whom that money was paid. Now, I propose to show that checks were also drawn on this account as loans to employees and as presents to employees. I further propose to show that loans were made to members of the board.

In the testimony elicited in the examination before the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate the following questions were asked of Mr. Lobdell, who was then farm-loan commissioner and in whose name this account was carried:

Q. In the case of Henry I. Raley he was on the Treasury pay roll, was he not?

Judge LOBDELL. Prior to that time?

Q. No. He went on the pay roll on the 1st day of February when his wife quit.

Judge LOBDELL. That is my impression—yes; the same date.

Q. Now, then, he was on the Treasury pay roll, and yet you paid him $160 out of this fund. Do you hold that this fund did not belong to the Government?

Judge LOBDELL. Yes, sir.

Q. Then, if that is true and you paid this money, you violated the law of March 3, 1917, which is to this effect:

"On and after July 1, 1919, no Government official or employee shall receive any salary in connection with his services as such an official or employee from any source other than the Government of the United States, except as may be contributed out of the treasury of any State, county, or municipality; and no person, association, or corporation shall make any contribution to or in any way supplement the salary of any Government official or employee for the services performed by him for the Government of the United States.

Q. He was working for the Government of the United States, was he not? And yet out of this fund that you say does not belong to the Government you paid him $160?

Judge LOBDELL. That is correct.

Q. * * * Now, then, I should like to ask you about Millie V. Raley. On February 1, 1923, she ceased to be employed by the Farm Loan Bureau.

Millie V. Raley, I might add, Mr. President, was the wife of Mr. Raley.

Judge LOBDELL. Yes; that is right.

Q. The moment she ceased to be employed Henry I. Raley became employed?

Judge LOBDELL. That is right.

Q. You advanced him $100, as stated?

Judge LOBDELL. Yes, sir.

Q. And then you gave Mrs. Raley on that day a present of $133.65?

Judge LOBDELL. Whatever the amount states; yes, sir. The expression is hardly a fair one, though, Senator. The Senator is aware of the established usage of the Treasury. Where an employee has been in the service for three years or more, and is separated from the service, he may receive one month's absence with pay—may be paid for an additional month. * * * In that instance it became necessary to deprive her of the month's leave to which she was entitled with pay as a clerk and pay this from this fund.

Q. But she was working for the Government of the United States, was she not, when she drew that?

Judge LOBDELL. Yes, sir.

Q. And you took from this fund, that you have said had nothing to do with the Government of the United States, and made her a present of $133.65?

Judge LOBDELL. I have stated the facts; yes, sir.

Mr. President, I do not wish to be offensive, and, as I have said here, I have not charged the members of the board with dishonesty; but as we know, in an engine room they have, or used to have in the old days, what was called a "slush bucket." It contained grease, and that grease was put upon the bearings to make them run smoothly. From that expression the term "slush fund" has been developed. It means a fund that is drawn upon to make things run smoothly and to be applied where it is desired to be generous at the expense of somebody else. That is what this fund was used for in many cases. Any such transaction in connection with Government or public funds should be deprecated in the severest terms. Government affairs, public affairs, can not be run in that way.

Here was a young woman who resigned as an employee of the Government of the United States. They took $133.65 out of a fund which they held had no relation to the United States and paid it to her. It was a gift, according to their statement.

There was no appropriation made by Congress from which they could have made that gift. The day she resigned what took place? They put her husband on the pay roll of the United States at $1,640 a year, and then on the day that he assumed his duties they took from this fund and gave him $100, and at the end of six months they gave him another $60 out of the same fund. They stated that his salary was to be $1,800 a year, but the Treasury pay roll would allow him only $1,640, so they resorted to this fund and drew out $160 and gave it to him, and they gave him $100 before he had earned a cent. How did they explain it? Well, they said he was to travel for the Farm Loan Board, and that really this was an advance of traveling expenses. I said: "I thought you said this was salary." "Well, yes; we did consider it salary afterwards." I said: "Then he did traveling for you, did he?" "Yes." "Then I should like to see his statement of expenses for the next month." They said they could not produce it at that time, nor did they produce it. I insisted that the best evidence that this money was used for traveling expenses was his rendered account for traveling expenses, and in my opinion they can not show any vouchers; at least, they have not furnished a voucher.

It may be urged that this is a small matter; but I have been unable, and this committee has been unable, to go into but the mere edge of the accounts of the Federal Farm Loan Board. They allowed me to make inquiries into less than some 20 items, covering $7,000. Then the committee went into executive session and reported these nominees to the Senate. After months had been spent in preparing this statement, covering $881,000,000, it must be apparent to anyone that no Senator here could, in a few days, analyze that statement that took 10 accountants six or seven weeks to prepare. It is a mere cash statement without giving a description of items. It must be evident that in order to know what has been going on in the Farm Loan Board that these items must be scanned with the greatest care, and the little things would indicate how the big things were handled. That you may know how the big things were handled, let me tell you that they have paid some $8,000,000 for the sale of bonds, yet they have no written contract with any bond house.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. HOWELL. I do.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator refers to the decision of the committee in discontinuing any further inquiry into these accounts and the other matters that the Senator brought to the attention of the committee, and proceeding to report out the nominations.

The Senator will remember that there were several bills introduced—I introduced a bill early in December—to place this board back on its original basis of five instead of seven members, with the Secretary of the Treasury as chairman of the board, making four members to be confirmed by the Senate instead of six members to be confirmed by the Senate as provided in the intermediate credits act, which amended the original farm loan act in several respects. Those bills the committee never has acted upon. If the bill which I presented to the Senate, and which has been under some consideration by the committee, although the main consideration has been devoted to the question of confirmation of these nominees, had been reported out by the Senate and become law, then the names of members of this board to be submitted to the Senate would have been only two instead of four. So that was one question to be determined, whether this membership should not be reduced, in which event there would be only two names submitted instead of four. The committee has never passed on that question; and the reply, when I urge consideration of those bills, is that the session has so far progressed, and the adjournment is so nearly in sight, that the committee has not had time to report out those bills, and neither House of Congress has time to consider them, and therefore the legislation can not be changed, and there is nothing to do but accept the situation as it is.

That is the response the committee makes to that suggestion. Whether or not that is a good reason for voting to confirm these nominees is a matter to be considered; but that is the reason given now why we can not have action upon the proposition that this board as now constituted is larger than it ought to be, and ought to be put back where the original act placed it, namely, five members instead of seven. If that were done, then there would be no occasion for four nominations. The occasion then would be for only two names to be sent in; but the answer is that that can not be done, because we are too near to the close of the session, and it is impossible to obtain legislation, and therefore there is nothing to do but to accept the situation as it is and act upon the nominations before the committee. The result was that the nominations were reported out.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, let me interject, if the Senator from Nebraska will permit me, that I am very much interested in what the Senator from Florida says, that we are near the close of the session. I hope he has some real foundation for that belief.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am simply giving the response of the committee, and I only know, so far as that committee is concerned, that it seems to be impossible ever to get a quorum of the committee, and the reason assigned is because, if we should pass the legislation in the Senate, it can not be acted on in the other body, and therefore there is no use of holding any further meetings. That is the situation of the public business. You can scarcely get a quorum of a standing committee.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida has made it very clear that he has urged a bill for the reduction of the number of the members of the Farm Loan Board from six to four, the number of members prior to March 4, 1923. That bill was introduced early in this session. It was supplemented by a similar bill introduced by the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], but the committee has not considered those bills, although the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] during the hearings interposed the following:

Senator GLASS. Governor [Norris], after all, are not the functions of the farm-loan boards distinctly administrative and supervisory, and are they not authorized under the law to employ agencies to do the detail work of the system, and if one man, to wit, the Comptroller of the Currency, can supervise the entire national banking system, comprising nearly 8,000 commercial banks, why may not five men administer and supervise this system that is not nearly so varied in its operations as the commercial bank system of the country?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not quite catch your question, Senator.

Senator GLASS. I say, if one man, the Comptroller of the Currency, for instance, may effectively supervise and administer the whole national banking system of the country, with its great variety of business and interests, why may not a board of five members administer and supervise this other system?

Mr. NORRIS. Of course they may. I think there is quite a distinct difference, though, between the functions of the comptroller with regard to the national banks and the functions of this board with regard to these Federal land banks. If the national banks of the country were issuing obligations every day secured by the notes that they had taken from their customers, and the comptroller was required to put a certificate on each one of these obligations, then you would have a situation that would be parallel to the situation of the Farm Loan Board with regard to these land banks.

Senator GLASS. Well, the comptroller has to do more than that. He has to watch the detail business of every national bank. He has to watch every loan that the bank makes, the character of the collateral securities, etc. He has to supervise the issuance of notes; in other words, the Comptroller of the Currency is a czar of the whole national banking system, and he is charged with the duty of knowing intimately every detailed operation of every bank. It is true he does not do it himself; he appoints his bank examiners and his agents; he has his various departments there; and would it not be just as easy for five men to create these departments and appoint these examiners and to intimately supervise the business of this system as seven men?

Mr. NORRIS. I think it would be if they relied, as the comptroller necessarily does, on his examiners and chief examiners.

Senator GLASS. But, Governor, if five men supervise the operations of the great Federal reserve banking system, whose business is so infinitely greater than the business of the farm loan banks that it is not comparable—if five men could do that, why could not five men do this?

Such is the opinion, evidently, of the Senator from Virginia, and these bills are before the committee. Why has not the committee acted on them? The measures are simple. Well, Mr. President, there are four appointees involved, and I am afraid that is largely the reason why this action has not been taken.

But, to proceed, Mr. President, it has been urged, as I have stated before, that the items to which I have referred are comparatively small items. Mr. President, it is the small details about a business that indicate how the big details are taken care of. It is the small details about a business that can be easily gone into; but when you come to the big matters it takes much investigation, and it must be admitted by any Member here that merely to understand that cash statement—Treasury's record of analysis—without going into the items is a task, and yet the committee allowed me to ask questions respecting 20 items only.

Mr. President, It has taken six weeks of work to produce this statement—from what? From deposit slips, check stubs, correspondence. That is all the Treasury employees had to work with. Oh, yes; they had the memories of a young woman and one or two other employees. After working with these they finally produced this statement, which is nothing but a mere statement of receipts and expenditures.

I was asked yesterday if it was not a fact that this statement balanced. Mr. President, if you consider the case of any bank defaulter you will find that his accounts balanced right along. It was only when they went in and found how they balanced that they found the defalcation.

I am not charging here a defalcation, but I am simply using this as an illustration. It is very easy to make an account balance. I can hand out $100 and authorize its expenditure, and those to whom I give it may come back and hand me $20 and say they have expended the other $80, and the account balances; but that does not indicate to me for what they have exepended it; and that is what the Farm Loan Board does not do. After weeks were spent in providing this statement—in fact, it was nearly two months—after my attention was called to the fact that the statement was completed I began to analyze it. It was a task. I could go into only parts of it. Senators know the various duties of a Senator. I had not the time. I could go into parts of it only. I could but sit up nights and study these accounts, and then, when I had gone into certain items, I was up against a stone wall, because I had no documents to examine so as to determine what they meant.

So, when the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency said they were ready to proceed, I wrote the following letter to the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency:

MY DEAR SENATOR: I would suggest in connection with the continuance of the hearings respecting the Farm Loan Board matters that the following procedure be adopted:

(1) That Maj. Walter O. Woods, of the Treasury Department, who was in charge of the recent analysis of the fiscal agent's accounts, be first called before the committee for examination.

(2) That Judge Lobdell follow Major Woods and submit all vouchers in connection with payments made by checks upon the Treasury Department whose numbers I will submit in another letter.

(3) That the Farm Loan Board shall submit all books, vouchers, and memoranda in connection with the Franklin National Bank account.

(4) That certain employees of the Federal Farm Loan Board, whose names will be subsequently afforded, be called for testimony.

(5) That Governor Cooper, of the Farm Loan Board, together with Board Members Landes, Corey, and Jones, be also asked to appear before the committee for further examination.

This is a letter which I addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency when this analysis had been completed, and the letter is dated May 12, 1924.

The committee proceeded with hearings on last Wednesday. The first hearing began in the morning about 10 o'clock and lasted until noon. Major Woods was on the stand that morning. He had not finished his testimony when the recess was taken. At 2 o'clock the committee assembled again, and it proceeded with an examination of just one other witness besides Major Woods—Judge Lobdell. I think there was a third witness brought in, one called at the last moment for just a few words respecting a signature, but outside of Judge Lobdell not another witness was called, although I had asked that other witnesses be present, and that I have the privilege of examination.

Finally, after a number of objections had been made, the following took place:

Senator GLASS. I move we go into executive session.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. It has been moved that we go into executive session. If there is no objection, that will be in order.

Senator HOWELL. I would call the committee's attention to my letter of the 12th instant to Senator MCLEAN—you have a copy of it here—in which I request a certain course to be followed, and that I be allowed to present and have the privilege of examining certain witnesses. I just want to call it to the attention of the committee again.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Very well. The committee will now proceed to executive session.

They did so, and these appointees were reported out for confirmation.

So I wish it to be distinctly understood, Mr. President, that I had not finished the examination. The examination would take a considerable time, and the Banking and Currency Committee is not the proper committee before whom this matter should be presented, because there are 15 members of the Banking and Currency Committee, and it must be recognized that they can not all be present at prolonged hearings. This investigation is something that ought to be conducted by a special committee.

Mr. President, during nearly half of the sessions there were but five or less members in attendance on the Banking and Currency Committee meetings—that is, up to the time this analysis report was made. During that period some 26 hours were consumed. I occupied, in questions and answers, some 3½ hours of that time, and then my attention was challenged to the state of the board's accounts and the unlawful expenditure of money. It was then that I introduced a resolution in the Senate calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury for an analysis of the Farm Loan Board account, including the sources of their various receipts. As I have stated, it took nearly two months to furnish that report, and during that period there was no hearing by the Committee on Banking and Currency.

After the report had been made one hearing was granted, the hearing I have described, at which I was allowed to investigate less than 20 items out of hundreds of thousands of items, covering expenditures of $881,000,000, and those 20 items amounted to less than $7,000.

Naturally, I feel that no adequate investigation of the affairs of the Farm Loan Board has taken place. I feel that such an investigation is absolutely necessary. I do not say this as an enemy of the farm-loan system. I am one of its most ardent friends; but a great public enterprise like the Farm Loan Bureau, conducted by the public, can not persist unless it is handled in a manner beyond suspicion.

I am jealous of the conduct of the affairs of this institution. It has been of tremendous value to the farmers of this country, and it ought to be guarded in the most careful manner. Therefore, as this enterprise has been in existence some six years, and shortcomings have begun to develop, I think a friendly investigation into its affairs should be provided for by the Senate, so that we may know all the facts and provide for the future.

I call attention to a fact that suggests that there should be an investigation, at least in a friendly way. It cost about $4,000,000 for the expenses of the Farm Loan Board for the three years 1917, 1918, and 1919. For 1920, 1921, and 1922—I think I am stating the years correctly—these expenses and salaries amounted to about $6,000,000. Although the total of loans over those six years had aggregated in the neighborhood of $800,000,000, during the latter three-year period only $75,000,000 more was loaned than in the preceding three years.

Why this increase in expenses? It may have been entirely proper, but when you investigate the methods that have developed in the conduct of the small affairs of this institution, and when you remember the board created the office of fiscal agent and promoted one of their own number to that office at a salary of $25,000 a year, when he had been getting but $10,000, performing all duties of both fiscal agent and farm loan commissioner, it suggests that the reins have been loosened and that something should be done in the interest of the farmers, who must pay the bill.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. KING. In the examination which was made before the committee, and from the information obtained by the Senator, does he justify the increases in salaries and compensation and expenditures, or does he think from that information that the reins have been too much loosened, and that there ought to be a tightening up of the reins and more of economy and retrenchment in the administration of the affairs of that important department?

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I will answer that question in this way: It challenges my attention, but I have been in executive work, and I know how expenses may increase, and properly increase; but in view of the fact that but $75,000,000 more business was done during the latter period, and the expenses were in the neighborhood of $2,000,000 more, in the interest of the farm loan system I think it ought to be looked into by Congress.

Congress is becoming more and more a board of directors of these great institutions, and when we make an investigation of this kind it should not be looked upon as a hostile investigation, but merely as a check up to let officials know that Congress has its eye on them and proposes to determine what ought to be done; as a matter of fact, recommendations for such legislation as may be necessary should come after a careful investigation of what has been going on.

Mr. President, in my opinion, as stated before, the Farm Loan Board, and hence these nominees who have constituted a majority of that board for practically one year, are guilty of the following acts:

(1) Violation of a cardinal principle of public policy enunciated in section 6 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States, prohibiting a legislative officer from enjoying the emoluments of any office created during his incumbency. Prior to July 1, 1923, Charles E. Lobdell was a member of the Farm Loan Board and served as farm loan commissioner or chairman of the board. In addition he performed the duties of fiscal agent of the land bank system, as had all farm loan commissioners preceding him. His salary was fixed by Congress at $10,000 per annum. On June 12, 1923, at a meeting of the members of the Farm Loan Board and the 12 land bank presidents, the farm loan commissioner was relieved of the duties of fiscal agent through the creation of a new office to be known as fiscal agent, at a salary of $25,000 per annum. Of course, this was done by and with the approval of the Farm Loan Board, both as to the creation of the office and the fixing of the salary.

On the same day it was arranged that Mr. Lobdell should become the new fiscal agent, and he assumed his duties some 20 days later; that is, on the date that his resignation as member of the board and farm-loan commissioner took effect. Thus a member of a quasi-legislative board became the beneficiary of a new office with an increase in salary of two and a half times, for the performance of but part of his previous duties, a result rendered possible only by the approval of the board in question, of which he happened to be the chairman.

(2) Unlawful procedure in approving of the creation of a new official for the farm-loan system to be known as fiscal agent.

The Federal Farm Loan Bureau is the creature of Congress, and nowhere has Congress delegated authority to change the system or create additional officers. As a matter of fact, Congress has specifically named the list of officials, and each year in the Treasury appropriation bill fixes the salaries of all officials of and within the bureau.

(3) Looseness and gross carelessness in the conduct of the affairs of the board, indicating incompetency. As incredible as it may seem, during a period of about six years, the board has received and disbursed $881,000,000 and yet has never provided itself with books of account, its records consisting merely of deposit slips, check stubs, and correspondence. It recently took the Treasury Department, employing 10 accountants and working double shift, from March 12 to about May 1, or nearly seven weeks, to compile a mere statement of receipts and expenditures from the farm-board records. Moreover, the accountant in charge of this work testified that he would have been unable to make up the statement from the records afforded him without the aid of the memories of several of the employees of the board.

(4) The unlawful withdrawal of funds from the United States Treasury and the disbursement of such funds without the authority of Congress. Between $65,000 and $70,000 have been drawn from the Treasury without authority and expended for various purposes. An unofficial opinion of the Comptroller General declares these funds to belong to miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury. Moreover, under date of May 13, 1923, the Undersecretary of the Treasury has called upon the farm-loan commissioner for reinbursement of a part, if not all, of this money immediately.

(5) Looseness and neglect in the disbursement of funds. Public moneys have been expended without vouchers or receipts. Mr. Lobdell, the fiscal agent, admitted on the stand that he could not tell to whom money had been paid that had been secured by cashing certain checks. He also admitted that he had received certain sums of money for the expenditure of which he could account only in a general way.

(6) Misapplication of public funds. On September 22, 1922, Mr. Lobdell, as farm loan commissioner, opened an account with the Franklin National Bank by depositing $5,000 drawn from the Federal Treasury, part of the $65,000 to $70,000 referred to above. From that time down to February 16, 1924, further similar deposits in this bank had been made, totaling more than $37,000. This account was drawn on from time to time by the farm loan commissioner, so that the balance remaining in the bank on the last day indicated—February 16, 1924—was $86.53. The deposit in this bank was treated as a sort of petty cash fund, except that the expenditures therefrom were made without vouchers or receipts. Presents to employees were made from this fund, likewise what must be considered either loans or advances to employees. In another case one of these nominees had succeeded in drawing some $2,000 from the Treasury on account of salary for which Congress had made no appropriation. As a consequence he was called upon to put it back, a simple matter, as Farm Loan Commissioner Lobdell gave him a check on this fund, so that he could put it back in the Treasury without taking it out of his own pocket.

Mr. President, as I have indicated, I think there ought to be an investigation of the Farm Loan Board, a thorough investigation, in fact, of the whole farm loan system. Therefore I have introduced and ask consideration of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President of the Senate pro tempore is authorized to appoint a special committee of three Members, which shall investigate the Federal farm loan system and the Federal Farm Loan Board and report its findings, together with recommendations for corrective legislation. The committee is authorized to hold hearings, to sit during the sessions and recesses of the Sixty-eighth Congress, and to employ a stenographer at a cost not to exceed 25 cents per hundred words. The committee is further authorized to send for persons and papers, to require by subpœna the attendance of witnesses, the production of books and documents, to administer oaths, and to take testimony.

The expenses of the committee shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

I move that the Senate now take up the resolution (S. Res. 229) and act thereon.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of New Mexico in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. EDGE. I understood the Senator had yielded the floor with the making of his motion.

Mr. HOWELL. I make the motion that the resolution be now taken up for consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to state that inasmuch as the resolution provides that the expenses shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, under the statute relating to that subject the resolution must be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. HEFLIN. I suggest to the Senator that that might be done, and the committee could report it back in the morning.

Mr. HOWELL. I inquire which Senator is chairman of that committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] is chairman of the committee.

Mr. HEFLIN. I see the junior Senator from New Hampshire on the floor.

Mr. HOWELL. Of course, I think this is a matter of tremendous importance.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey will state it.

Mr. EDGE. As I understand the parliamentary situation, the unfinished business is Senate bill 1898. The motion made by the Senator from Nebraska is therefore not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will further state that even the introduction of the resolution will have to be by unanimous consent.

Mr. EDGE. I was just going to raise the point that the unfinished business is before the Senate; that the introduction of the resolution at this time would require unanimous consent; and that it will be necessary under the circumstances to obtain that consent.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. KING. May I have the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate? My information is that a resolution similar to the one which is now offered by the Senator from Nebraska has been pending for some time before the committee of which the Senator from New Hampshire is chairman. May I inquire of the Senator whether there is any probability that the resolution will be reported out by the committee?

Mr. KEYES. I understand, though I am simply speaking from memory, that the Senator from Nebraska introduced a resolution five or six days ago, and that it was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. I was advised a day or two later that the Senator from Nebraska had introduced another resolution in exactly the same words and requested that it lie on the table. That is the resolution to which the Senator from Nebraska has now referred, I suppose. The committee therefore has done nothing whatever about the resolution referred to it and had not been asked to do anything about it.

Mr. KING. If the Senator still permits the resolution to which he has now addressed himself to lie upon the table, will the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, at as early a date as possible, act upon the one which is now before the committee, understanding that the Senator from Nebraska permits the other resolution to lie upon the table, expecting some prompt action upon the part of the committee?

Mr. KEYES. Of course, the committee will consider fairly and as promptly as possible any resolution that is referred to it.

Mr. KING. If the Senator from Nebraska will pardon me, of course he knows better what he ought to do than do I, but in view of the statement just made by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] I think he can rely upon prompt action by the committee on his resolution. I therefore suggest that he allow the resolution for which he has just asked consideration to lie on the table. If the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate does not promptly report the resolution, he can move to discharge it from the further consideration of the resolution and bring the resolution to the attention of the Senate, when I am sure action will be taken, one way or the other.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to suggest to the Senator that if the other resolution, which is now in the hands of the committee, is not the same as this resolution——

Mr. HOWELL. It is identical with it.

Mr. NORRIS. The resolution is identical? Oh, well——

Mr. KING. I had in mind the fact that the resolutions were identical.

Mr. DIAL. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] has the floor. However, a parliamentary inquiry has been made, and the Chair will listen to it.

Mr. DIAL. I understand that the Senator from Nebraska has asked unanimous consent to introduce a resolution, and I object.

Mr. HEFLIN. No; the resolution has been already introduced.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution has already been introduced by the Senator from Nebraska, and he now moves that it be taken up for consideration. The Chair has ruled that the resolution can not be considered at this time, because it provides for the payment of expenses out of the contingent fund of the Senate and under the statute would, therefore, have to be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. The Chair further understands that a similar resolution has heretofore been introduced by the Senator from Nebraska and been referred to that committee. Inasmuch as this resolution would necessarily be similarly referred, the Chair suggests that a simplification of the procedure would be for the Senator from Nebraska to withdraw this resolution and await the report of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate on the other resolution when it would be in order for consideration.

Mr. HOWELL. Well, Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Nebraska will withdraw his motion and then permit the resolution to lie on the table, that would be the proper procedure, and the Senator would thereby get the matter in proper form from the parliamentary point of view.

Mr. HOWELL. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. DIAL. I do not ask the Senator to yield to me. I thought he had yielded the floor.

Mr. HOWELL. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to Senate Joint Resolution 128, which is lying on the table, and which reads as follows:

Resolved, etc., That no person shall be employed under the Federal farm loan act, approved July 17, 1916, or any amendment or amendments thereof, at a rate of compensation exceeding $10,000 per annum, on and after the passage of this resolution.

Mr. President, I wish to give notice that at the conclusion of the consideration of the unfinished business I shall seek to bring this joint resolution before the Senate.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, several Senators wish to discuss the question which has been before the Senate during the last few hours, so I shall not attempt to speak at length upon the unfinished business at this time, but as I have the floor I wish to make a request.

I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of Senate bill No. 1898 be dispensed with and that the bill be read for action on the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the committee amendment be first acted upon. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, we have just listened for several hours to the arraignment by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] of the Farm Loan Board. It was suggested to him on yesterday by the able Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] that this matter ought to be discussed, if discussed at all, in executive session. However, the Senator from Nebraska, who has stated that he is a friend of the Farm Loan Board, has seen proper to go on and to arraign that board here before the public. The Senator from Nebraska, I repeat, has stated that he is a friend of the system, but, Mr. President, I hope the system has not many more such friends. It seems to me that if he had had the good of that board at heart, if he had heard of anything wrong going on in connection with its operation or that there were any corrections which ought to have been made, he would have gone to the board and pointed them out. Instead of that, however, he has had that board investigated by the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate. The investigation required the assistance of 10 employees of the Government for six weeks, and I think it has been stated that they even had to have relays of employees engaged in the investigation. After that long investigation of the system from its inception eight years ago, covering an examination of the receipts and expenditures aggregating over $800,000,000, the final result is that a report is made which shows that their accounts balance to a cent; yet the Senator from Nebraska wishes to go on now and to have a resolution adopted providing for a further investigation.

The Senator from Nebraska complains of harsh treatment at the hands of the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate. He has laid the facts before the Senate; but the conclusion that some of us have come to is that the Banking and Currency Committee extended to him every courtesy and gave him every opportunity to bring out any facts that he had against the farm-loan system. It seems to me, after putting the Government to all this expense and harassing the system for all this time, when he is unable to prove wrongdoing in a single instance, he ought now to be satisfied. I hope that no other resolution on this subject that he may offer will be adopted by the Senate.

I firmly believe, Mr. President, in investigating anything that is wrong, in exposing any fraud, and in going to the bottom of any corruption; but when it comes to the point that a committee of the Senate shall be appointed to investigate any and all departments of the Government, I am satisfied that, if we follow such procedure, we will be in session here all the time and no good will ensue, and that, on the contrary, great harm will follow, as it will follow in this instance.

There is no charge, the Senator said, of any fraud or any moral wrong, but it is a mere question of bookkeeping. Mr. President, we all know that even expert bookkeepers differ. If we were to employ one set of accountants they might say that a certain system ought to be adopted, whereas if we employed another set they might claim that the system recommended by the first set was all wrong, and that an entirely different system should be adopted. So there is nothing, as it seems to me, in this instance to investigate. I am satisfied that the board has nothing to conceal from any Senator or from anyone in authority who wants information for legitimate purposes.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. DIAL. I yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. If I heard the Senator from Nebraska correctly when he was reciting the amounts paid out by Mr. Lobdell, in one instance there was paid out $500 in one week, and, I believe, $1,000 in another week, and $1,500 in another week or two. Does not the Senator think that there ought to be an accounting for those large expenditures and that Mr. Lobdell ought to be required to tell the Senate just what he did with that money and all about it?

Mr. DIAL. There was an accounting, Mr. President.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, there was a complete accounting. The Senator from Alabama evidently was not in the Chamber yesterday when the statement was made.

Mr. HEFLIN. I did not hear all the discussion yesterday for I was not here during a portion of the debate.

Mr. GLASS. There has been a complete accounting for every cent that was expended to the satisfaction of every member of the Banking and Currency Committee.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, there ought to be an accounting at all times; but where would we ever stop if we should undertake to investigate all the departments of the Government all the time? If there is anything wrong and any charge is to be made against any department of the Government it ought to be specified, but no one ought to come here in a muckraking effort to have an investigation because he imagines there is something wrong somewhere or other.

Mr. HEFLIN. I think the departments ought to be so conducted that they would not fear an investigation and that they ought to be ready and willing to have an investigation at any and all times.

Mr. GLASS. That is true of the Farm Loan Board.

Mr. DIAL. The Farm Loan Board has nothing to hide so far as I know; it has nothing to conceal. I am not against an investigation where an investigation should be had and where it would accomplish good.

Mr. HOWELL and Mr. GLASS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. DIAL. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HOWELL. I wish to call attention to the fact that a $1,000 item was one of the next items that I was coming to, but the committee would not allow me to go on with the hearing. There were 212 items in connection with the Franklin National Bank account alone, and just before I got to item 76 I was stopped and was not allowed to go into that item.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. DIAL. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I assert that the Senator from Nebraska was not stopped at any point in the proceeding. The Senator knows perfectly well that he was told by me and by other members of the committee that if he had any single item at all different in its nature to the items which he had theretofore repeatedly presented, the committee would be very glad to hear him further; but the Senator could not say, or at least did not say, that any item that he contemplated presenting was any different from the items that he had already presented. A member of the committee from Pennsylvania repeated my suggestion that the committee did not care to hear an accumulation of testimony of exactly the same sort. So the Senator from Nebraska was at liberty at any time and at all times to proceed with the inquiry if he had anything beyond mere opinions and inferences to present.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President——

Mr. GLASS. He never presented, Mr. President, a specific charge; he never did anything but draw deductions and inferences from his own suspicions.

Now, I wish to present to the Senate a sample of the sort of inquiry that the Senator from Nebraska was presenting to the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the Senator from South Carolina has the floor. If he yields to some other Senator for a speech that would be equivalent to yielding the floor. Does the Senator from South Carolina desire to yield the floor?

Mr. GLASS. I suggest to the Presiding Officer that the Chair is totally in error in assuming that I am going to make a speech.

Mr. DIAL. It is perfectly agreeable to me to yield to the Senator for an explanation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from South Carolina yields for that purpose the Chair withdraws the observation.

Mr. GLASS. What I purposed doing was answering a statement made by the Senator from Nebraska that he was shut off as he was about to present some item of tremendous importance, different from any other item that he had presented theretofore. I want to indicate to the Senate, just in a word, with the permission of the Senator from South Carolina, the character of this inquiry as it was being conducted.

For example, a check was presented covering in the aggregate the items of expenditures, as explained to the committee, of one of these periodical bond issues. That check was made in total to the chief clerk of the board, and this chief clerk would take the sum thus drawn regularly from the bank and expend it among those employees who on this emergency work had worked overtime, night and day. This particular check bore two indorsements—the indorsement of the clerk in whose name it was made and the indorsement of a Mr. Thornberry also. Now, note what happened, and just get a picture of the sort of suspicions and inferences and mere opinions that the committee was expected to sit interminably and listen to:

Senator HOWELL (holding the check in his hand). Mr. Chairman, I examined this check, and there was no Thornberry's signature on it. I examined it. You can see that it is new ink on this check. I want you gentlemen of this committee to look at that check. I examined it personally myself.

A little later on another check was presented at one of these periodical bond-sale activities of the board which also was indorsed by this chief clerk and by Mr. Thornberry. Again the Senator from Nebraska projected a mere inference and a suspicion before the committee, implying—yes, and charging—that the indorsement to this check was a forgery, and that the ink on this check was new.

Senator HOWELL. I want to state again I examined these checks and I examined the check book. I went into this field account and made notes, and my stenographer sat by me. I would swear that that second name was not on the check.

He again appealed to us to look at the ink, and stated that it was new. Now, what subsequently happened?

Mr. Thornberry was put on the witness stand, and testified that he had indorsed those checks 14 months theretofore with this chief clerk, and stated why he had indorsed them—that the check was drawn on the bank where he kept his account, the officials of which knew him personally well, and did not know this chief clerk, and that he went there with the chief clerk to identify her, and indorsed those checks then.

Mr. President, that is a fair sample of the sort of testimony and the kind of inferences that the Senator from Nebraska presented to the Banking and Currency Committee, apparently with the expectation that we were to sit there interminably and listen to that sort of thing.

Now, just one word more, with the indulgence of the Senator from South Carolina.

For what was the Banking and Currency Committee meeting? It was not meeting for the purpose of investigating the Farm Loan Board, either its receipts or its expenditures or any of its activities. No resolution of the Senate authorized it to meet for any such purpose. The Banking and Currency Committee was in session to determine the personal qualifications and fitness of four nominees to membership on the Farm Loan Board, and yet we were confronted there from day to day with testimony that had no more relevancy to the very purpose for which we were convened than if there were not a Banking and Currency Committee in existence; and the Senator from Nebraska confronted us with every cash entry that had been made by the Farm Loan Board from its institution seven years ago up to the day of the inquiry.

If there is anybody on earth who can tell me that which the Senator from Nebraska never did tell any of us—what relation to the fitness and qualifications of these four gentlemen these cash entries seven years ago had—I should like him to rise here now and tell me. They had no relation whatsoever to the matter with which the Banking and Currency Committee was immediately and directly charged.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President——

Mr. GLASS. Yet we were supposed to sit there from day to day and permit the Senator from Nebraska to present—charges? Why, no; he has never yet presented a charge. He has said, time and time again, that he did not want to be understood as impeaching the character or the integrity of one of these men. Present what? Present his mere suspicions and inferences, in which not one of the members of the committee participated.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. DIAL. I yield for a short question—not for a speech. I want to get through. I will yield for a question.

Mr. HOWELL. Very well. I should like to reply to the statement of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. DIAL. If the Senator will be brief, I shall be glad to yield to him. I do not want to yield the floor. I want to get through.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] has called attention to an incident that occurred during this examination in which I questioned the signature on the back of a check. The idea of the Senator evidently is to lead the Senate to believe that I am so prejudiced in this matter that I am unduly suspicious.

What could this check incident have to do with the fact that the Farm Loan Board kept no books, and they kept no books for the last year while these four nominees were in office? How could the question of a name on a check have anything to do with the fact that from the Franklin National Bank about $30,000 has been expended, while these nominees were in office, without any vouchers? How can it have anything to do with the fact that this committee refused to allow me to go into this $30,000 of expenditures that have taken place while these four nominees were in office?

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, as a matter of fact, it has nothing to do with any of these imaginary things which the Senator has stated, because they are purely imaginary. They are not facts.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I was not in the Senate all the time yesterday while the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] was making his speech; neither have I been able to be here all the time to-day; and I therefore do not undertake to answer all of his charges. In fact, I think it would be unnecessary to undertake to do so. I want to conclude, and I shall take up only a few minutes longer.

The Senator has arraigned Judge Lobdell here in various aspects. I want to say that, so far as I know, Judge Lobdell is a man of the very highest character, the highest standing, and one of the best-known business men in the United States. It is not my duty to defend Judge Lobdell. He does not come from my section of the country; he does not belong to my political party, but I should be a very poor kind of Senator if I were not to state my views of this distinguished man.

Early after taking my seat I had business dealings with Judge Lobdell, and have been brought in contact with him often ever since I have been in Washington, some five years. I want to say that I have met no representative of any department of the Government who stands higher in the estimation of the people who know him than does Judge Lobdell. He impressed me as a man of sincerity, of ability, of conscientiousness, and who desired to do the very best that could be done for the institutions under his charge. He is well posted in the financial world. He disposed of some $200,000,000 of bonds of these various banks per annum, and many hundreds of millions have been disposed of on advantageous terms to the banks, and the farmers of the country get the benefit of that.

My friend from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] made the statement yesterday that Judge Lobdell's salary was paid out of the Treasury. Mr. President, that statement is incorrect. It shows that he is not posted about what he is talking about. Judge Lobdell's salary is paid by the individual banks of the country, and does not come out of the Treasury; but that is not very material.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. DIAL. I yield; yes.

Mr. HOWELL. Have the farm-loan banks contributed one dollar to the payment of Judge Lobdell's salary?

Mr. DIAL. Every dollar since he has occupied this new position.

Mr. HOWELL. Not one dollar.

Mr. DIAL. I beg the Senator's pardon, then.

Mr. HOWELL. Not an assessment has been made on the banks to pay Judge Lobdell. The money has come out of the Treasury fund entirely.

Mr. DIAL. My information, then, is in error. I still maintain that the Senator's information is wrong. My information is that these 12 banks contribute their pro rata share toward Judge Lobdell's salary and not a dollar of it is paid out of the Treasury.

That brings up a point regarding the Secretary of the Treasury. I am not a defender of the Secretary of the Treasury, but this is the first time I have ever heard of him being accused of needing a guardian.

The Senator accuses the board of carelessness and of loose conduct and all kinds of unbusinesslike methods. As a matter of fact, when a bond issue is disposed of some money is held until the expenses have been liquidated; then the transaction is closed. The member banks are satisfied. They investigate the vouchers, they audit the vouchers, they approve of the payments, and the matter is closed, and nobody cares to go back behind it, so far as I know, except some one who is instigating the Senator from Nebraska—some disgruntled employee, perhaps, around here taking up the time of the Senate and causing expense to the taxpayers of the United States in our going back to investigate something where there is nothing to investigate.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCNARY in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. DIAL. I yield.

Mr. HOWELL. I would like to ask the Senator if he has ever seen an audit of any of the accounts of the Farm Loan Board by the presidents of the banks?

Mr. DIAL. No; I have not had any occasion to see any.

Mr. HOWELL. I will state for the Senator's information that there is no such audit extant.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska speaks in great suspicion of a little account down here at some bank in the city of Washington. I would like to know where this board would keep its accounts except in some bank. I confess that my experience with the Treasury is limited, but I do not presume the Treasury of the United States is prepared to carry a meal account for the Farm Loan Board or any other institution, to pay checks for meal tickets or automobile hire or something like that.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President——

Mr. DIAL. I will not yield now. My understanding is that the Secretary of the Treasury, is not prepared and would not want to handle these accounts, and has no way of turning the vouchers back. Therefore, instead of this board being condemned for having an account in some bank in Washington, I do not see how they could carry on their business without having an account in Washington.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President——

Mr. DIAL. I yield now.

Mr. HOWELL. Is the Senator aware of the fact that all of these expenses were drawn from the Treasury formerly on Treasury checks, until September 22, 1922; that the total amount that has been drawn amounts to between $65,000 and $70,000, and that only $37,000 has been drawn from outside banks? In other words, they could have continued to deal with the Treasury just as they always had dealt with the Treasury, but they wanted this account because it was handier.

Mr. DIAL. I presume they did, and they should have credit for that. I presume that is satisfactory to everybody in the United States except the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. President, that shows the folly of the Senate trying to go into the details of every department of the Government. We would be here until the year 2000 if we should allow propositions similar to this to obtain. They had a little account payable for current expenses. Any bank could return the checks, and the accounts would balance. What criticism could be made of that? I presume if the Treasury discontinued the custom, it was because they got tired.

There has also been a great fuss made here about some little accumulated interest between the Treasury and the bank. It seems to me they are competent to settle that matter, instead of bringing it here for the attention of the Senate. It is a question we are not able to solve.

Mr. President, as the Senator from Virginia said, the account balanced to the cent, and satisfied every member of the Banking and Currency Committee that everything was all right, and it does seem to me that it ought to satisfy everybody else. If my distinguished friend from Nebraska was dissatisfied with that committee, he could have moved in the Senate to have the committee discharged, and could have brought the matter up before another committee or before the Senate, or could have had some other disposition made of the matter.

Mr friend referred yesterday to my distinguished fellow citizen and fellow townsman, ex-Governor Cooper, of South Carolina, who is president of the board at this time. I could not hear the reading of all the letter, and I did not get the exact gist of some little difference of opinion between the Undersecretary of the Treasury and Governor Cooper, but I do not know that that was in any way important.

I do want to say this in behalf of Governor Cooper, that he was raised in my county on a farm. I knew him when he was a little boy, and I have known him ever since. The people of South Carolina honored him by giving him the highest position in the State at their disposal, to wit, the governorship, and I have yet to hear anyone breathe a breath of suspicion against Governor Cooper. He is simply incapable of doing anything wrong or crooked, or anything that would cause any just criticism at the hands of any well-posted man in the United States.

I know the other members of this board pleasantly, not intimately, however; but I have made some investigations, and I am glad that even the Senator from Nebraska has nothing so say against their honesty, against their integrity, and against their standing. He only criticizes some little irregularities in bookkeeping.

This matter should not have been discussed here in public, to go out and injure this great system which we have been trying to build up, a new system, a system that has enemies from without, and which should have no enemies from within.

I am satisfied that my good friend from Nebraska has been misled by some disgruntled person who has some grouch against the board, or against some member of the board, or against the system, and when the Senator fully posts himself he will see that there is nothing to investigate, he will know there is nothing wrong, and we may hope this great system may go on to the great prosperity to which it is entitled.

SENATOR BURTON K. WHEELER

Mr. STERLING obtained the floor.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McNARY in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Bayard	Brookhart	Bursum
Ashurst	Borah	Broussard	Cameron
Ball	Brandegee	Bruce	Caraway
Copeland	Harreld	Moses	Spencer
Curtis	Harris	Neely	Stephens
Dale	Heflin	Norbeck	Sterling
Dial	Howell	Norris	Swanson
Edge	Johnson, Calif.	Oddie	Trammell
Edwards	Johnson, Minn.	Overman	Underwood
Elkins	Jones, Wash.	Pepper	Wadsworth
Ferris	Kendrick	Ralston	Walsh, Mass.
Fletcher	Keyes	Ransdell	Walsh, Mont.
Frazier	King	Reed, Pa.	Warren
George	Ladd	Robinson	Wheeler
Gerry	Lodge	Sheppard	Willis
Glass	McKinley	Simmons
Gooding	McNary	Smith
Hale	Mayfield	Smoot

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article published in the New Republic of May 21, 1924, entitled "Hands off the investigations." I also ask to have printed in the RECORD an editorial published in the Christian Science Monitor of May 15, 1924, entitled "Senator WHEELER's vindication."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the New Republic]

HANDS OFF THE INVESTIGATIONS

So grave were the first disclosures made by the WALSH and WHEELER investigations that the immediate response of the country was profound humiliation. Only the recently disavowed organ of the Republican National Committee ventured brazenly to attack the exposers and minimize the exposure. But as the effect of the impact of these disclosures wore off, partly because of the very extent of the revelations, public preoccupation with private worries and bewilderment over the variety of complicated issues were exploited by various powerful forces, from a variety of motives ranging from the lowest to moral confusion, all with a view to discrediting investigation and arresting its further progress. The gathering forces against the investigations and the investigators reached their culminating reinforcement in the support of a President who, while professing a desire to vindicate the law, assumes that law and order are bounded by the Penal Code, and helped to create an atmosphere in which necessary investigation could not thrive. The President's lead was promptly followed by such guardians of the public interest as Judge Gary. The most disheartening experience of the Ballinger investigation repeats itself; the condemnation of the most powerful is reserved for the exposers and not for the exposed.

Emboldened by the successful offensive against the pending investigations in Washington, various suggestions are afloat with a view to curbing future WALSH and WHEELER investigations. Professing, of course, that wrongdoing, impropriety, and unwholesome standards in public life should be exposed, critics, who have nothing to say for the astounding corruption and corrupting soil which have been brought to light, seek to divert attention and shackle the future by suggesting restrictions in the procedure of future congressional investigations. Not only do members of the bar thus propose to hamper a power which has been exercised since 1789, but even one of our financiers, who is a self-appointed mentor for all our national ills, urges curbs upon Congress drawn from his deep study of comparative parliamentary procedure.

A proper judgment of the WALSH and WHEELER investigations involves a consideration of (1) the situation which confronted them, (2) their accomplishments, (3) their alleged abuses. Only after such consideration can we properly assess (4) the pertinence of any formal change in the procedure of congressional investigation.

(1) Situation confronting WALSH and WHEELER: When the Harding administration began—in fact preceding it—the air was full of indications of the sinister influences that were to prevail and were prevailing in the conduct of some of the vital departments of the Government. Around Fall and Daugherty suspicions steadily clustered. Washington was thick with talk, and not the talk of irresponsibles. As time went on the intimations became more and more outspoken; but every influence of authority, of powerful social connections, of the press, the whole milieu of officialdom in Washington was on the side of those in power and against disclosure and truth telling. More than that, when things could no longer be stemmed and an investigation of Daugherty's administration was entered upon by a House committee, the forces of wrongdoing rendered such an investigation abortive and futile, and thereby served to discredit further accusations and their investigation.

For nearly two years the efforts to uncover wrongdoing in the disposal of our public domain were hampered by every conceivable obstruction on the part of those in office and those influential out of office; involving members of the President's official entourage and including perjury before a Senate committee on the part of one of the closest friends of the late President and one on close terms with the present Executive. The vast investigatorial agencies of the Government not only failed to cooperate with the efforts to unearth wrongdoing; they positively sought to frustrate congressional activity.

Governmental machinery, prestige, wealth, agencies of publicity—all were for covering up things. No one who has not had some experience of the power the Government can exert is able to realize the tremendous pressure against which WALSH and WHEELER were contending. Both the hostile resources and the inertia which they had to overcome were incredible. The odds which they thus encountered must be felt, and not merely intellectually admitted and lightly dismissed.

(2) Accomplishments of WALSH and WHEELER: These are beyond question. The bills filed by the Government against the Sinclair and Doheny leases are based upon the findings of the Walsh committee, namely, corruption and conspiracy rendered possible through Secretary Fall's corruption and Secretary Denby's guileless incompetence; the disgrace of, and pending grand jury inquiry into, a recent member of the Cabinet—Fall; the resignation of another member through incompetence—Denby; the dismissal of a third member—the Attorney General—because of an enveloping, malodorous atmosphere.

It is safe to say that never in the history of this country have congressional investigations had to contend with such powerful odds, never have they so quickly revealed wrongdoing, incompetence, and low public standards on such a wide scale, and never have such investigations resulted so effectively in compelling correction through the dismissal of derelict officials. All this, it must be remembered again and again, was done by Congress against obstructing executive departments and, to put it mildly, unassisted by a President who, unlike Roosevelt, is not a crusader against wrongdoing.

(3) Alleged abuses: One would like to have a bill of particulars of these alleged abuses. Objection is frequently taken against irrelevant, unfair, and unsubstantial charges and to the character of some of the witnesses. It is not easy to be patient with such an attitude. What were the irrelevant charges before the Walsh committee, and what were the improprieties in pursuing those charges? Certainly Senator WALSH has established all the charges surrounding the oil leases up to the hilt. Objections are made to the testimony centering around alleged prenomination and preelection affairs in 1920. Surely it was relevant to ascertain whether interests were on the lookout to put into the Department of the Interior a man who, honestly or dishonestly, held one attitude rather than another toward our natural resources. Necessarily much of this was hearsay and gossip. Nevertheless there emerged definitely the fact that Hamon spent a huge sum of money for campaign purposes. If these aren't "leads" properly to be pursued, then we had better frankly admit that the power of congressional investigation is a sham and not an effective instrument for ventilating issues for the information of Congress and of the public.

What are the specific objections to be made against the hearings conducted by Senator WHEELER? Of course the character of the witnesses in many instances was disreputable. It is of the essence of the whole Daugherty affair that the Attorney General of the United States was involved in questionable association with disreputable characters. It is naïvely suggested as to these individuals that "they are not competent witnesses. But they are exhibits." But in order to be exhibits they had to be witnesses. This is the kind of hairsplitting that has for decades been attacked as a disgrace to American criminal procedure. In suggesting that WHEELER's witnesses were not competent witnesses but merely "exhibits," perhaps all that was intended was that Senator WHEELER should have preceded the calling of each one of his disreputable witnesses by a speech stating that they were disreputable. Surely this is a naïve suggestion. It is difficult at best to get witnesses to talk. This criticism is familiar to everyone who has ever had anything to do with criminal prosecutions, namely, an attempt to divert attention from the misconduct of the defendant to the character of the witnesses against him. Of course the character of a witness is a relevant item.

As to Daugherty, it was a damning item. But the testimony of such people is not at all incompetent, and their character, as the New York World pointed out in an editorial on April 24, may be conclusive testimony on the issue of the fitness of a man to be Attorney General of the United States. If by the witnesses which Senator WHEELER produced he was able to furnish a "living demonstration of the atmosphere which prevailed in and around the Attorney General of the United States," how possibly could that conclusion have been demonstrated except in the way in which Senator WHEELER demonstrated it? Eminent lawyers might have done it a little differently, but the chances are very strong that they wouldn't have done it at all. It requires pertinacity and high indifference to the winds that blow to drive through the obstacles which faced Senator WHEELER. The performance of such a man in such a situation can not be finely weighed by a distant onlooker, after the event, on an apothecary's scale. We have clear indications as to how a "better lawyer than Senator WHEELER" would have dealt with the situation. The indications are furnished by the attitude of Senator PEPPER; they are furnished by the supine silence of the bar before Senator WHEELER began, for from the time of his appointment as Attorney General lawyers widely knew Daugherty's unfitness for the post; they are revealed in the criticisms by the bar, not of Daugherty but of his exposer, after the first flicker of indignation over the disclosures had subsided.

(4) Revision of procedure of congressional investigations: Nothing in the experience of the Walsh and Wheeler investigations reveals the need of changing the process or confining the limits of congressional investigations. The proper scope and methods of procedure appropriate to congressional investigations depend on the conception of the part they play in enabling Congress to discharge its basic duties. This has been nowhere better expressed than by Woodrow Wilson in his Congressional Government:

> "It is the proper duty of a representative body to look diligently into every affair of government and to talk much about what it sees. It is meant to be the eyes and the voice and to embody the wisdom and will of its constituents. Unless Congress has and uses every means of acquainting itself with the acts and the disposition of the administrative agents of the Government, the country must be helpless to learn how it is being served; and unless Congress both scrutinizes these things and sifts them by every form of discussion, the country must remain in embarrassing, crippling ignorance of the very affairs which it is most important that it should understand and direct. The informing function of Congress should be preferred even to its legislative function."

Undoubtedly the names of people who have done nothing criminal or wrong, or nothing even offending taste, perhaps, have been mentioned in connection with these investigations.

A number of such instances appeared in connection with "Ned" McLean's name. All those references are pertinent in showing the ramifications of McLean's influence in official Washington. Also the names of counsel were mentioned who have had dealings with the Department of Justice which were wholly proper. But where so much that the Department of Justice was doing under Daugherty was not innocent it is highly important that even innocent transactions in the general field of fraud and suspicion be explained in order to separate the sheep from the goats. The question is not whether people's feelings here and there may be hurt or names "dragged through the mud," as it is called. The real issue is whether the danger of abuses and the actual harm done are so clear and substantial that the grave risks of fettering free congressional inquiry are to be incurred by artificial and technical limitations upon inquiry. Any quantitative and qualitative judgment of what WALSH and WHEELER were up against, what they produced and how they produced it, leaves the experienced and disinterested mind, duly regardful of the investigating duties of Congress, wholly without justification for changing congressional procedure.

It must be remembered that our rules of evidence are but tools for ascertaining the truth, and that these tools vary with the nature of the issues and the nature of the tribunal seeking facts. Specifically, the system of rules of evidence used in trials before juries "are mainly aimed at guarding the jury from the overweening effect of certain kinds of evidence." That system, as pointed out by Wigmore, "is not applicable by historical precedent or by sound practical policy" to "inquiries of fact determinable by administrative tribunals." Still less is it applicable to inquiries by congressional committees. Of course, the essential decencies must be observed, namely opportunity for cross-examination must be afforded to those who are investigated or to those representing issues under investigation. Despite Daugherty's statement to the contrary, that opportunity has been scrupulously given by the Brookhart committee.

It must be remembered that in various fields there is no legal protection against harm due to unfettered speech. The only safeguards are those secured by social and moral pressure. Thus the immunities enjoyed by judges and legislators for anything said by them as judges and as legislators are founded on deep experience. So also the abuses of the printing press are not sought to be corrected by legal restriction or censorship in advance, because the remedy is worse than the disease. For the same reason congressional inquiry ought not to be fettered by advance rigidities, because in the light of experience there can be no reasonable doubt that such curtailment would make effective investigation almost impossible.

Our criminal procedure has been constantly under fire by the legal profession, from Chief Justice Taft down, because of its self-defeating technicalities. In a report to the American Bar Association vigorous demand has recently been made for the liberalization of rules of evidence and procedure in criminal cases. Taken in connection with the proposal to curb the investigating powers of Congress, what is urged, in effect, is that we abandon the technical limitations which have been established to protect men from being sent to jail too readily, but introduce them into a field where they have never been resorted to and where they are wholly out of place, namely, in the exercise of the informing function of Congress.

A good deal must be left to the standards which Congress imposes upon itself and its committees; a good deal must be left to the duty of newspapers to report fairly and not sensationally, and to interpret wisely; a good deal must be left to the good sense of people.

In conclusion, there is no substantial basis for criticism of the investigations conducted by Senator WALSH and Senator WHEELER. Whatever inconveniences may have resulted are inseparable incidents of an essential exertion of governmental power, and to talk about these incidents is to deflect attention from wrongdoing and its sources.

The procedure of congressional investigation should remain as it is. No limitations should be imposed by congressional legislation or standing rules. The power of investigation should be left untrammeled, and the methods and forms of each investigation should be left for determination of Congress and its committees as each situation arises. The safeguards against abuse and folly are to be looked for in the forces of responsibility which are operating from within Congress and are generated from without.

FELIX FRANKFURTER.

[From the Christian Science Monitor, May 15, 1924]

SENATOR WHEELER'S VINDICATION

The report of the senatorial committee which has been inquiring into the circumstances attendant upon the indictment of Senator WHEELER, of Montana, constitutes a complete vindication of the accused Senator. It does not, however, deal sufficiently with the phase of that attack upon the Montana Senator which is of the utmost importance. Mr. WHEELER was conducting an investigation into alleged irregularities and corruption existing in certain executive departments of the Government. The committee of which he was the head was bringing to light, in a way that was convincing, evidence which affected very materially men of eminence under this administration and prominent figures in the Republican Party organization. Suddenly he was indicted in his home State on charges which a Senate committee now declare to be wholly without foundation. Evidence was presented to the committee which investigated the circumstances of this indictment, that witnesses before the grand jury in Montana were employees of the Republican National Committee and of the Department of Justice. It was shown, to the satisfaction of the unprejudiced mind at any rate, that the attack upon Senator WHEELER at his home was made through political agencies, by the active agents of the Republican Party organization and with the aid of employees of two executive departments.

In brief, it was shown to this committee that there was more than a reasonable suspicion that the agencies of the great Federal Government of the United States had been freely employed to "frame up" this United States Senator, to block him in the discharge of his duties, and to render nugatory all that he had been doing in the way of uncovering corruption in executive departments.

The committee, apparently, is content with reporting a vindication of Senator WHEELER, but who is to vindicate the politicians who used the agencies of two executive departments for his injury? It is to be hoped that Senator BORAH in presenting the committee report will address himself somewhat to this question.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I desire to speak upon the majority report and upon the views of the minority in the matter of the investigation of the charges against Senator WHEELER. Let me begin with an excerpt from the minority report. The report reads in part as follows:

> In the face of and contrary to what is believed to be sufficient evidence at least to warrant the action of the grand jury, the majority has specifically and definitely found that Senator WHEELER has not committed any act in violation of law. In doing this the majority has encroached upon the functions of the judicial branch of our Government. Their conclusions prejudice the issue made by the pending indictment and a plea of "not guilty" which it is assumed will be entered; and to this extent the majority report obstructs and interferes with the due administration of justice. In the face of the majority report, which will doubtless be given wide publicity in Montana, how can the Government hope to secure an unprejudiced jury to try the case? How can respect for the courts be maintained if their hands are to be tied and their freedom of action embarrassed by the unwarranted interference of a coordinate branch of the Government?

Mr. President, I am inclined to make that statement from the minority report as a kind of text for what I may say to-day. Of course, I shall make some reference to the evidence, from which the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] read at considerable length in his address on yesterday.

I can find no warrant in law or under the Constitution of the United States for this proceeding. Senator WHEELER had, so far as the record shows, been duly indicted for an offense against the United States by a Federal grand jury in Montana. That indictment is pending. So far as the record is concerned, no effort has been made and no proceedings have been taken for the purpose of setting aside that indictment.

A word as to the authority of the Senate in regard to its membership. It is provided in section 5 of Article I as follows:

> Each House shall be the judge of the election, returns, and qualifications of its own Members, and a majority of each shall constitute a quorum to do business, but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day and may be authorized to compel the attendance of absent Members in such manner and under such penalties as each House may provide.

The pertinent part of this, of course, is the very first clause, that "each House shall be the judge of the election, returns, and qualifications of its own members." What are the constitutionally prescribed qualifications of a Member of the Senate? They refer to age, they refer to citizenship, they refer to inhabitancy. Is he 30 years of age? Has he been nine years a citizen of the United States? Has he been a resident or an inhabitant of the State from which he is chosen for a period of one year before he was chosen? Those are the three qualifications upon which the Senate undoubtedly has a right to pass.

One further qualification may be involved in the word "election" and in the right of the Senate to be the judge of the election and returns of elections of its Members. The election of its Members, it may be said, or of any Member, may have been accomplished through fraud and corruption. The Senate, of course, would refer a charge of that kind to its Committee on Privileges and Elections, and it would be determined from the report of that committee or by the action of the Senate upon the report of the committee as to whether the Member was disqualified because of the use of fraud and corruption in securing his election.

So, Mr. President, I see no constitutional authority for this proceeding, a proceeding upon the part of the Senate to determine the guilt or innocence of a Senator who has been lawfully charged with having violated a statute of the United States by a grand jury and whose case is pending in the court where the indictment was found. True, here is another clause of the Constitution that might possibly be invoked by those who entertain another view:

> Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its Members for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a Member.

I do not believe that it will be contended for a moment that this provision of the Constitution applies to this case or to any like case. The behavior here involved can not be such as is contemplated by the term "disorderly behavior" in the Constitution. An act committed by the Senator, this or any other Senator, outside of the Senate of the United States, and involving other conduct quite apart and distinct from his conduct here in the Senate, can not be disorderly behavior within the meaning of the Constitution.

It is said that with the concurrence of two-thirds the Senate may expel a Member. But what principle would be infringed if, after an indictment has been returned by a grand jury, the Senate of the United States should proceed to act upon that, determine the guilt or innocence of the Member, and expel him before trial by the petit jury having jurisdiction in the case? I contend that such a course would be violative of the principle which recognizes the three several departments of the Government—the executive, the judicial, and the legislative. Already the judicial department of the Government, through the finding of the indictment, has jurisdiction in this case and of the alleged offense upon the part of Senator WHEELER.

As I have tried to show in a brief allusion to that matter in the minority report, to now summon before a committee of the Senate, appointed to investigate this case, the witnesses for the prosecution in advance of the trial by the petit jury in Montana would be to give the Senator from Montana an advantage which no other person, no other citizen of the United States, would have. The effect of publishing the report of the majority in this case, circulated, as it will be, throughout the State of Montana, read by every qualified juryman probably within that State, can be nothing else than to prejudice in advance of trial public sentiment against the Government and in favor of the defendant who is charged.

Mr. President, I think this case is absolutely without parallel in our legislative history. There is nothing like it. It is hoped that there will be nothing like it in the future. I hope now that Senators will rid themselves, if they have any feeling of that kind in advance, of all partisan and all personal feeling and be just as impersonal as they possibly can be in the consideration of this question and the fundamental principles involved.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I would like to inquire of the Senator if, in his judgment, the Senate exceeded its authority in investigating the truth or authorizing the investigation of the truth of the charge made in the indictment? Where does the Senator find his authority for investigating the grand jury and determining whether it acted on probable or improbable cause?

Mr. STERLING. I have expressed myself before on that, I will say to the Senator. I expressed doubt of our right to go to that extent; but I conceded that much that we might go to that extent; that since it had been charged by Senator WHEELER so vigorously that this was a frame-up and that the Government officials and prosecuting officers had been influenced by improper motives, I said we will go at least that far to determine whether such are the facts.

Mr. GEORGE. I fail wholly to see how the Senate of the United States could investigate any grand jury sitting in any State to determine whether or not that grand jury acted on probable or improbable cause.

Mr. STERLING. The charge was specifically made by the Senator from Montana that this was a "frame-up" and that the Government officers instituting the prosecution were governed by improper motives.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; I understand that.

Mr. STERLING. I thought the evidence taken before the committee might develop the fact as to whether or not that was true.

Mr. GEORGE. I am curious to know how the Senator could determine whether or not it was a "frame-up" if he were not going into an investigation as to the facts in the case.

Mr. STERLING. The facts to that extent I was willing to have presented and discussed and considered.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator certainly knows that even perjured testimony, if the grand jury were acting in good faith, might afford probable cause for its action.

Mr. STERLING. That may be true; and I think, perhaps, the way would have been left open before the committee to show that the testimony that was given before the grand jury was perjured testimony. I do not know that I should have objected to that.

Mr. GEORGE. That seems to me Mr. President, to be going into the merits of the charge; and I do not see how the Senator can escape that conclusion.

Mr. STERLING. No; it is not going into the merits of the charge exactly to show that some witness had perjured himself in giving testimony.

Mr. President, there is a case from which I want to read and read liberally. It is the case of Burton against The United States, which is found in Two hundred and second United States Supreme Court Reports. There is more of a parallelism between that case and the case at bar, if I may use that expression, than we are apt to think on first blush, both in regard to the law and in regard to the evidence in the case. First, I wish to read from the opinion of the court with reference to the law involved. The statute under which Mr. Burton, who was then a Senator from Kansas, was indicted is substantially the same as the statute here. It was section 1782 modified by the later section 113 of the Criminal Code, to which attention is called in the report.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GLASS. May I inquire of the Senator—and I make the inquiry because I am not familiar with the facts—whether or not at the time of his indictment Senator Burton was engaged in any investigation of the Department of Justice?

Mr. STERLING. No; I do not think so. He was indicted, I will say to the Senator from Virginia, for doing some work before the Post Office Department.

Mr. GLASS. But he was not engaged at the time in an investigation involving the integrity of the Department of Justice?

Mr. STERLING. Oh, no. I think I understand what the Senator means now.

Mr. GLASS. I hope so. I try to make myself understood.

Mr. STERLING. Yes; and I understand the insinuation there is in it, I will say to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. There is no insinuation about it at all.

Mr. STERLING. I recall the Senator's intimation yesterday in a colloquy with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and what was then said about my acting the part of a prosecutor in this case, and his charge that the Department of Justice—he did not say the Department of Justice but he meant it; he said "one of the executive departments of the Government"—was engaged, as I understood the Senator from Virginia, in practically a blackmailing proceeding.

Mr. GLASS. Yes; but what has that to do with my simple and courteous inquiry of the Senator from South Dakota as to the facts in this case? I do not recall the exact circumstances of the indictment of Mr. Burton, and I wanted to know of the Senator from South Dakota if Mr. Burton was at the time of his indictment engaged in an investigation of the Department of Justice.

Mr. STERLING. On the face of it the Senator's question is fair, and I say, no.

Mr. GLASS. My question is intended to be fair.

Mr. STERLING. I say, in answer to the Senator's question, no.

Mr. GLASS. I merely want to develop the fact.

Mr. STERLING. The court says:

> A statute like the one before us has direct relation to those objects and can be executed without in any degree impinging upon the rightful authority of the Senate over its Members or interfering with the discharge of the legitimate duties of a Senator.

The court refers to the statute, the object of which is apparent, although the court discusses it at some length.

> The proper discharge of those duties does not require a Senator to appear before an executive department in order to enforce his particular views, or the views of others, in respect of matters committed to that department for determination. He may often do so without impropriety, and so far as existing law is concerned may do so whenever he chooses, provided he neither agrees to receive nor receives compensation for such services. Congress, when passing the statute, knew, as indeed everybody may know, that executive officers are apt, and not unnaturally, to attach great, sometimes, perhaps, undue, weight to the wishes of Senators and Representatives. Evidently the statute has for its main object to secure the integrity of executive action against undue influence upon the part of members of that branch of the Government whose favor may have much to do with the appointment to, or retention in, public position of those whose official action it is sought to control or direct.
> The evils attending such a situation are apparent and are increased when those seeking to influence executive officers are spurred to action by hopes of pecuniary reward. There can be no reason why the Government may not, by legislation, protect each department against such evils; indeed, against everything, from whatever source it proceeds, that tends or may tend to corruption or inefficiency in the management of public affairs. A Senator can not claim immunity from legislation directed to that end simply because he is a member of a body which does not owe its existence to Congress and with whose constitutional functions there can be no interference. If that which is enacted in the form of a statute is within the general sphere of legitimate legislative, as distinguished from executive and judicial action, and not forbidden by the Constitution, it is the supreme law of the land—supreme over all in public stations as well as over all the people. "No man in this country," this court has said, "is so high that he is above the law. All the officers of the Government, from the highest to the lowest, are creatures of the law, and are bound to obey it. Nothing in the relations existing between a Senator, Representative, or Delegate in Congress and the public matters with which, under the Constitution, they are respectively connected from time to time can exempt them from the rule of conduct prescribed by section 1782. The enforcement of that rule will not impair or disturb those relations or cripple the power of Senators, Representatives, or Delegates to meet all rightful or appropriate demands made upon them as public servants.

I pass over much of the opinion because I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the language of the court concerning the instructions or the failure to give certain instructions to the jury. I read from page 373.

> It is insisted, however, that the court below erred in not directing the jury to acquit the defendant; in other words, that the evidence in support of the indictment was so meager that the jury could not properly have found him guilty of any offense. We can not assent to this view—

There was a great conflict of testimony in this case, but there was enough to send the case, in the opinion of the court, to the jury for decision—

> We can not assent to this view. There was beyond question evidence tending to establish on one side the defendant's guilt of the charges preferred against him; on the other side, his innocence of those charges. It will serve no useful purpose to set out all the testimony. It is sufficient to say that the whole evidence has been subjected to most careful scrutiny, and our conclusion is that the trial court was not authorized to take the case from the jury and direct a verdict of not guilty. That course could not have been pursued consistently with the principles that underlie the system of trial by jury. It was for the jury to pass upon the facts, and, as there was sufficient evidence to go to the jury, this court will not weigh the facts and determine the guilt or innocence of the accused by the mere preponderance of evidence, but will limit its decision to questions of law.

In its charge to the jury the circuit court held the scales of justice in even balance, saying all that was necessary to guard the rights of the accused. Nothing seems to have been omitted that ought to have been said nor anything said that was not entirely appropriate. Upon the general question of guilt or innocence, and as to the rules by which the jury should be guided in their consideration of the case, the circuit court, in substance, said that the indictment was not evidence in any sense, but only an accusation which it was incumbent upon the Government to sustain by proof establishing guilt beyond a reasonable doubt; that the presumption of law was that he was innocent of the accusation as a whole and as to every material element of it, and that such presumption abided with him from the beginning to the end of the trial, and required, at the hands of the jury, an acquittal, unless a careful, intelligent, fair consideration of the whole evidence, attended by the presumption of innocence, produced in the mind, beyond a reasonable doubt, the conviction that the defendant was guilty; and that they, the jury, were the sole judges of the credibility of the witnesses and of the weight to be attached to their testimony.

So, Mr. President, the benefit of every presumption that is in favor of the defendant in a criminal case will be accorded to Senator WHEELER when he appears for trial before the petit jury in the State of Montana—every one of them. What more can he ask than that?

Mr. President, let me submit another view for a moment. We understand how this case stands before the Senate here to-day; but suppose it were the case of a man who was in the minority and that minority was a small minority in the Senate of the United States. He has been indicted in his own home State; he protests his absolute innocence; he says he is not guilty, and he wants to appear before a petit jury in that State and show that he is not guilty; and yet the Senate of the United States, under the influence of cabal or faction or party prejudice, should say to that man, "We are going to try you here; we are going to determine your guilt or innocence here in this forum." That is the situation here; a parallel case, with the shoe, in a sense, upon the other foot.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. Does not the Senator think that a United States Senator is entitled, as early as possible, to have the body in which he sits as a Member express its opinion as to whether or not he has been slandered in being charged with a criminal offense?

Mr. STERLING. No, sir; not, under the circumstances, to express its opinion as to his guilt or innocence. Let me say to the Senator from Alabama that I shall not object to the Senator from Montana sitting here. I shall not object to his keeping his place in the Senate, having his vote, having his place on committees, doing his work here; but I should expect that he would appear before the trial court, whenever it meets, to defend his case there. I am raising no question as to his right to sit here.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Does not the Senator remember that just exactly the case he speaks of was heard and determined in this body, namely, the case of a Member who was indicted and was insisting, before the Senate acted, that he should be tried by a petit jury?

Mr. STERLING. When? Where?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Right in this body.

Mr. STERLING. When?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Away back in 1807.

Mr. STERLING. No; I do not remember it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I shall be glad to call the attention of the Senator to it.

Mr. STERLING. If the Senator will call it to my attention later, I may have something to say about it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota further yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. STERLING. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. In view of the fact that the main witness on whose testimony this flimsy charge against Mr. WHEELER was founded——

Mr. STERLING. Yes; another prejudgment of the case.

Mr. HEFLIN (continuing). Mr. Coan admitted or stated before the committee that he went up to see what he could find on WHEELER at the instance of the Republican National Committee, and when the question was asked, "Why did you do that?" he said, "Well, WHEELER was attacking the administration, and nobody would get up and reply," and he criticized Republican Senators for not saying something in reply to Senator WHEELER, and he at the instance of the Republican National Committee goes up to see if he can not get something against a Senator who has led a fight to oust a crooked Republican Attorney General——

Mr. STERLING. I do not think that is a fair inference, by any means, to draw from the testimony of Mr. Coan, if the Senator will read that testimony.

Mr. HEFLIN. I read it yesterday.

Mr. STERLING. Let me proceed:

The circuit court was equally direct and impartial in what it said in relation to the particular issues of fact raised by the indictment and evidence. After explaining the nature of the proceeding before the Post Office Department, in respect of which, the indictment alleged, the defendant acted as counsel for the Rialto Co., for compensation received and to be received, and after referring, with some fullness, to the specific charges in the several counts, the court called attention to the questions that were common to all the counts.

And I read this because it is so pertinent and appropriate here.

It said to the jury: "Was the defendant a Senator of the United States for the State of Kansas during the times covered by the transactions under investigation? It is admitted that he was, and therefore you will have no difficulty in determining that. Was the Rialto Grain & Securities Co. an existing corporation carrying on business of the character described during the times covered by the transactions under investigation? There was proof that it was, and no proof to the contrary, so you will have no difficulty with that. Was a proceeding pending before the Post Office Department from November 18, 1902, to March 26, 1903, to determine whether or not a fraud order should be issued against that company?"

That was the matter in which it was charged that Senator Burton had appeared in behalf of the Rialto Co. The question was as to whether a fraud order should be issued by the Post Office Department or not.

If the evidence shows that the officers of the Post Office Department, at the instance of private individuals or otherwise, had before that time set on foot an inquiry to determine whether or not satisfactory evidence existed that the Rialto Grain & Securities Co. was engaged in conducting a scheme or device for obtaining money through the mails by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations, or promises, as charged in the indictment; and if the evidence further shows that that inquiry had not been concluded, and was, during the period named, in the charge of any of the officers of the Post Office Department then charged with the performance of any duty in respect of such inquiry—then I charge you that there was such a pending proceeding before the Post Office Department, as described in the indictment, and as referred to in the statutes before mentioned; and also that it was a proceeding in which the United States was both directly and indirectly interested.

Mr. President, it is not necessary now, in the first place, that Senator WHEELER should have appeared before the Commissioner of the General Land Office, Mr. Spry. According to this authority—and I think it is in accord with other authorities—if he appears before any official of that department having charge of or connected with the business about which he wishes to interview the department it is sufficient, and comes within the plain terms of the statute.

In this connection I want to call attention to one thing so frequently alluded to by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] in his speech, and I think by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] the other day, to the effect that he was not an attorney of record.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. STERLING. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I did call attention to the fact that he was not an attorney of record, but I did not assert that it was necessary for him to be an attorney of record in order to be guilty. That was one of the incidents of the proof. Mr. Spry testified that anyone who appeared there to urge a cause or to represent a cause was noted upon the docket and noted in the record. I called attention to that fact as an evidenciary fact of the fact that he was not there.

Mr. STERLING. I think the Senator from Idaho knows full well that to make a man liable under this indictment or under this charge he would not need to be an attorney who was registered in the Land Department or in the General Land Office at all.

Mr. BORAH. Oh, no; that was just one of the evidenciary facts in the case—that is all.

Mr. STERLING. I read a little further from this opinion.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have been endeavoring to follow the discussion of the Burton case by the Senator. I have not been able, however, to apprehend exactly what the point is that the Senator is seeking to establish.

Mr. STERLING. The point is simply this—that in order that Senator WHEELER or anybody else might be liable under the charge made, he would not have to be a registered attorney in the Land Department or registered as counsel at all. That was not necessary.

Mr. WALSH of Montana and Mr. ROBINSON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. STERLING. I yield first to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I was going to remark that I rather think everybody will concede that.

Mr. STERLING. Well, it ought to be conceded.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from South Dakota whether anyone has contended that it is necessary for Mr. WHEELER to have been registered in order to have violated the statute against practicing in the department?

Mr. STERLING. No; I do not think anyone has.

Mr. ROBINSON. Then may I inquire of the Senator why he addresses himself in such detail to that proposition?

Mr. STERLING. I am not addressing myself in great detail to it. I will say to the Senator from Arkansas that I mentioned it rather incidentally than otherwise, because it was very appropriate to my remarks here.

Mr. ROBINSON. Of course, I have no objection to the Senator addressing himself in detail to any feature of the subject that he thinks necessary, relevant, and material; but since no issue is made upon the point I wondered just why it is that the Senator finds it necessary.

Mr. STERLING. I think Governor Spry was asked, when on the stand, as to whether Mr. WHEELER was a registered attorney or not, and the Senator from Idaho made mention of the fact, and quoted from Governor Spry's testimony in that regard.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, of course I asked Governor Spry if he had been registered as an attorney; and if Governor Spry had answered "Yes; he was registered as an attorney, and appeared as an attorney," I have an idea that the Senator from South Dakota would have gone into great detail on that feature of it.

Mr. STERLING. I probably would. Yes, sir; I probably would have gone into detail about it.

It [the court] then called the attention of the jury to the particular counts charging the defendant with having agreed with the Rialto Co. to receive a stated compensation for services to be rendered in the proceeding before named. Touching those counts, the court said: "Did he make such an agreement?" That he made an agreement of some character to act as counsel for that company for a stated compensation is conceded. The real question is—

I should like to have Senators have this particular proposition in mind with reference to certain features of this case—

The real question is whether that agreement included, among other matters in relation to which he was to serve the company, the proceeding in the Post Office Department before named.

And the question arises in this case—I will say so now—whether an agreement for a retainer of $10,000 a year included other services than that of attending to certain cases out in the State of Montana and before the State courts of Montana. That is the question.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; if the Senator pleases; that is not the question. The question, according to the rule the Senator has just read, is whether the retainer, the contract of employment, contemplated services in the matter of the permits referred to in the charge against Mr. WHEELER.

Mr. STERLING. I do not see any particular difference between the statement made by the Senator from Arkansas and my own statement in that regard.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator knows what he said, he is bound to recognize a very material difference. The Senator from South Dakota stated that the real question was whether the employment contemplated other services than representation of Mr. Campbell in the courts of Montana. I say, that according to the rule he has just read the real question is not respecting other services, but whether it contemplated the service referred to in the indictment, namely, in connection with the oil permits.

Mr. STERLING. Let me read this statement again:

The real question is whether that agreement included, among other matters in relation to which he was to serve the company, the proceeding in the Post Office Department before named. Upon that question the evidence is conflicting, and it is your duty to weigh the evidence and determine the truth.

We may concede that it is conflicting in this case.

If, among other things, it was intended by the defendant and the Rialto Grain & Securities Co. in making the agreement that he would, in part consideration for the compensation he was to receive, appear as agent or attorney of such company before the Post Office Department, or any of its officers charged with any duty or having any authority over such fraud order proceedings, for the purpose or with the intent of influencing or obtaining action on their part favorable to such company in said proceeding, whether by way of stopping the investigation or ultimately preventing the issuance of a fraud order, then I charge you that the agreement of the defendant was violative of the statute; otherwise it was not. The offense prescribed in the statute consists in the agreement to receive compensation for the rendition of such services. The mere agreement to render the services is not an offense. It is the agreement to receive compensation for the rendering of them which constitutes the offense.

It should be carefully observed that the actual rendition of services is not a necessary element of this offense. The offense is complete and the defendant's guilt is established if the evidence shows that he made an agreement to render such services for compensation.

I further charge you—

Said the trial court in its charge—

that if he appeared as agent or attorney of such company before the Post Office Department, or any of its officers charged with any duty or having any authority over such fraud order proceeding, for the purpose or with the intent of influencing them in respect of their action in said proceeding, and did then arrange with the department, or any of its officers, that a hearing should be had in respect of such matter, and then also assured the department, or any of its officers, that it was the purpose of said company to comply strictly with the law, and then also arranged that no action should be taken against said company in said proceeding without his first being notified thereof, that that would constitute services within the meaning of the statute.

Mr. President, I have read at length from this case in order that our minds in a way might be prepared for what I believe to be a just and proper consideration of the present case.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator a moment ago stated that I had not correctly quoted Mr. COAN's testimony. With his permission, I would like to read just a few lines. I read now from the record:

The CHAIRMAN. Who employed you to go to Montana?

Mr. COAN. Mr. Lockwood—George B. Lockwood—of the Republican National Committee.

Senator SWANSON. Is he a member of the Republican National Committee?

Mr. COAN. Yes, sir.

Senator SWANSON. And he is also interested in the National Republican?

Mr. COAN. Yes, sir; he is secretary of the Republican National Committee.

Senator SWANSON. At that time were they interwoven?

Mr. COAN. I do not know the connection exactly. I did not ask him when he gave me the job whether they were interwoven or not.

The CHAIRMAN. You may take the witness.

Senator SWANSON. Did he tell you the purpose for which he employed you?

Mr. COAN. Yes; I was sent out to Montana to investigate some of these stories about Senator WHEELER. WHEELER had been attacking the administration and everybody in public life here, and nobody seemed to be willing to get up and answer him, and they thought it was up to somebody to find out who this fellow was and what he had been doing.

Senator SWANSON. Who thought so?

Mr. COAN. The Republican National Committee.

Senator SWANSON. And they sent you there for that purpose?

Mr. COAN. Yes.

And so forth.

That is what I stated awhile ago more briefly than I have stated it now, and I did so from memory. I ask the Senator now if he does not think I quoted Mr. Coan correctly?

Mr. STERLING. My attention was diverted, and I could not say whether the Senator quoted him correctly or not. I am going to assume that he did for the purpose of the case.

Mr. HEFLIN. I have read it now. It is correct in the hearing, is it not?

Mr. STERLING. I think it is not material to the real inquiry before the Senate, I want to say to the Senator from Alabama, with all due respect.

Mr. HEFLIN. I submit to the Senator that if a Republican National Committee or a Democratic National Committee seeks to get something on a Senator who is leading a fight as a Senator in the interest of good government, and the purpose of getting that something is to cripple him and to smear him, as it has been suggested, if the Senator does not think that is a material thing for the Senate to consider? If committees can do things like that, the time will come when Senators will be afraid to attack crooked officials, backed by big, crooked interests of the country.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, after referring to this authority, and at the length I have, I want to give now a little attention to the testimony, and I hope to be reasonably brief in that. I can not help, in reading some of this testimony, from recalling an old quotation from Shakespeare, I think it is, and I think it occurs in Hamlet, to this effect, if not the exact language:

The lady doth protest too much, methinks.

I call attention to the testimony of Mr. Stout, briefly, to two or three things he said. Mr. Stout was not a witness before the grand jury. He is an acquaintance of Mr. WHEELER and of Mr. Campbell, and in the course of the inquiry this occurred:

The CHAIRMAN. Now, you may state the conversation that you had with Mr. WHEELER.

Mr. STOUT. Well, I advised him of Mr. Campbell's desire to retain him—his firm. We talked it over for some time. He stated finally the terms under which he would undertake the case. I told him that that was a matter that would have to be taken up with Mr. Campbell, and that I would telephone him; and during the course of that conversation Mr. WHEELER stated that, of course, he could not represent him except in the State courts there. In other words, assuming that Mr. Campbell might have some business in the public-land department of the Government, he advised me at that time to so advise Mr. Campbell that he would not represent him in anything except the litigation local to Montana and in the State courts.

Mr. President, the one thought I have in mind in hearing testimony of that kind—and there is more like it in the course of the investigation—is this, that the grand jury, with the evidence before it as it was, might have looked upon a statement like that, had Mr. Stout himself been before the grand jury, as a statement somewhat akin to a self-serving declaration, or a statement that was so obviously refuted by other testimony that it should not be regarded.

Again and again throughout this testimony in this very apparent attempt to show that Mr. WHEELER, when spoken to in the first instance in regard to it, said that he could not do anything outside of business in the courts of the State of Montana; and yet, hardly does he reach Washington before he appears in the office of Mr. Booth, the Solicitor of the Interior Department, and is by Mr. Booth introduced to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, Governor Spry, and in the first conversation on that mere introduction he refers to the constituent of his, Mr. Campbell, for whom he desires just and fair treatment. It shows that he was at least interested in Mr. Gordon Campbell's affairs from the time he went there. I will show a little later on the relationship of Mr. Booth to this whole transaction.

Let it be remembered that this evidence shows that there are two indictments now pending in the State of Montana against Mr. Gordon Campbell, indictments for using the mail for fraudulent purposes, and it was in his interest that Mr. WHEELER spoke to Governor Spry, and spoke to Edwin Booth, the solicitor of the department; and, mind you, the evidence further shows the intimate friendly relations between Mr. Booth and Mr. WHEELER for years past. I think the testimony shows that their families visited each other soon after Mr. WHEELER's arrival here in Washington.

Turning over a little further, I quote from Mr. Campbell's testimony:

The CHAIRMAN. What was the value of the property covered by these lawsuits? To what extent were your entire holdings involved?

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is a pretty hard matter, Senator. We have quite a large oil field, and it is quite valuable. The area is about four times larger than the Teapot Dome.

Reference is made to Mr. Beaulieu, and the statement is that "Mr. Beaulieu was our title lawyer." If I remember the testimony correctly, Mr. Beaulieu was in the office occupied by Mr. Campbell at Great Falls, Mont.

Further on the chairman called the attention of Mr. Campbell to the conversation that Mr. Stout had had with Mr. WHEELER, and Mr. Campbell said:

I think Mr. Stout came to Great Falls, and we were quite friendly, and I used to talk my matters over considerably with Mr. Stout, being a friend, and I had told him, or practically he knew, about my lawyers, and how some of them had not treated me right, as I called it; so I said: "It is funny that I can not get a lawyer that will stand pat with me and will work for me and make a fight." Most of the lawyers, when I would take them in, would want to compromise with somebody and give them a lot more of my land—compromise instead of making a fight.

No particular point is made in regard to that testimony of Mr. Campbell. Then the following occurred:

The CHAIRMAN. State what it was—the terms.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. WHEELER asked me the character of these suits, and, in fact, I think Mr. WHEELER had known in a general way what they were, and I told him about the suits that were coming up and what I wanted to do in starting some other suits, which we did, countersuits, and I wanted him to handle all of my litigation on these suits, and we talked the matter over from his standpoint, and he informed me—

Here comes a repetition again of the statement made by Mr. Stout, although it does not appear that Mr. Campbell had asked him as to whether or not he would be in a position to take the matters at the land office here and try to adjust the matter of permits. He said:

And he informed me that, of course, he could not do anything for me if any land matter came up. I told him that Mr. Beaulieu was attending to all our land matters; that he was employed for that purpose.

Senator STERLING. Exactly what did you mean by "land matters" there?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, I had a permit, and some of our leases were in bad shape. We had to clear the title of them. There were a great many mortgages against this land and liens in different ways that had to be cleaned up.

Where in the the name of common sense would the title be cleared except before the Land Department here in Washington, the department which had jurisdiction over these oil and gas land permits?

Unconsciously, I think, not realizing the effect of it, Mr. Campbell referred, when I asked him what was included in the land matters, at once to the fact that he had a permit.

Mr. HEFLIN. If the Senator will permit me, Mr. Stout and Mr. WHEELER and all testified that they could not represent him in matters——

Mr. STERLING. Oh, I have quoted their testimony, their statements, verbatim as they made them.

Mr. HEFLIN. But the Senator said that the titles would have to be cleared here. That would not make any difference in view of the fact that they stated they could not remain here.

Mr. STERLING. I will show the connection a little later between Mr. WHEELER's activities, if I may so term them, and the matter of permits.

Mr. BORAH. I have only one suggestion to make to the Senator. I hope it will not interfere with his argument. I am afraid the Senator arguing so earnestly here that Mr. WHEELER is guilty will have a bad effect upon the jury in Montana.

Mr. STERLING. I intended at the outset to say that if I seemed to get earnest in the course of the discussion it was perhaps habitual with me, and I did not mean thereby to be personal.

Mr. BORAH. I do not object to the Senator getting earnest. He is more interesting when he is earnest. But the Senator is complaining that we are arguing for Senator WHEELER's innocence, and therefore may prejudice the jury in Montana toward his innocence, while the Senator is arguing that he is guilty, and I am wondering what effect that may have in Montana.

Mr. STERLING. I was thinking about the argument of the Senator from Idaho yesterday, the forceful, able, strong argument which he made for the purpose of showing that Mr. WHEELER could not possibly be guilty. If there is anything to be said in that respect, consider them as in a way an offset.

Mr. BORAH. Very well.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. It just occurred to me that the Senator from Idaho has made no concealment of the fact that he does think that Senator WHEELER is innocent, and his argument confessedly was to convince the Senate of that fact, whereas the Senator now speaking has insisted that he is not after convicting Senator WHEELER and yet the tendency of his whole argument is in that direction.

Mr. STERLING. I hope the Senator from Virginia will take this view of it, that perhaps I am earnest in regard to the inferences which I think from the whole testimony the grand jury might draw, and not as expressing any conviction of mine that Mr. WHEELER is guilty.

Mr. BORAH. As I understand, the Senator is then addressing his argument to the fact that there was probable cause for action upon the part of the grand jury?

Mr. STERLING. Yes; that I think is apparent.

Mr. HEFLIN. In that connection, the Senator is aware of the fact that the district attorney leads in the investigation of cases before the Federal grand jury and that this district attorney was appointed by Mr. Daugherty.

Mr. STERLING. That has an awful significance, that he was appointed by Mr. Daugherty. He might for all that be the best United States district attorney in the whole country.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator a question. I do not quite understand the Senator's position here, having filed a minority report and frankly saying that his object is to show that the grand jury had probable cause in returning the indictment. Now, the Senator is a very fair-minded man. I want to ask him if that is not raising a fictitious question——

Mr. STERLING. Oh, no.

Mr. GEORGE. And if in his judgment it is not purely a fictitious issue that is being raised? Whatever may have been the correct view of the matter, the Senate did appoint a committee to make an investigation and the committee made the investigation. There is a majority report exonerating Senator WHEELER. There is a minority report filed by the Senator from South Dakota, and that minority report confines itself to one proposition, to wit, that the grand jury acted on probable cause. Does that appeal to the Senator as being a fair way to dispose of a question that touches the honor of a Member of this body? If the minority report should receive the approval of the Senate, are we to vote to reject the majority report upon the ground that the grand jury in Montana had probable cause, shutting our eyes to the more pertinent inquiry dealt with entirely in the majority report that Senator WHEELER was entirely guiltless of any offense?

I want to ask the Senator candidly if he does not think that he is raising a fictitious question, and if he does not think that he is calling upon the Senate to vote on this important matter, involving as it does the honor of a fellow Senator as well as the honor of the Senate itself, upon a fictitious issue?

It seems to me that is very vital. The Senator's argument may be ever so impressive as an argument why the Senate ought never to have appointed the committee to make the investigation; but the investigation has been made, the majority report is before us, and it exonerates Senator WHEELER. Are we to reject that majority report upon the purely fictitious issue now presented to us, to wit, that while that may be true, nevertheless the grand jury in Montana had probable cause for its action? That is the question; that is the plain question; and I want to ask the Senator if he thinks he is dealing fairly with that question?

Mr. STERLING. Which of the two views is the better, the more reasonable view? Mr. WHEELER having been indicted by a grand jury, with the case yet to be tried before a petit jury, which is the better and more reasonable rule, to now pass upon the question of the guilt or innocence of Mr. WHEELER, or, in the face of the charge that this was a frame-up and that the Government officials acted improperly and with improper motives, determine the question as to whether or not there was probable cause?

Mr. GEORGE. I would say to the Senator that he seems to be confusing the two points. We are not trying Mr. WHEELER on the indictment for the purpose of imposing sentence.

Mr. STERLING. That is true.

Mr. GEORGE. We are not usurping the function of the court. We are acting as a Senate.

Mr. STERLING. But the point is that the matter will be before the petit jury to determine, and for us to determine in the Senate that he is innocent of the matter with which he is charged is sure to prejudice the jury that will be called to try the cause.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand; but I am putting the question to the Senator in this way. What he now says would have been pertinent in resistance to the motion to appoint a committee in the Senate or to hear that testimony, but the committee was appointed and the testimony was heard. There is before the Senate a majority report exonerating Mr. WHEELER, not dealing with the question of the propriety or impropriety of the grand jury action, and the Senator raises here, and I repeat it, a purely fictitious question. I ask him if he believes it is fair to raise a fictitious issue when a serious question touching the honor of a Member of this body, involving a crime against the laws of the country, a question that goes to the very honor of the body itself that undertakes the investigation—is that fair, is it just, and how can the Senator justify the raising of an issue that he himself must concede to be purely fictitious?

Mr. STERLING. I justified the minority report, and upon the ground that we at least have no right, no authority, to try the question of the guilt or innocence of Mr. WHEELER.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But the Senator from Georgia calls attention to the fact that the Senate directed the committee to do so, and the Senator from South Dakota accepted the appointment.

Mr. STERLING. True, and I admit all that. That is what the Senate directed the committee to do, to investigate the charges. The resolution read:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of five Members of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore to investigate and report to the Senate the facts in relation to the charges made in a certain indictment returned against Senator BURTON K. WHEELER, etc.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator believed that the Senate had no power to do that, how can he reconcile his acceptance of an appointment on the committee?

Mr. STERLING. I did not think there was any Senator who perhaps at first blush thought that the Senate was without power to determine this thing. I did not. It was not clear in my own mind as to what the Senate could or should do in the premises under the charge made by Senator WHEELER to the effect that this was a frame-up and that the Government officers acted under improper influence or from bad motives. It was somewhat confusing to me.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let me call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the resolution does not direct the committee to inquire whether there was a frame-up or not. The committee was not asked to determine that question.

Mr. STERLING. But that was the charge.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The committee was asked to determine what the facts were.

Mr. HEFLIN. Before the Senator from South Dakota leaves that point I want to suggest that the Senator himself voted for the resolution asking for the investigation.

Mr. STERLING. Did I?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. STERLING. I am not sure. Can the Senator show that by the RECORD?

Mr. HEFLIN. Everybody here voted for it.

Mr. STERLING. Did I vote for it?

Mr. HEFLIN. There was not a dissenting vote.

Mr. STERLING. Is the Senator sure I voted for it?

Mr. HEFLIN. It was unanimous.

Mr. STERLING. Was I here?

Mr. HEFLIN. It was a viva voce vote.

Mr. STERLING. I am not sure that I was here at the time the resolution was voted for.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator just now made the statement that when he accepted appointment as a member of the committee he was not clear as to the right of the Senate. When the conviction came to the Senator that the resolution conferred no authority upon the committee to investigate, why did not the Senator raise that question and not report upon the evidence at all, and come back and ask that the committee should be discharged, because it was instructed to inquire into a matter about which the Senate had no authority to inquire?

Mr. STERLING. The Senator from South Dakota appreciated the charges made by the junior Senator from Montana that this was a frame-up and that the officers acted through improper motives. I knew that that involved some inquiry into the facts, a production of facts before the committee. Just how far the committee would go I did not know, and I did not care particularly about limiting the inquiry of that one particular thing. The investigation went on. The witnesses were heard. The case was closed, and in executive session I said that the conclusions of the committee should be at least limited to that one thing as to whether there was probable cause for returning the indictment.

Mr. CARAWAY. I, of course, should not have mentioned what went on in the executive session of the committee, except that the Senator sees fit to do it. Did not this occur, that the case was closed, no one wanted to hear another witness, the committee met and after discussion left to the chairman, by direction of the committee, the duty to make the report, and that until the report was prepared and ready to be signed the Senator did not even suggest that this theory should be discussed at all?

Mr. STERLING. I did not assent to any report the chairman of the committee might make.

Mr. CARAWAY. But the Senator did agree that the chairman should prepare the report.

Mr. STERLING. He was to prepare a report for the committee to examine, certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. And the Senator never suggested that this theory should be considered in preparing the report, did he?

Mr. STERLING. Oh, no; I did not suggest it openly, nor did any other member of the committee suggest a theory on which the report should be based.

Mr. President, I want to go on with the testimony of two witnesses who were before the grand jury. That testimony has been liberally quoted from by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] in his remarks. First, I will quote from the testimony of Mr. Glosser. I wish to say with reference to the testimony of those two men, Rhea and Glosser, that they were not swift witnesses by any means, with apparent anxiety to testify in a way that might injuriously affect Senator WHEELER. On the contrary, they were very slow and deliberate witnesses; they only responded to questions that were asked them on the witness stand; but they impressed me as being thoroughly reliable and honest in their testimony. They testified as to what they actually saw and heard or believed that they saw and heard.

Mr. Glosser was connected with different aspects of the oil busines for many years. He has now the western territory for the Continental Supply Co.; has known Gordon Campbell three or four years, was associated with him as his private secretary from November, 1922, to the first part of November, or the last part of October, 1923; he is not sure but he thinks Campbell introduced him to WHEELER somewhere between the 1st and 15th of January, 1923. He saw WHEELER several times in Campbell's office during January and February of 1923.

It will be remembered that the testimony of Glosser and Rhea was directed to what occurred in room 222 at the Rainbow Hotel at Great Falls, Mont. Glosser testified that he discussed all of Campbell's business with WHEELER.

I refer now to the testimony beginning on page 79, as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; he was there working on cases. But was there any conversation—did you have any conversation with Mr. Wheeler—about his employment?

Mr. GLOSSER. You mean with reference to his direct employment by Campbell?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. GLOSSER. Only in so far as Campbell's business was affected. I would never discuss with the Senator his deal with Campbell or anything like that. I talked of Campbell's business to the Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the nature of the business you talked of to him?

Mr. GLOSSER. We had discussed at various times various lawsuits, all the land titles, and Campbell's business generally in the prospecting field, and the outcome there. All of Campbell's business was at various times discussed, or a good part of it.

He discussed with Mr. WHEELER all of the land titles which were in question here in Washington in the Land Department of the Government. All of Campbell's business, or a good part of it, was at various times discussed. When we come to read the record we shall come to the conclusion that the great and the important part of all of Campbell's business was here in the General Land Office at Washington. The testimony continues:

Senator STERLING. With Mr. WHEELER?

The CHAIRMAN. With Mr. WHEELER?

Mr. GLOSSER. Yes; with Mr. WHEELER.

The CHAIRMAN. Was there anyone else present when you were discussing this business of Mr. Campbell with him?

Mr. GLOSSER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was present?

Mr. GLOSSER. There were several at different times. Mr. Rhea was present several times and Mr. Campbell was present, and at other times I think Mr. Harvey was there.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the nature of the discussion? How did you come to discuss it with him? What was the nature of the matter discussed?

Mr. GLOSSER. We discussed the matters because WHEELER was representing Mr. Campbell and I was representing Mr. Campbell, too, and it was natural that we should discuss the business Campbell had—

And remember, Mr. President, that Mr. Glosser was Mr. Campbell's private secretary for a period of just about a year—

We had that common point in view, of arriving at the same thing; a lot of business—that is, all of Campbell's business.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand; but is there any specific subject matter in the business which Mr. WHEELER had charge of that you could now recall that you talked over with him?

Mr. GLOSSER. Yes; Mr. Campbell had a good many lawsuits, and they were discussed in a general way; and one lawsuit in particular that Mr. WHEELER was handling at that time was discussed a good bit. Other times the land titles were discussed, and Government permits, and everything that Mr. Campbell had anything to do with was discussed.

There is no impeachment or refutation of that testimony.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Dakota pardon me a moment?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the Senator from South Dakota just read the next part of that testimony?

Mr. STERLING. Does the Senator refer to the testimony following what I have just read?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. STERLING. It reads as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Were you ever present when Mr. Campbell and Mr. WHEELER talked over the terms of his employment?

Mr. GLOSSER. You mean his compensation?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. GLOSSER. No; I was never present when they talked that over.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you ever talk over with Mr. WHEELER the scope of his employment—what he was employed to do?

Mr. GLOSSER. No; I never discussed that point with Mr. WHEELER. I took it for granted; to represent Mr. Campbell.

Remember, Mr. President, that the contract was for a compensation of $10,000 a year. It was called a retainer of $10,000 a year. It was not a written contract; it was oral. Just how we are to determine what services were to be included for which that compensation of $10,000 a year was to be paid I hardly know. I think it is a matter of inference, however, from all the testimony, an inference that the grand jury was warranted in drawing.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator from South Dakota says that the scope of the employment of Mr. WHEELER was a matter of inference, but Stout and Campbell testified——

Mr. STERLING. Not exactly the scope of his employment was a matter of inference.

Mr. CARAWAY. Well, the service which Mr. WHEELER was to render.

Mr. STERLING. What he was to do for the $10,000?

Mr. CARAWAY. That was testified to by everybody who knew anything about it, was it not?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Campbell testified about it, Stout testified about it, Beaulieu testified about it, and Mr. Harvey testified as to what was reported to the officers of the company; that when they were asked to ratify the contract they were told what WHEELER's employment was to consist of.

May I add that there is not a line of testimony from beginning to end by anybody who pretended to know that does not set forth exactly what WHEELER was to do for $10,000. If the Senator thinks there is, I wish he would put his finger on that testimony.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator from South Dakota will refer to the whole testimony.

Mr. CARAWAY. There was not a single witness who pretended to know who did not say that Mr. WHEELER's employment was confined exclusively to litigation in the State courts of the State of Montana.

Mr. STERLING. There were a good many witnesses who did not pretend to know——

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course.

Mr. STERLING. What he was doing, but the evidence shows what he was doing.

Mr. CARAWAY. Where does the evidence show what he was doing? I ask the Senator to refer me to a single witness who said WHEELER did anything except in the State courts.

Mr. STERLING. I will quote from the record and from the documentary evidence to show that.

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course if the Senator does not want to point it out, very well. I assert now that every man who knew or who had any right to know said that the scope of Mr. WHEELER's employment was confined to litigation in the State courts of Montana.

Every man connected with the Department of the Interior, all of them, I take it, men of character, one of them for 37 years a practicing attorney in the State of Montana, and by the Republican administration appointed Solicitor for the Department of the Interior, and the other twice Governor of the State of Utah and appointed Commissioner of the General Land Office, testified that Mr. WHEELER had not prosecuted cases before that office. Therefore I hope the Senator will not merely draw an inference and say there is some question about what Mr. WHEELER was to do or what he did do, because I assert—and I am willing to go over the testimony line by line with the Senator—that there is not a line of anybody's testimony anywhere that undertakes to say that Mr. WHEELER was to do anything except what he said he was to do, and that is to appear in the courts of Montana. There is not a scintilla of evidence by anybody, respectable or otherwise, to the effect that he ever appeared before the Land Office in the interest of Mr. Campbell.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator can say those things in his own time. I refer to the record, and will show from the record what might be a proper inference for a grand jury to draw in regard to the compensation and what it was to cover.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I say that when the Senator comes to quote the testimony I hope he will go on through it and will not stop like he did a few moments ago in the case of Glosser's testimony?

Mr. STERLING. The Senator may call my attention to any part of the testimony he chooses, and I will be glad to read it if the Senator so requests.

Mr. CARAWAY. What I was about to say was that it strikes me—and I want to be perfectly respectful to the Senator from South Dakota——

Mr. STERLING. Oh, yes; there is no question but that the Senator is. I have not intimated by any sign that I think otherwise.

Mr. CARAWAY. What I was about to say was that while I agree it must have been unintentional, yet it strikes me that it is hardly fair to read a general statement when if the specific question and answer following it are read it will appear that the witness specifically stated that he knew nothing about it.

Mr. STERLING. Will the Senator point out to what he refers that I have omitted?

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator referred to the testimony where Mr. Glosser said he had talked over with Mr. WHEELER his employment, but the Senator stopped there. Then I asked him to read the questions and answers which followed, in which Mr. Glosser specifically said, "I never talked with WHEELER. I do not know what he was to do or what he did do." The Senator ought not to stop with a general statement when there is a specific statement.

Mr. STERLING. I think the Senator from Arkansas himself draws an improper inference from the testimony. Let me read it.

Mr. CARAWAY. Very well.

Mr. STERLING. Let me read again the statement which I have read and the answer to it. In answer to the chairman, Mr. Glosser said:

> Yes; Mr. Campbell had a good many lawsuits, and they were discussed in a general way; and one lawsuit in particular that Mr. WHEELER was handling at that time was discussed a good bit. Other times the land titles were discussed, and Government permits, and everything that Mr. Campbell had anything to do with was discussed.

Now, let us see if what follows refutes that statement. I will read it:

> The CHAIRMAN. Were you ever present when Mr. Campbell and Mr. WHEELER talked over the terms of his employment?
>
> Mr. GLOSSER. You mean his compensation?
> The CHAIRMAN. Yes.
>
> Mr. GLOSSER. No; I was never present when they talked that over.
>
> The CHAIRMAN. Did you ever talk over with Mr. WHEELER the scope of his employment—what he was employed to do?
> Mr. GLOSSER. No; I never discussed that point with Mr. WHEELER. I took it for granted; to represent Mr. Campbell.

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. STERLING. The chairman then asked:

> What was the nature of these lawsuits in which Mr. WHEELER was acting?
>
> Mr. GLOSSER. The lawsuits?
> The CHAIRMAN. Yes.
> Mr. GLOSSER. They were suits that Mr. L. C. Stevenson and his associated companies had filed against Campbell individually and Campbell's companies.

Is there anything in that that tends to contradict what Mr. Glosser has previously said? No; there is not one word.

Mr. CARAWAY. No; there is everything to contradict the inference that I drew from what the Senator said, that there was some doubt about what WHEELER was expected to do, because when you read that, the witness says that he did not know, except that he was looking after lawsuits in Montana; and may I just read on page 81, where the same question came up again? He was asked to go into particulars as to what Mr. Campbell's business was.

> The CHAIRMAN. Do you know of his having anything to do with the other litigation, aside from the receivership?

The Senator read about the receivership.

> Mr. GLOSSER. Yes. Mr. Campbell's lawyer was in touch with Mr. WHEELER's office. Mr. Baldwin prepared a good many papers for us; briefs, as I recall, they were—legal stuff. I did not understand it.
>
> The CHAIRMAN. But with reference to these other suits?
> Mr. GLOSSER. These other suits?
>
> The CHAIRMAN. Then there was a libel suit brought, was there not?
>
> Mr. GLOSSER. A libel suit? I think that was incorporated in the same suit. I am not sure. There were a whole lot of suits.
>
> The CHAIRMAN. There was a libel suit for some $100,000?
> Mr. GLOSSER. I do not recall that suit right now.
>
> The CHAIRMAN. You do not?
> Mr. GLOSSER. No, sir.

Now:

> The CHAIRMAN. Did you ever talk over with Mr. WHEELER at any time the scope or extent of his employment, and what the different things were that he was to do as attorney?
>
> Mr. GLOSSER. No; I do not think I did.

No inference could be drawn from his testimony, when it is all read, that Mr. WHEELER was presumed to have had something else to do.

Mr. STERLING. The inference is that they had talked the matter over, and talked about all of Mr. Campbell's business, the lawsuits as well as other business. He was his private secretary.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, but when he was asked what Mr. WHEELER did he commenced to talk about the State court suits in Montana, and then specifically and emphatically stated that if he had anything else to do he never heard of it. The inference ought not to be left. The Senate is entitled to have the testimony.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. STERLING. I do.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator is commenting upon the testimony appearing at page 80. I should like to ascertain just his view about that to which he has invited the attention of the Senate, and particularly this statement by Mr. Glosser, to which the Senator attaches some importance:

> Yes; Mr. Campbell had a good many lawsuits, and they were discussed in a general way; and one lawsuit in particular that Mr. WHEELER was handling at that time was discussed a good bit. Other times the land titles were discussed, and Government permits, and everything that Mr. Campbell had anything to do with was discussed.

I see up above, again, the expression "the land titles" were discussed. Obviously, the witness makes a distinction between land titles and Government permits, and very properly so, because a great many of these oil wells are drilled upon property that has passed into private ownership, as the Senator well knows, and those are usually spoken of as land titles.

The permits are something else. Apparently permits, Government permits, were one of the subjects of discussion. That discussion, as I understand, was participated in, the parties present being Mr. Campbell, Mr. WHEELER, Mr. Rhea, and Mr. Glosser. Am I correct?

Mr. STERLING. Oh, no; the Senator is wrong there. This is a conversation between Mr. WHEELER and Mr. Glosser. This is not an account of the conversation at the Rainbow Hotel. That is a different matter.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Oh, very well; only Mr. Glosser and Mr. WHEELER.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. WHEELER and Mr. Glosser; yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. What I want to know is how the Senator draws the conclusion that Mr. WHEELER was employed in some way or other in connection with the permits just because the subject of permits was mentioned in the course of the conversation?

Mr. STERLING. I think that will appear a little more clearly to the Senator from Montana when I refer, a little later on——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I dare say it may appear clearly somewhere else, but it obviously does not appear clearly or otherwise here. They talked about the land titles, they talked about the permits, they talked about the litigation. I suppose probably they talked also about the drilling, and possibly they talked about the geological structures, and they might have talked about a lot of things. They might have spent the evening talking about permits, and yet that would not indicate that Mr. WHEELER was hired in connection with those permits.

Mr. STERLING. It has this significance, that it brings home to Mr. WHEELER a general knowledge of Mr. Campbell's business, his land business, his permit business, and so forth, to show that through conversation with Mr. Glosser, who was Mr. Campbell's private secretary, he could not help but become familiar with the general business in which Mr. Campbell was engaged.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Oh, yes; and I presume we may indulge the assumption that Mr. WHEELER knew that Mr. Campbell had some Government permits.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr President, may I just call attention to one thing, though? On page 46 of part 2 of the hearings, Beaulieu testifies:

> I asked Mr. WHEELER some question with reference to a law point concerning a certain permit, and Senator WHEELER had lived in Montana so long that he used pretty strong language sometimes—plain—and he said, "I do not know a ——— ——— thing about Government permits."

I remember what the language was. It seemed to be peculiar to the West, and I will not quote it.

> I would not know one of the ——— things if I saw it. Besides, I told Campbell I would not have anything to do with his Government land.

That was his answer.

That is the only time he was ever asked, in all this record, anything about a Government permit, and he swore like a sailor, and said he did not know anything about one and would not know it if he should see it, and he had told Campbell that he would not have anything to do with it.

Mr. STERLING. On what page is that?

Mr. CARAWAY. That is at the bottom of page 46 and the top of page 47 of part 2 of the hearings.

Mr. STERLING. Oh, yes; I am glad the Senator called attention to that. I will refer to it later on.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I rose a moment ago to ask the Senator in all seriousness whether he considers that the fact that permits were mentioned in the course of an evening's general discussion of Mr. Campbell's business is any proof that Mr. WHEELER was employed to get Government permits, or to have anything at all to do with the Department of the Interior?

Mr. STERLING. I call the attention of the Senator from Montana to the fact that he again seems to confuse what occurred here, when they were talking about permits, with what occurred at room 212, Rainbow Hotel, Montana. I will get to that, and I will read it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; we will bear this in mind when we come to consider the other matter; but I took it, from what the Senator said, that he considered this as proof of his contention.

Mr. STERLING. Some proof to be taken in connection with all the evidence in the case.

Now, I go to page 87, if anyone is following, the meeting at the Rainbow Hotel, beginning on page 86:

> Senator STERLING. Very well. Now, where was this conversation, or this meeting, rather, when you say WHEELER and Campbell and Mr. Rhea and yourself were present?
>
> Mr. GLOSSER. In the Rainbow Hotel.
>
> Senator STERLING. In the Rainbow Hotel?
> Mr. GLOSSER. Yes.
>
> Senator STERLING. How did you come to go to the Rainbow Hotel?
>
> Mr. GLOSSER. Mr. Campbell told me to get a room there.
>
> Senator STERLING. For what purpose?
>
> Mr. GLOSSER. Well, for two purposes. He wanted to talk to Mr. WHEELER, and he wanted to get uptown. He had been staying at my house, and he wanted to get uptown. He lived at the hotel practically all the time when he was in town.
>
> Senator STERLING. At what time in the day or evening did you meet?
>
> Mr. GLOSSER. In the evening—early evening—as I recall it.
>
> Senator STERLING. How long were you there together?
>
> Mr. GLOSSER. Oh, possibly an hour or an hour and a half.
>
> Senator STERLING. Did anybody else come into the room at all while you were there?
>
> Mr. GLOSSER. I think Mr. Cooper, and Mr. Jackson came in, too, just for a second.
>
> Senator STERLING. They did not remain?
>
> Mr. GLOSSER. No, sir.
>
> Senator STERLING. They did not participate in the conversation?
>
> Mr. GLOSSER. No, sir.
>
> Senator STERLING. Did you hear all the discussion there, Mr. Glosser?
>
> Mr. GLOSSER. In that room that night?
>
> Senator STERLING. Yes.
>
> Mr. GLOSSER. Yes; I was there all the time.
> Senator STERLING. Just what was said in your hearing there by Mr. Campbell or Mr. WHEELER in regard to oil permits?

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the Senator tell me where he is reading?

Mr. STERLING. On page 87 now.

Mr. CARAWAY. From which volume of the hearings?

Mr. STERLING. It is the same in all the copies. It begins with page 1 and runs through the successive numbers.

Mr. CARAWAY. I have just the first edition.

Mr. STERLING. I continue reading from page 87:

> Mr. GLOSSER. There was a great deal said about oil permits that night. We talked in a general way about the number of permits Mr. Campbell had and the details of handling them through here, etc., like that; and Mr. Campbell was at that time—one permit in particular was referred to; the Phil MacGowan permit seemed very valuable. It was in Mr. Rhea's name, and he had just had an offer on it.
>
> Senator STERLING. What was said, as near as you remember, about the Phil MacGowan permit?
>
> Mr. GLOSSER. We talked about the Phil MacGowan permit, and Mr. Campbell said this: "If Mr. WHEELER can get this fixed up in Washington——
>
> The CHAIRMAN. Was Mr. WHEELER present?
> Mr. GLOSSER. Yes; Mr. WHEELER was present.
>
> Senator STERLING. What did he say?
>
> Mr. GLOSSER. He said, "If Mr. WHEELER can get this thing fixed up in Washington, we can afford to cut on the money"—slice, or something. That was the substance of it. The exact words I could not speak.
>
> Senator STERLING. What did Mr. WHEELER say in regard to it?
>
> Mr. GLOSSER. I do not recall that he said a word about it. I do not think he made any reply. Oh, yes, he did; but not at that particular time.
>
> Senator STERLING. But during that evening?
>
> Mr. GLOSSER. During the evening Mr. WHEELER left us under the impression there was nothing to worry about getting permits fixed up; that the matter could be fixed up in Washington very easily; it was merely a matter of getting the details worked out through the department.
>
> Senator STERLING. What, if anything, did he say about the things he might have to do in order to get the matter adjusted?
>
> Mr. GLOSSER. I do not recall exactly what he said, but he left us under the impression—or, at least, he left me under that impression—that with his connections down here he would have access to getting action on these permits.
>
> Senator STERLING. Did Mr. WHEELER give Mr. Campbell any assurance at that time as to what he could do?
>
> The CHAIRMAN. I think it might be well to let the witness state what he said.
>
> Mr. GLOSSER. What is the question?
>
> Senator STERLING. State all that was said.
>
> Mr. GLOSSER. I think I have covered it pretty well.

Senator STERLING. Yes.

Mr. GLOSSER. We talked about these permits, and particularly this one that we thought was valuable, because we had been offered so much money for it—Mr. Rhea had had an offer on it—and Mr. Campbell turned to Mr. Rhea at one time, and he said, "Now, if WHEELER can get this stuff fixed up for us we can afford to cut the stuff up some way." That was the substance of it.

Then an objection was made to asking his interpretation.

Mr. GLOSSER. Mr. WHEELER said after that there was nothing to worry about about permits; that they could be fixed up in Washington; not to worry about it.

Senator STERLING. He said that to whom?

Mr. GLOSSER. I imagine to the people who were there.

Senator STERLING. Were you all sitting there?

Mr. GLOSSER. Yes; sitting there very close. It was a small room.

Senator STERLING. Did you have some conversation with Mr. Campbell in regard to the compensation to be paid Mr. WHEELER?

Mr. GLOSSER. Yes, sir.

Senator STERLING. Was this while you were acting as private secretary to Mr. Campbell?

Mr. GLOSSER. Yes, sir.

Senator STERLING. And you say your work as private secretary lasted until in November, 1923, if I remember?

Mr. GLOSSER. The latter part of October.

Senator STERLING. The latter part of October, 1923?

Mr. GLOSSER. Very near the 1st of November.

Senator STERLING. And then you were in his employ as his private secretary at the time of this conversation at the Rainbow Hotel?

Mr. GLOSSER. Oh, yes.

Senator STERLING. Was there any particular way in which you reached room 212 that evening?

That is perhaps immaterial. I shall want to call attention a little later to Mr. Glosser's testimony.

Turning now to page 92——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Before the Senator passes that, I want to inquire of the Senator whether Mr. Glosser seeemed to be a very unwilling witness?

Mr. STERLING. Not an unwilling witness, I might say, but a witness who had to be asked questions for everything that was stated. He did not volunteer anything.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Had he made some affidavits prior to that?

Mr. STERLING. He made some, and I will have occasion to refer to the affidavits.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I observe it took the Senator quite a long while to get this answer out of him.

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. He was first asked:

Just what was said in your hearing there by Mr. Campbell or Mr. WHEELER in regard to oil permits?

That question would seem to bring out the entire conversation. Glosser answered:

There was a great deal said about oil permits that night. We talked in a general way about the number of permits Mr. Campbell had and the details of handling them through here, etc., like that; and Mr. Campbell was at that time—one permit in particular was referred to; the Phil MacGowan permit seemed very valuable. It was in Mr. Rhea's name, and he had just had an offer on it.

You will observe that he has not said anything there about what Mr. WHEELER said. Some further matter comes up, and he is again asked:

What was said, as near as you remember, about the Phil MacGowan permit?

Mr. GLOSSER. We talked about the Phil MacGowan permit, and Mr. Campbell said this: "If Mr. WHEELER can get this fixed—

He does not say anything about what Mr. WHEELER said, and the Senator from South Dakota comes at him again:

What did Mr. WHEELER say in regard to it?

Mr. GLOSSER. I do not recall that he said a word about it. I do not think he made any reply. Oh, yes; he did; but not at that particular time.

Senator STERLING. But during that evening?

Trying to get out of him what Mr. WHEELER said, but he does not give anything Mr. WHEELER said. Then he said:

Mr. GLOSSER. During the evening Mr. WHEELER left us under the impression there was nothing to worry about, getting permits fixed up; that the matter could be fixed up in Washington very easily; it was merely a matter of getting the details worked out through the department.

But that is not satisfactory. So the Senator from South Dakota comes at him again:

Senator STERLING. What, if anything, did he say about the things he might have to do in order to get the matter adjusted?

Mr. GLOSSER. I do not recall exactly what he said, but he left us under the impression—or at least he left me under that impression—that with his connections down here he would have access to getting action on these permits.

Up to this time the Senator from South Dakota has not been able to corkscrew out of him the statement that Mr. WHEELER said anything, but he comes at him again, and finally, on page 88, Senator CARAWAY interrupts:

Senator CARAWAY. Let us have the witness state what was said, and perhaps after a while we will arrive at the question whether he had any understanding of the thing. Let the witness state first what was said. I think that would be fair.

Senator STERLING. Very well.

Now, Mr. Glosser comes forward:

Mr. WHEELER said, after that there was nothing to worry about, about permits; that they could be fixed up in Washington; not to worry about it.

Mr. STERLING. The important thing about this whole conversation is that there was a small room at the Rainbow Hotel, these four men were in it, sitting close together, and one could not speak aloud without each of the others having heard it; the talk was largely about permits and the fixing up of permits, and the assurance on the part of Mr. WHEELER that when he came to Washington it would be an easy matter to have these permits fixed up, and they need not worry about it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But the point is that the witness, having at least four different times either expressly or impliedly declared that he did not know what Mr. WHEELER said, then finally says that Mr. WHEELER said so-and-so.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the Senator from South Dakota yield?

Mr. STERLING. I do not think we can take all these statements together and say that they are without significance. We have, in addition, Mr. Rhea's testimony, who was one of the four who were there. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. I want to call attention to the fact that this same man Glosser made two affidavits touching this very question before he was cross-examined, and substantially he did not say one thing in those affidavits that he said in his testimony. His affidavits appear on page 125. One was taken, and then after Rhea had given his statement they got Glosser to come back and give another, and in neither of them did he ever pretend to say that WHEELER said a thing. He said what Campbell said. That was all he testified about.

Mr. STERLING. At the top of page 92 I asked Mr. Glosser the following:

Senator STERLING. Do you know how many Government permits Gordon Campbell held?

Mr. GLOSSER. The number of them, do you mean?

Senator STERLING. Yes.

Mr. GLOSSER. There were about nine, I believe.

Senator STERLING. About nine. Have you been present here during the testimony?

Mr. GLOSSER. No, sir.

Senator STERLING. And have you heard these permits described by names and numbers?

Mr. GLOSSER. No, sir. I was here the other day, but there were no permits mentioned, I don't think.

Senator STERLING. Can you give the names and numbers of those permits?

Mr. GLOSSER. I could not give you the numbers. I could give you the names of them, I think.

Now I want to call the attention of the Senate to a very significant part of this testimony. Under the law, of course, a man can hold in his own name or by assignment permits covering land to the extent of 2,560 acres, and that only; but this witness testified to the effect that Mr. Campbell owned or controlled permits covering about, as I think he said, 10,000 acres of land, and he gives the names and gives the occupations of some of the men who hold these permits; and there is no question, I think, but that these permits were held by these men not for their own individual benefit and in good faith but that they were held for Mr. Gordon Campbell. I think it is significant that we should know what kind of a client Mr. WHEELER had in this transaction and these several transactions. I think it is worth while.

Mr. NORRIS. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has heard all the evidence in the case, and I want to ask him if after hearing all the evidence he believes that Senator WHEELER was guilty of a violation of the statute?

Mr. STERLING. I am not going to say that, not by any means. What I am going to say is this: That I think under the circumstances, under the evidence before us, the grand jury was warranted in its action in finding the indictment. Senator WHEELER in a trial before a petit jury may be able to explain and refute successfully all that is said here by these various witnesses; and I use the word "explain" advisedly.

Mr. NORRIS. Was it not the duty of the committee to ascertain whether in their judgment he had violated the law?

Mr. STERLING. I do not think so.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator does not believe that?

Mr. STERLING. No; that is not my theory of what we should do.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me ask the Senator another question. Was the hearing full? I mean, was there any evidence the Senator knew anything about that should have been brought before the committee that was not produced?

Mr. STERLING. I will hardly say as to that. I do not now think of any particular piece of evidence that might have been brought before the committee that was not produced. There was a very important piece of evidence, which is in the RECORD, an affidavit by one E. M. Harvey. If E. M. Harvey were before a petit jury, his testimony——

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator were trying anyone in a criminal case, either as judge or jury, would he consider an affidavit?

Mr. STERLING. Oh, no; but the affidavit is here. It is a part of this record.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well; let us take the affidavit. If the evidence is all produced here, and the Senator has heard it all, he must then have formed an opinion, it seems to me, as to whether the evidence establishes the guilt of the Senator or not. That is the question I am asking him—whether, after hearing all the evidence, which he says was complete, he believes Senator WHEELER to be guilty of the charge?

Mr. STERLING. I am not trying that question, and I do not think the Senate should try it. I do not think a committee of the Senate should try it, notwithstanding the broad scope of this resolution referring it to the committee.

Mr. NORRIS. Whether it should or not, it seems to me that is the question submitted to them. It seems to me that is what we have a right to know here from the judges who heard the evidence—whether it impresses them to the extent that they believe in the guilt of the man charged?

Mr. STERLING. Had there been aspersions upon the character of Mr. WHEELER, or upon any Member of this body, impugning his motives, charging him with misconduct involving no moral turpitude, or anything of that kind, and no indictment yet found by a grand jury, the Senate might then consider the question as to whether it should investigate the matter, and might investigate it; but when the courts have acted, and an indictment has been found, and then here in the Senate of the United States we try the question of the guilt or innocence of the party charged; though he is a Member of this body, we are doing two things: First, we are giving that Senator an advantage that the average citizen would not have in a trial before a petit jury, if we find him innocent of the charge.

Mr. NORRIS. That depends on whether we find him innocent or not.

Mr. STERLING. In the second place, we would be encroaching upon the functions and the duties of another department of the Government.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will permit, if the guilt or the innocence of Senator WHEELER is not involved in this investigation, I do not know what is involved.

Mr. STERLING. We should not report. I am frank to say that.

Mr. NORRIS. What is the use of having a committee make an investigation if they do not report? I can see how the Senator's argument might have had some weight if it had been presented when the resolution as to whether we should take any steps was before us. Then it might have had some weight, and at that time it was not known whether a majority of the committee would report favorably or unfavorably. If the report had been unfavorable, and had gone before the petit jury, or in some way had gotten to them, then it would have had the opposite effect.

Mr. STERLING. Certainly it would. It would have unduly prejudiced the petit jury against Senator WHEELER.

Mr. NORRIS. But having acted as we did, there is no way now to take it back. Having started in and made the investigation, it seems to me that a Member of the Senate is entitled to know from members of the committee who heard the evidence, especially when they admit that they have heard all the evidence they could hear of or found out about, that we are entitled to know what the impressions of the members of the committee are as to the fact of guilt or innocence.

Mr. STERLING. Just in a word I would suggest to the Senator from Nebraska my solution of this case. Considering where we are now in the matter of the reports and in the matter of the discussion, my suggestion is that the Senate should take no action, leaving this matter in absolute abeyance, leaving Senator WHEELER to occupy his place in the Senate, to go on with the performance of his duties in the Senate, remitting him, however, for the determination as to whether he is guilty or innocent of the charge to the only competent body to determine that, the petit jury in the United States District Court for Montana?

Mr. CARAWAY. May I interrupt the Senator just at this time, and I will not interrupt him any more, because I know he wants to finish his remarks.

I want to read what the man who took much credit to himself for having worked up the case thought about it, if I may. I am reading from the testimony of Mr. Grorud.

Mr. STERLING. What page?

Mr. CARAWAY. It is in another hearing.

Mr. STERLING. Oh, in another hearing.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Grorud is a Republican. Whether that is to his credit or not I will not argue. He was formerly an assistant attorney general in the State of Montana. Whether that is anything to his credit, we will let it pass. But Coan, who said he is an Irishman—and I certainly hope he was joking about that, as he did about everything else, because I am part Irish myself—went to Montana. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] read the testimony a moment ago. He went out under the employment of certain people to get something on WHEELER and somebody else; and here is how he went about getting it, and here is what he thought when he knew all the facts. I shall skip all the things where he identified himself and where he met Mr. Coan. He said:

> What did he say to you about that?
>
> He is talking about his business out there.
>
> Mr. GRORUD. Well, he first came to me and wanted to get something on Senator WALSH. In this connection I may state that while I was assistant attorney general I had occasion to make some investigations in Butte, Silver Bow County, in regard to some election frauds, illegal voting, and Mr. Coan came to me and wanted an affidavit from me, and he stated that he wanted me to make a strong affidavit. I told him that I would make an affidavit or testify as to the facts for him; and I also said to him that as far as Senator WALSH was concerned he had nothing to do with that, and he was not connected with that in any shape or form. Well, he said he knew that, but he wanted something on WALSH, so that he could smear him because he wanted to stop him in the oil investigations here at Washington.
> The CHAIRMAN. Now, go ahead and state what was said about Senator WHEELER.
> Mr. GRORUD. Well, in one of the conversations he said something about WHEELER—he knew, of course, that Mr. WHEELER and myself had been law partners, and he said something about having WHEELER smeared.
>
> Senator MOSES. Was that WHEELER or WALSH?
>
> Mr. GRORUD. WHEELER.
>
> Senator MOSES. You testified a moment ago that he wanted to have Senator WALSH——
>
> Mr. GRORUD. That he wanted to have Senator WALSH smeared.
>
> The CHAIRMAN. This conversation occurred after Senator WHEELER'S indictment out there?
> Mr. GRORUD. Oh, yes. He had already smeared WHEELER in such a shape that he had him sewed up, he said, and I said to him, "How did you ever happen to put this over?" I said, "You can't get any place with that," because I thought I knew something about the case that he had for Mr. Campbell. "Well," he said, "we don't care anything about that. We just simply want to smear him." I said to him, "Supposing now that the case is set down for trial?" "Well," he said, we will see to that; that the case don't come up for trial immediately. We will simply hold it over him, because we had to do something to stop him." And he said, "Well"—he said—he just simply wanted to smear him; that is all. He knew that he couldn't get any place.

Now, then, does the Senator from South Dakota want to lend himself to carrying on the process that he talks about, that he said all he had in it was a desire to smear two Senators; that he knew the charge was false and wanted a man to make a false affidavit and help him smear them? I want to ask the Senator if his report does not simply carry on the smearing process? I know, of course, the Senator does not intend to do it, but in effect is not that all it is doing?

Mr. STERLING. Oh, no; it does not, and the Senator knows it does not. He knows, too, that I am not engaging in a smearing process.

Mr. CARAWAY. I did not say the Senator was engaged in it.

Mr. STERLING. I decline to yield further to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am sure I am perfectly willing, Mr. President, to refrain from interrupting the Senator further.

Mr. STERLING. I was about to refer to some very important testimony. I mentioned some permits. He had testified that there were about nine permits, and then continued:

Senator STERLING. Can you give the names and numbers of those permits?

Mr. GLOSSER. I could not give you the numbers. I could give you the names of them, I think.

Senator STERLING. I wish you would give the names.

Mr. GLOSSER. Jim MacGowan; Fred MacGowan; Dan MacGowan, and there was another MacGowan permit; the name I do not recall now; the Rasmussen permit, the Scott permit, the Lincoln permit, the Klinedinst-Clark permit, and the Campbell permit.

Senator STERLING. Do you remember anything about the Scott permit?

Mr. GLOSSER. Do I remember anything about it?

Senator STERLING. Yes.

Mr. GLOSSER. Yes; I remember some of the things about it. There was an assignment of it.

Senator STERLING. Was that one held by Mr. Campbell?

Mr. GLOSSER. Mr. Campbell held all these permits, I think, by assignment.

Senator STERLING. Do you know how many acres were involved in these various permits?

Mr. GLOSSER. They check up to about 10,000, as I recall it now.

Senator STERLING. Ten thousand?

Mr. GLOSSER. Acres.

Senator STERLING. How did he come to control all of this acreage under Government permits?

Mr. GLOSSER. He would have to have some one else take them up, and take assignments back.

Senator STERLING. Do you know any of the parties that he had take them up?

Mr. GLOSSER. Yes; I know most of them.

Senator STERLING. Who were they?

Mr. GLOSSER. I just got through naming them.

Senator STERLING. Those are the parties that Mr. Campbell had to take up these permits?

Mr. GLOSSER. The original applicants for the permits.

Senator STERLING. They are the original applicants?

Mr. GLOSSER. Yes.

Senator STERLING. And they were afterwards assigned to Mr. Campbell?

Mr. GLOSSER. Assigned in blank, most of them.

Senator STERLING. Do you know how much of such lands within any field a man is permitted to hold?

Mr. GLOSSER. Yes.

Senator STERLING. Were these all in the same field?

Mr. GLOSSER. Yes.

Senator STERLING. It all was in the one field?

Mr. GLOSSER. Yes.

Senator STERLING. And the limit is 2,560 acres, is it not?

Mr. GLOSSER. The limit is 2,560 acres that one man can hold in his name, as I understand the law. I am not familiar with the law. I know one man can not apply for more than that.

Senator STERLING. These permits, you say, were assigned in blank to Mr. Campbell?

Mr. GLOSSER. Assigned in blank. Campbell held a blank assignment from the original people that filed the applications.

Senator STERLING. Do you know in what capacities they had been acting; what their occupation was, and so forth, before they made these assignments to Mr. Campbell—these assignments in blank?

Mr. GLOSSER. Yes; Lincoln was working for Campbell. Lincoln, one of the men, was a clerk in Campbell's office. Jim MacGowan was the engineer working under Campbell. Fred was Jim's brother; Dan is his brother, and Phil MacGowan is his brother.

Scott and Rasmussen, I think, are local people up there; and of course Gordon Campbell had his own permit.

Senator STERLING. Do you know how much Gordon Campbell's permit covered?

Mr. GLOSSER. Possibly 2,500 acres, I believe. I know it comes pretty close to the 2,560 acres. It is a four-figure permit, I know; quite a tract of land.

So there we have it, acreage to the amount of 10,000 acres, or nearly so; with permission under the law to any one person to hold only 2,560 acres, and the men holding the permits under blank assignments either in his employ or the near relatives of those who were in his employ. No wonder that he had to have attorneys in Montana. No wonder that he wanted somebody to look after his business before the General Land Office at Washington.

I want to call attention briefly to the testimony of William W. Rhea. He had been in the oil business all his life. His testimony is found at page 108. He met Senator WHEELER once, and that was on January 15, 1923, at the Rainbow Hotel. At page 109 he testified that he was one of the four persons present at the meeting at the Rainbow Hotel:

The CHAIRMAN. Can you recall, so as to be definite as to the conversation, what was said in regard to the matter of his employment at that time? Do you recall the conversation?

Mr. RHEA. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, state what was said in the presence of Mr. WHEELER.

Mr. RHEA. The main conversation between Mr. Campbell and Mr. WHEELER and myself was in regard to the Phil MacGowan permit. Mr. Campbell said that Senator WHEELER, on his arrival in Washington, would be able to put this permit through—get it approved.

The CHAIRMAN. What did Mr. WHEELER say?

Mr. RHEA. He did not reply anything, except he said that we did not need to worry, that this would all be taken care of when he got back here.

In this respect the testimony of Glosser and of Rhea is exactly the same. The language used was that he "would attend to it when he got to Washington" and they "need not worry about it."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. May I inquire of the Senator if Senator WHEELER did anything about it when he got to Washington?

Mr. STERLING. I think he did.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. What did he do?

Mr. STERLING. I will come to that a little later if the Senator from Montana will permit me. I think the record evidence will show that.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I want to inquire about that because I thought the fact as to whether this conversation did take place was to be very largely determined by what Senator WHEELER did afterwards.

Mr. STERLING. There is evidence looking that way, anyhow.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you say anything?

Mr. RHEA. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. What did you say?

Mr. RHEA. Gordon Campbell suggested to me that in case Senator WHEELER—well, I am getting ahead of myself. I had an offer on this permit at that particular time, was dealing with some people in Colorado as to selling, and Mr. Campbell knew what I was to get for it—what I was figuring on getting for it. He told me that in case that this permit could be gotten through, we should be able to give Senator WHEELER quite a good slice of it. I believe that was the exact language.

The CHAIRMAN. Was that in the presence of WHEELER?

Mr. RHEA. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What did WHEELER say to that?

Mr. RHEA. He did not reply, that I remember.

The CHAIRMAN. Was he taking part in the conversation?

Mr. RHEA. He had been, right along.

The CHAIRMAN. Did he not make any reply when the question of slicing the matter was discussed?

Mr. RHEA. I do not think he said a word.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, have you stated all that you said in this conversation with Mr. WHEELER?

Mr. RHEA. Not exactly.

The CHAIRMAN. State it all, Mr. Rhea.

Mr. RHEA. Gordon Campbell in this talk—I told him that I had my attorney employed to take care of this permit, and that I did not feel that I was entitled to pay anyone anything more.

The CHAIRMAN. Go ahead.

Mr. RHEA. I believe that was all of it.

The CHAIRMAN. What I am trying to find out, Mr. Rhea, is what you said, if anything, to WHEELER.

Mr. RHEA. I did not say anything to Senator WHEELER in regard to taking any part.

The CHAIRMAN. Did he say anything to you?

Mr. RHEA. Yes; he says, "You don't need to worry. On my arrival in Washington this will all be taken care of."

The CHAIRMAN. He said that to you instead of to Campbell, did he?

Mr. RHEA. He said it to both of us.

The CHAIRMAN. Was it said in response to anything that you said to him?

Mr. RHEA. Well, I can't say. That is a long time ago, you know. A man can't remember just the exact words.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I want to ask the Senator a question or two about this particular testimony at the top of the page.

Mr. STERLING. Page 110?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; as follows:

Mr. RHEA. Gordon Campbell suggested to me that in case Senator WHEELER—well, I am getting ahead of myself. I had an offer on this permit at that particular time, was dealing with some people in Colorado as to selling, and Mr. Campbell knew what I was to get for it—what I was figuring on getting for it. He told me that in case that this permit could be gotten through, we should be able to give Senator WHEELER quite a good slice of it.

I believe that was the exact language that appears several times here, Mr. President. I want to ask the Senator if it does not appear perfectly conclusively that so far as that was concerned it did not fall under the original employment for the $10,000?

Mr. STERLING. I do not think so.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If it did fall under the original employment for $10,000, why should anybody propose that a "slice" be given to WHEELER? This is an entirely different transaction, is it not?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Very well. Now, Mr. President, let me follow that. This proposition having been made, as has been repeatedly stated by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] so forcefully and eloquently, it appears that Mr. Rhea rejected the proposition, for he said:

I told him that I had my attorney employed to take care of this permit, and that I did not feel that I was entitled to pay anyone anything more.

So there is not any contract there. Would the Senator from South Dakota call that a contract?

Mr. STERLING. I think the Senator from Montana can see that the question goes a little deeper than that. Suppose there had been a specific agreement for an annual retainer of $10,000; yet here in this conversation between the four of them when the suggestion was made in the presence of these two witnesses, Rhea and Glosser, that Mr. WHEELER should get a pretty "good slice" of it, he remained absolutely silent.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Oh, yes; I understand all that; but I submit to the Senator whether the very testimony itself does not disclose that, whether a contract was made or not, it was not the contract that was originally made for the $10,000?

Mr. STERLING. It is not asserted or contended that there was any contract made to pay Mr. WHEELER anything additional or to give him any "slice."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; both parties regarded that it did not fall under the $10,000 agreement, because they were trying to make arrangements for paying Mr. WHEELER for something else.

In the second place, Mr. President, the original agreement, as I understood it, as contended by the Senator from South Dakota, was to look after Mr. Campbell's permits, not after Mr. Rhea's.

Mr. STERLING. Well, one inference that might be drawn from it, I will say to the Senator from Montana, is that, notwithstanding the agreement to pay compensation of $10,000 a year in the way of a retainer, they could afford to be generous and give a premium, something in addition to that, if this permit should be allowed or sustained.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, they might be able to afford to; but that is not the proposition. What I say is, Mr. President, that the testimony itself discloses that this transaction had no relation to the original agreement. How could it have? Of course, they might do this, but they did not do it. They are endeavoring to make a specific agreement with reference to this specific permit.

Mr. STERLING. Well, one version of the contract——

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. If it is so tiresome to the Senator, he need not yield.

Mr. STERLING. I am beginning to feel a little tired, and perhaps I showed it, but I am glad to yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. I merely want to suggest to the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] that in the course of his inquiries it seems to me he has lost sight of a more or less important matter. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] has laid stress upon the fact that Mr. WHEELER made no response to this suggestion. Of course, he made no response to the suggestion, because the man Rhea anticipated him by himself speaking up and saying that he did not propose to give anybody any "slice"; that he had employed his own attorney to conduct the case, and he did not propose to give anybody else any additional compensation. So the testimony, it seems to a layman, shows not only that WHEELER did not accept the proposition but that the man Rhea himself declined to accede to any such suggestion.

Mr. STERLING. Now, Mr. President, I am going to call attention to some of the documentary evidence, and I shall close with that.

Mr. Pratt, from the Department of Justice, brought before the committee, at the request of the chairman and with the concurrence of the other members of the committee, certain documentary evidence, which was largely read into the record, though some of it was put into the record without reading. Under date of March 8, 1923, Mr. WHEELER writes Mr. Campbell the following letter:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., March 8, 1923.

Mr. GORDON CAMPBELL,
Great Falls, Mont.

DEAR SIR: I wish that you would have your office send me a detailed report of the condition of your permit that we discussed with the Standard Oil Co. of California, in order that when I take it up with the Department of the Interior that I will be able to intelligently discuss the matter.

This letter, being dated March 8, 1923, could not have been very long after Mr. WHEELER's arrival in Washington.

I have been extremely busy since arriving here trying to get located, and have an appointment this afternoon with some people from California, who have signified a desire to hear what I have to say with reference to your holdings and Kevin's.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Within the next day or two I will also take the matter up with some other parties here in the city, whom I think will be interested.

With kindest personal regards, I am, your sincerely,

B. K. WHEELER.

Then, on March 13, from Washington, we have a telegram from Mr. WHEELER to L. V. Beaulieu, in care of Gordon Campbell, Great Falls, Mont. L. V. Beaulieu, it will be remembered, was described as the land title attorney whose office was with that of Mr. Gordon Campbell at Great Falls. Here is the telegram:

L. V. BEAULIEU,
Care Gordon Campbell, Great Falls, Mont.:

Secure and mail at once complete list Gordon Campbell syndicate and individual holdings, giving each separate legal description and character of title, dividing acreage into two classes—that in which title is absolute and unquestionable and that in which title may be in doubt. Am writing letter in full to-morrow. Do not wait for letter for this information.

B. K. WHEELER.

On March 13 Mr. Campbell wired Mr. WHEELER as follows:

Received wire. Am forwarding map and list of all acreage with explanation and condition of titles. Expect to leave for Washington latter part of week, making trip through field with Thompson, who remained here ever since Helena meeting trying to formulate deal along same lines as put to us in Helena. Will take matter up with you personally in Washington before anything is done or agreements made. How long do you expect to be in Washington? Regards.

GORDON CAMPBELL.

Then follows the original telegram of March 14, from Washington, sent by Senator WHEELER to Gordon Campbell at Great Falls, Mont., in which he says,

Leaving Saturday for Europe. Have taken your matter up with parties. Writing Baldwin. Suggest see him.

On the same date Mr. Campbell wired WHEELER as follows:

GREAT FALLS, MONT., March 14, 1923.

B. K. WHEELER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Please advise when you expect to return. Believe matter of Lincoln permit vitally important. Is it possible you can discuss matter with solicitor and I can come to Washington and discuss matter with him with view to satisfactory settlement, even during your absence? Feel this permit should have prompt attention. Choteau well looking. Best.

GORDON CAMPBELL.

Then on the same day Mr. WHEELER wired Mr. Campbell, and it is evident from the telegram itself, short though it is, that he refers to the previous telegram received from Mr. Campbell. The telegram is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 14, 1923.

GORDON CAMPBELL,
Great Falls, Mont.:

Have already discussed permit with solicitor, but did not have number. Wire that to me, and I will arrange to have you see him in person if you come here.

B. K. WHEELER.

Then comes a telegram from Campbell to WHEELER, dated March 14, as follows:

GREAT FALLS, MONT., March 14, 1923.

B. K. WHEELER,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

Reply to your wire. Date permit referred to is No. 051978. Will be glad to see solicitor Washington any time convenient. Advise.

GORDON CAMPBELL OFFICE.

Then, on April 7, 1923, comes a most important letter from Edwin S. Booth. It is addressed to L. V. Beaulieu, Helena, Mont., and to James T. Baldwin, Butte, Mont. It will be remembered that Mr. Baldwin was Mr. WHEELER's law partner at Butte, and Beaulieu was the man who was the title lawyer, so it is stated, in Mr. Gordon Campbell's office at Great Falls. It is a long letter, and I am not going to read it, but in that letter are described the various permits about which there was question of title. I mention the following:

Great Falls 052142: Walter F. Scott.
Great Falls 052143: Darrel B. Rassmussen.
Great Falls 051978: Louis E. Lincoln.
Great Falls 051977: Daniel A. MacGowan.
Great Falls 052136: Phillip S. MacGowan.

It is to be observed from this that Mr. Glosser was not talking wildly when he was describing or giving the names of the different persons who held the permits.

I wish to call attention to one paragraph in that long letter from Mr. Booth to the gentleman I have mentioned:

I have personally placed Mr. Campbell in touch with Mr. Freely, of the firm of Vogelsang, Brown, Cram & Feely, whom I consider one of the best, if not the best, firms in Washington dealing in public-land matters, and I have assured Mr. Campbell that they will give him every consideration and will do his work absolutely properly. I suggest that when these papers are forwarded for filing in Washington that they be sent to the firm named, for the personal attention of Mr. William G. Feely, who will bring them over to the department and see that they are properly filed and will do anything further that may be necessary.

Just a word in regard to that and the mention of Mr. Feely's name. It was insisted by Mr. Edwin Booth, the writer of this letter, that Mr. Feely should be employed to do this work—a man who had worked with or under Mr. Booth as Solicitor of the Department of the Interior. Mr. Herrick had been formerly the attorney for Mr. Campbell here in Washington, or perhaps the attorney for Messrs. WHEELER and Baldwin, attending to any matters in which they were interested here before the department; but Mr. Booth insisted that Mr. Herrick should be dismissed and that Mr. Feely should be installed in his place as the attorney to look after the matter.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. STERLING. I do.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand the Senator to say that Mr. Herrick had been associated with WHEELER and Baldwin?

Mr. STERLING. I think I said that he was the attorney for Campbell or the attorney for WHEELER and Baldwin.

Mr. BORAH. That "or" should be left out.

Mr. STERLING. Does the Senator think so?

Mr. BORAH. Yes. There is not a particle of evidence nor an insinuation in the evidence to the effect that he was associated with WHEELER and Baldwin, or had anything to do with them, or represented anything that they represented, or was asked to represent them in any way. He had one permit.

Mr. STERLING. I said "Campbell or WHEELER and Baldwin." I did not think it made any great or particular difference so far as that was concerned, and I said, as I remember the testimony, that it was for either one or the other or perhaps both; but I will accept the Senator's statement in that regard, that he was only the attorney for Mr. Campbell, though I think I can refer to a letter here that will throw a little light on it.

The letter describes other permits—the Daniel A. MacGowan permit—and Mr. Booth then gives certain memoranda in this letter showing what ought to be done in regard to the various permits. There is an acknowledgment of the receipts of these letters by Beaulieu or by Baldwin, and on page 141 of the record there is this letter from Beaulieu to Booth:

DEAR MR. BOOTH: Re Walter T. Scott permit, Great Falls serial No. 052142. Further answering your letter of April 7 and in accordance with the suggestion therein contained with reference to this permit, I inclose herewith consent of surety to grant an application for extension of time to comply with permit.

And there are several other letters in regard to these permits.

Now, Mr. President, to show both the character of Mr. Campbell and in a sense that of Mr. Booth, I quote from a letter of May 4, 1923, written by Campbell to Booth. He says, among other things:

If you can arrange this with Mr. Goodwin—

Mr. Goodwin was an Assistant Secretary of the Department of the Interior.

If you can arrange this with Mr. Goodwin, as we talked in your office, and can get us the permit through by W. W. Rhea assigning to a mutual friend, or, as you spoke, to have some other party make application for the permit, and throw the whole thing out, arrangements can be made to take care of this and Mr. Goodwin. My idea would be, after title was obtained, to assign you and Mr. Goodwin 40 acres out of this lease.

Mr. Booth was solicitor of the Department of the Interior up until May 1, when he left that department; but this letter is dated May 4, and there is nothing to show that Mr. Campbell knew that Mr. Booth had at that time left the Department of the Interior. He says:

This is valuable ground and possibly the best half of section in the Kevin field, as the big wells that have come in since my return are only half a mile away, and this offset well is good and is a big well; they are drilling deeper in the Ellis sand, which will mean possibly a 1,000 or 1,500 barrel well—so you see how important it is that we get our hooks on this half section, to which we thoroughly believe we are entitled. The 40 acres would make you and Mr. Goodwin more money than you would otherwise make in some time.

We will appreciate it very much if this arrangement is satisfactory. We are all set to move in a rig and start a well immediately after we get the permit and guarantee from the Interior Department to protect this permit and offset well. This is strictly confidential.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I wish to inquire if there is any evidence that Senator WHEELER knew anything at all about that letter?

Mr. STERLING. I do not know that there is, about this particular letter.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Then what importance has it?

Mr. STERLING. Taking it all in all, I think it has some importance. It is a letter written to Mr. Booth, with whom Mr. WHEELER conferred in regard to these various permits.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Who said that he did?

Mr. STERLING. I think the evidence shows that he did. I think there is some admission on his own part that he did.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. What evidence?

Mr. STERLING. He talked with Mr. Goodwin. The evidence shows it. I can not take the time now to point it out to the Senator, but the Senator will find it. It is in the record, and I think he will find part of it from Mr. WHEELER's own testimony.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator from Montana searched for it, and learned that Mr. Booth and Mr. WHEELER were talking about financing Mr. Campbell.

Mr. STERLING. I suggest that the Senator renew his search, because he will find it there.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I thought the Senator from South Dakota was so familiar with it that he could point me to it.

Mr. STERLING. No; not at once.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have not been able to find it.

Mr. STERLING. I may, a little later refer the Senator to it. The Senator will excuse me now. I want to go on.

He says, further:

If a company was formed in Spokane on this land, or part of it, if you would rather ride for an interest in the company, we can arrange that, also.

With very best wishes, I remain,

Sincerely yours,

GORDON CAMPBELL.

And this is at a time when he evidently thought Mr. Booth was still connected with the Department of the Interior.

Then, on May 19, 1923, is the following letter from Booth to Campbell——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota further yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. STERLING. I do.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I notice the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] on the floor. A controversy seems to have arisen between the Senator from South Dakota and myself, the Senator from South Dakota referring to the letter from Campbell to Booth about 40 acres, and so on. I interrogated the Senator from South Dakota as to whether Mr. WHEELER knew anything about that letter. The Senator from South Dakota said that there was no evidence that he did, but that it was a letter from Mr. Campbell to Mr. Booth, with whom Mr. WHEELER had conferred in relation to these permits.

I said that my recollection of the testimony was to the effect that the talk that Mr. WHEELER had with Mr. Booth about the matter was not in relation to the permits at all, but was with relation to the financing of Mr. Campbell's operations; but the Senator from South Dakota insists that there is testimony here that Booth and WHEELER conferred about the permits.

Mr. BORAH. I do not know of any such testimony. I have overlooked it if there is. Mr. Booth testified positively, you will recall——

Mr. STERLING. I did not hear Mr. Booth's testimony, I will say; I was absent at the time.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. Booth, in answer to the specific question whether there was any discussion about these permits, about their standing in the department, or if he was asked by Mr. WHEELER in any way to take any action in regard to them, replied in the negative. He stated that the discussion and a telegram which was sent after Mr. WHEELER talked with Booth with reference to information and data concerning the permits were exclusively for the purpose of enabling him to talk to these parties with reference to financing the proposition. I read that yesterday.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, just one word in regard to this business, covering it all, without taking the time to look up the specific testimony.

The evidence shows that Mr. WHEELER when he came here saw Mr. Booth. Mr. Booth, as I remember the testimony, took him to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, Governor Spry, and there was then mention made of Gordon Campbell and his interests, and the wish was expressed by Senator WHEELER that Gordon Campbell should be accorded fair and just treatment; that he had some matters before the Land Department. There was that, and then I think the evidence further shows clearly that there was talk between Mr. Booth and Mr. WHEELER—not specifically, perhaps, but in a general way—about Mr. Gordon Campbell's business and the permits in which he was interested.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon a further interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota further yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator some time ago felt that some inference should be drawn from the fact that as soon as Mr. WHEELER came to Washington he called on Mr. Booth down at the Interior Department. I feel like saying in that connection that the first time I went to the Interior Department here, as my recollection now serves me, after Mr. Booth came here, I called on him, also. Mr. Booth did not live in my city; he lived in Butte, but he is a very delightful and agreeable gentleman, and a most accommodating gentleman, although politically we have never been allied at all, but I felt it my duty, and indeed a pleasant duty, to call on him. Why should any improper inference be drawn from the fact that Mr. WHEELER went to pay his respects to Mr. Booth when he came to Washington?

Mr. STERLING. I call the attention of the Senator to some correspondence that I have already read.

Mr. BORAH. Let me read this from Mr. Booth:

The CHAIRMAN. This list of properties you were sending for was sent for as the result of this conversation with reference to financing the land?

Mr. BOOTH. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. That had nothing to do with departmental matter?

Mr. BOOTH. No, sir.

Mr. STERLING. Now, I again call attention to some of the documentary evidence:

Mr. WHEELER wires Mr. Beaulieu, the attorney in care of documentary evidence:

Secure and mail at once complete list Gordon Campbell Syndicate and individual holdings, giving each separate legal description and character of title, dividing acreage into two classes, that in which the title is absolute and unquestionable and that in which title may be in doubt. Am writing letter in full to-morrow. Do not wait for letter for this information.

Then Campbell wires WHEELER on the same date:

Received wire. Am forwarding map and list of all acreage, with explanation and condition of titles. Expect to leave for Washington latter part of week, making trip through field with Thompson, who remained here ever since Helena meeting trying to formulate deal along same lines as put to us in Helena. Will take matter up with you personally in Washington before anything is done or agreements made. How long do you expect to be in Washington? Regards.

Then WHEELER wires Gordon Campbell:

Leaving Saturday for Europe. Have taken your matter up with parties. Writing Baldwin. Suggest see him.

What is the proper inference from that? Who are the parties with whom he is taking it up? I think the plain inference is simply that Mr. Booth was the "parties" with whom he was taking it up, and the telegram following corroborates that.

Then follows Campbell's reply:

Please advise when you expect to return. Believe matter of Lincoln permit vitally important. Is it possible you can discuss matter with solicitor and I can come to Washington and discuss matter with him with view to satisfactory settlement even during your absence? Feel this permit should have prompt attention.

That is from Gordon Campbell to B. K. WHEELER. In reply, Mr. WHEELER wired Mr. Campbell:

Have already discussed permit with solicitor, but did not have number. Wire that to me, and I will arrange to have you see him in person if you come here.

Does that evidence show that Mr. WHEELER and Mr. Booth did not have some understanding in regard to the permits that were controlled by Campbell or in which Campbell was interested? We could not have any better proof; and, Mr. President, they sent that list, and that is the foundation of the long letter written by Mr. Booth to Beaulieu, to Baldwin, and a copy of which he sent to Mr. WHEELER himself, according to the evidence, showing that he knew, or at least thought he knew, of Mr. WHEELER's interest in it; else why send him a copy of this important letter that he had written to Beaulieu and Baldwin; Beaulieu, the attorney in Mr. Campbell's office, and Baldwin, Mr. WHEELER's partner? Not content with sending it to Mr. Baldwin, he sends a copy of it to Mr. WHEELER, as though he recognized his personal interest in it.

Mr. President, there are a number of letters here which I am not going to take the time to read. The letters show the utmost friendliness between Mr. Campbell and Mr. WHEELER, about their visiting together, going on trips together, and having reference to their families, and so forth. It is important, perhaps not very, but significant in showing the relationship between these parties, and one from which a grand jury might draw some inference.

Then there are some letters which refer to the compensation which is due on the original contract for $10,000. The correspondence shows that there were two checks drawn, each for $2,000, to apply on the retainer fee of $10,000, and a remonstrance on the part of Mr. WHEELER, in a couple of the letters, as I recall, against Mr. Campbell's long delay in paying the fee.

There is one affidavit, the affidavit of Mr. E. M. Harvey, which I am going to read in conclusion. It is as follows:

I, Edward M. Harvey, being first duly sworn, depose and say that—

I am a resident of Eugene, Oreg., where I have resided for the past 20 years.

January 2, 1922, I attended a meeting of the unit holders of Gordon Campbell-Kevin syndicate, at Lewistown, Mont., and was at that time elected to the board of trustees of the above-named syndicate, to hold office for a period of three years.

In December, 1922, I came to Great Falls, Mont., to attend a stockholders' meeting of the American Refinery Co., and remained in Great Falls until January of 1923, in order that I might attend the annual meeting of the unit holders of the Gordon Campbell-Kevin syndicate. At this same time Mr. Campbell and I, being the majority of the board of trustees of this syndicate, held a meeting in the offices of the syndicate in Great Falls, at which meeting there were present Mr. Campbell, Mr. Glosser, and myself. At this meeting I told Mr. Campbell that I was very much dissatisfied with the title the syndicate held to certain acreage and informed him that he would at some time be in trouble with the Government unless steps were taken to correct the defects existing in the titles. Mr. Campbell assured me that steps would be taken to perfect these titles, and suggested the advisability of getting drilling contracts from the persons in whose names the permits had been issued. He further assured me that he would immediately obtain such drilling contracts. He also informed me that he had employed the firm of Wheeler & Baldwin, of Butte, Mont., to defend a suit for receivership filed by one L. C. Stevenson, of Great Falls, former fiscal agent for the syndicate and trustee. He further informed he that the firm of Wheeler & Baldwin would attend to the perfecting of these defective titles, and would attend to such other litigation as might be necessary in connection therewith.

Where would they attend to the perfecting of the titles? Not in a State court of Montana but right here before the General Land Office. I continue reading:

It was further agreed that the firm of Wheeler & Baldwin should do any and all things necessary for the protection of the unit holders in Gordon Campbell-Kevin syndicate. It was stipulated at this meeting that the firm of Wheeler & Baldwin should receive an annual salary or retainer of $10,000, divided equally between the syndicate and Gordon Campbell individually. I objected to the amount of salary because I considered $10,000 excessive, but was influenced by the fact that Mr. WHEELER had just been elected United States Senator, and was further influenced by remarks made by Mr. Campbell and Senator WHEELER. In this connection I protested to Senator WHEELER personally, and he replied, in substance, "You people have a great amount of valuable acreage; and if we can save just one 40 acres of that for you, we have paid our salary." I therefore consented to the employment of Wheeler & Baldwin at the salary above stated.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator will recall that one of the reasons why Mr. Campbell employed Mr. WHEELER was that Mr. Campbell said that every time he had a lawsuit, whether he was right or wrong, they gave the other fellow 40 or 80 acres of land in order to compromise, and he was getting tired of giving away his land.

Mr. STERLING. I do not know whether he said they gave them 40 acres or not, but he was tired of the compromising spirit of some of his attorneys.

Mr. BORAH. And giving away part of the land every time he had a lawsuit.

Mr. STERLING. Yes; but that is not particularly relevant to this matter.

Mr. BORAH. I take it that he hired WHEELER to save his land.

Mr. STERLING. Yes; but what was the scope of the employment? This statement in this letter fairly indicates what the scope of the employment is.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator seems to think that he could not save any land unless he came to Washington. That was the object of all the lawsuits in Montana, to save his lands.

Mr. STERLING. It was not to perfect titles to the lands.

Mr. BORAH. But it was to save his land.

Mr. STERLING. Here is the other statement. The Senator did not hear this, evidently. He just came in:

He further informed me that the firm of Wheeler & Baldwin would attend to the perfecting of these defective titles, and would attend to such other litigation as might be necessary in connection therewith.

That is his statement.

Mr. BORAH. Is that the affidavit of Mr. Harvey?

Mr. STERLING. That is the affidavit of Mr. Harvey; yes.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator contend there was only one class of titles involved here, and that they were pending at Washington?

Mr. STERLING. Oh, no; there might have been titles to property on patented lands.

Mr. BORAH. And so there were, and the title to all this property was really involved. It was a question of perfecting titles with reference to all of it, but the titles did not have to be perfected here at Washington, and there were no titles perfected here at Washington. It was simply a question of adjusting the leases.

Mr. STERLING. What was all this correspondence about? Why did Mr. Booth make out the list of all the permits and send it, with instructions and suggestions as to what should be done in regard to perfecting them?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. Booth sent out this information, which was called for, that is true; but so far as perfecting titles with which Mr. WHEELER was connected is concerned the evidence shows very clearly the evidence related to the titles which were involved in the litigation in Montana.

Mr. STERLING. Not all of it. Some of the testimony may have shown that, that may have been contended, but I say the language of this affidavit of Mr. Harvey does not imply that, but it implies the perfecting of all titles, whether they were titles to property on patented lands or whether they were titles to property on Government lands, and the correspondence here shows—and it connects Mr. WHEELER with it, too—that it was with reference to permits.

Mr. BORAH. Was this indictment founded upon an affidavit before the grand jury?

Mr. STERLING. I do not think it was.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator is now appealing to pure hearsay testimony.

Mr. STERLING. I am appealing to the record that was made and to evidence that was admitted.

Mr. BORAH. Pure hearsay testimony, which was introduced, to which the attention of the witness was never called, which was never before the grand jury, which was not made in the presence of Mr. WHEELER, and by the statements in which he is in no sense bound. It is just the same kind of testimony as if somebody should stand outside of this Chamber and say that the Senator from South Dakota was guilty of misconduct as an officer.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, the affidavit of Mr. Harvey was admitted to the record under conditions something like these: It was stated by the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Idaho, that this was an affidavit; that the original of this affidavit he thought was on the way here at the time. I said the affidavit ought to go in the record. He said that if it was insisted that the affidavit should go into the record he thought we ought to subpœna Mr. Harvey, and I said that if Mr. Harvey had be to subpœnaed before this affidavit went into the record I should ask for a delay until Mr. Harvey could get here, because I wanted the affidavit to go into the record. Mr. Harvey was a trustee——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if the Senator will refresh his recollection by reading the RECORD, he will find that the Senator from Idaho did not say that the original of the affidavit was on the way. I said the original of the letter of Colonel Williard was on the way. But the Senator should state further that when the Senator from South Dakota insisted upon putting in this hearsay testimony, I said that I would not object to it going into the RECORD, but the RECORD discloses that I stated at the time that it was pure hearsay, that Mr. WHEELER was not bound by it, and that if the Senator wanted to rely upon hearsay testimony, he could do so if he desired.

Mr. STERLING. I think the Senator said it was not relevant. That was one objection he made. But I say it is relevant.

There are a number of matters in the record and some documentary evidence to which I would like to call attention, but I confess to being a little weary. I am going to close with the statement I have made. I think I have made evident my position in regard to the matter. It seems to me an absurd proposition, if I may so characterize it, for the Senate, on the report of a committee, to come in and try the question of the guilt or innocence of any Member of this body, an indictment having been found by a grand jury against him. It is absolutely without precedent, without a parallel, and to what will it lead? I am quite satisfied that the question will come back to plague us again and again if we start out now upon a course of this kind.

I would like to have the Senate bear in mind the illustrations I gave near the beginning of my remarks. Of course, the present case is an illustration of one side of it. It would give to Senator WHEELER, if the majority report of the committee is agreed to, a privilege, a right, an advantage that no other citizen would have.

This finding, of course, and the report already have gone out, and every man in Montana qualified to sit on a jury probably will have heard of it. What will be the position of the Government in a case of that kind? Are you dealing fairly and justly by your Government? Are you pursuing a course that will create satisfaction and content among the people when they learn that by this course a jury impaneled and sworn to try the cause have been prejudiced and caused to prejudge the case by what has occurred here in the Senate of the United States? I hope we will think of the consequences of action of this kind. On the other hand, taking the other illustration, he is a poor man belonging to the minority and the minority is a very small minority in the Senate, but it is an era of prejudice, party spirit runs high, and the majority say, "Here, this man has been indicted. Let us try him and see whether he is guilty or not."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I remember that that possibility was the subject of consideration in the Constitutional Convention, but it was answered by saying, "We will make the requirement two-thirds of the Members of the Senate," and it is fairly to be assumed that party spirit will never run so high that two-thirds of the Senate will expel a Member without just cause.

Mr. STERLING. When it comes to the matter of expulsion, that is not exactly involved in this case. The question of expulsion might arise in this case should the Senate find otherwise.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Suppose the committee had reported that Senator WHEELER was guilty; what would be the necessary consequence?

Mr. STERLING. Then the next question would have been the question of expulsion, I grant.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, it would have been the question of expulsion.

Mr. STERLING. I grant that; but that shows the evil of pursuing a course of this kind.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senate has no power except with reference to expulsion.

Mr. STERLING. That is true; but the Senate's power extends to every part of the United States where the action of the Senate is known. Its influence so extends. What it does and what it says by its formal vote or action here is bound to have its influence on the people of the United States.

What have they done over in the House in the Langley case, just called to my attention a few moments ago? I had forgotten about it, but I understand that this is the situation: The committee there, of which former Senator BURTON, of Ohio, is at the head, refused to go ahead with the investigation until the matter has been determined by a jury.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. LANGLEY was not at the time engaged in prosecuting an inquiry vigorously against the Department of Justice that procured the indictment.

Mr. STERLING. That is aside. That does not go to the principle of the thing at all.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I shall discuss the principle a little later.

Mr. STERLING. That does not go to the principle. I am not here going into the motives of men at all. I am talking now for the time and in a sense, Senators, I am pleading, not only talking, that we do not adopt this precedent in this case. As I suggested awhile ago, a solution of mine would be to let the matter remain in abeyance, stand where it is in the Senate now without asking for a vote until the matter has been tried by a jury. I shall hope that Senator WHEELER is acquitted; that he will be able to explain and refute everything that has been said; but I can not go over the evidence, as I have said before, examine it, having heard the greater part of it, without coming to the conclusion that there was at least enough to warrant the grand jury in returning the indictment against Mr. WHEELER.

He will have full opportunity now to explain everything. If he remains here with that indictment pending, he will do differently—and I shall not object—from what other Members of the House and of the Senate have done who, when an indictment had been lodged against them, retired and awaited trial without participating in the work of the Senate. But I shall not object or say one word against Mr. WHEELER performing every duty that devolves upon him as a Senator of the United States.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Was not the resolution to investigate this matter adopted by the Senate after the indictment had been returned?

Mr. STERLING. Oh, yes; it was.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Did the Senator object to that resolution?

Mr. STERLING. No; I interposed no objection.

Mr. BROUSSARD. The Senator served on the committee?

Mr. STERLING. I am sorry to say I did not interpose an objection.

Mr. BROUSSARD. The Senator has made a report to the Senate, and we must act upon it.

Mr. STERLING. Let the Senator from Louisiana bear with me while I say that I let it go partly out of sympathy with the idea that possibly there had been an intentional frame-up and misconduct upon the part of Government officials or those representing the Department of Justice, as charged by Senator WHEELER. That was the feeling I had, for if there is anything I despise from the bottom of my heart it is anything like that. The committee will remember that when a particular name was about to be mentioned by a witness I put a stop to his testimony at that instant. I would not have nor stand for it, because it involved—well, I will not say what or whom just now.

So, Mr. President, with what I have said I conclude my discussion of the case, the last thing to express being the hope that the action of the Senate will be to hold in abeyance both of the reports here made, and let the law and the orderly processes of the law take their course. I do not see how we can consistently, wisely, or constitutionally do otherwise.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I want to put in the RECORD in connection with the speech of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] just a paragraph from the evidence. The Senator referred to the testimony of Mr. Harvey, but he did not go to the record where Mr. Harvey was sworn and testified and was cross-examined. He took an affidavit which had been made under the direction of certain influences and persons in Montana and read from that affidavit; but Mr. Harvey appeared here and testified; he was examined and cross-examined. He was one of the trustees of this institution. As trustee he was called upon to ratify the contract made with Mr. WHEELER, and he was specifically asked what the contract was, as he understood it. He made inquiry as trustee as to what it was, and this is what he testified to:

The CHAIRMAN. As I understand, it became your duty as trustee to approve of this contract?

Mr. HARVEY. To ratify it; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Now you may state, Mr. Harvey, what that contract of employment was and the scope of the employment which Mr. WHEELER was given.

Mr. HARVEY. You mean the entire thing he was employed for?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. HARVEY. So far as I know. Well, Mr. WHEELER'S employment, as far as I knew, was only to appear in a suit for receivership filed by L. C. Stevenson against the syndicate; and also to appear, or bringing some other actions that we contemplated bringing, in behalf of the syndicate. That was everything that I knew anything about that he was employed for.

The CHAIRMAN. Was Mr. Glosser present when this ratification took place?

Mr. HARVEY. I think he was.

The CHAIRMAN. Was anything said to the effect that that contract covered any other matter than that which you have now stated?

Mr. HARVEY. No, sir; absolutely none.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you ever know, as trustee of this syndicate, of any other employment of Mr. WHEELER for any other purpose than that which you have designated?

Mr. HARVEY. Absolutely none.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], with an eloquence often common to him, has beseeched his fellows here in the Senate that in the consideration of the Wheeler matter we should banish from our hearts and our souls all thought of partisanship. For the benefit of the Senator from South Dakota particularly, I want to read, commencing with the third verse of the seventh chapter of Matthew:

And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye?

Then skipping three words of the fifth verse, I read again:

Cast out the beam out of thine own eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 89) authorizing and permitting the State of Arkansas to construct, maintain, and use permanent buildings, rifle ranges, and utilities at Camp Pike, Ark., as are necessary for the use and benefit of the National Guard of the State of Arkansas, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7877) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, consent to the conference requested by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. JONES of Washington, Mr. SPENCER, Mr. FLETCHER, and Mr. HARRIS conferees on the part of the Senate.

FAMILY OF LIEUT. HENRY N. FALLON, RETIRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 946) for the relief of the family of Lieut. Henry N. Fallon, retired, which were, on page 1, line 4, to strike out "the family" and to insert "Amy L. Fallon, mother"; on page 1, line 7, to strike out "them" and to insert "her"; page 1, line 8, strike out "their" and to insert "her," and to amend the title so as to read: "An act for the relief of Amy L. Fallon, mother of Lieut. Henry N. Fallon, retired."

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator state the effect of the amendments?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The House amendments changes the payment from a payment to the family of the lieutenant to his mother who is really entitled to the reimbursement.

The amendments were concurred in.

NATIONAL GUARD BUILDINGS AT CAMP PIKE, ARK.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 89) authorizing and permitting the State of Arkansas to construct, maintain, and use permanent buildings, rifle ranges, and utilities at Camp Pike, Ark., as are necessary for the use and benefit of the National Guard of the State of Arkansas, which was to strike out the preamble.

Mr. CARAWAY. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House. It merely strikes out the whereas.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The House made no change in the body of the joint resolution?

Mr. CARAWAY. Absolutely none.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have no objection to concurring in the amendment of the House.

The amendment was concurred in.

NORTHERN PACIFIC LAND GRANTS

Mr. LADD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 237) directing the Secretary of the Interior to withhold his approval of the adjustment of the Northern Pacific land grants, and for other purposes. The joint resolution has been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with amendments, and will, of course, have to go back to the House. The Department of Agriculture is very much interested in having it enacted into law during this session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. ROBINSON. To what does the joint resolution refer?

Mr. LADD. It is a joint resolution which provides for the appointment of a committee to investigate the land holdings of the Northern Pacific Railroad, asked for by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture, and approved by the President.

Mr. EDGE. I do not wish to object, but in order that it may be clearly understood that the various matters which are receiving the consideration of the Senate do not interfere with the unfinished business, I have no objection, following the practice necessary under parliamentary usage, to having the unfinished business temporarily laid aside with the understanding that it will be restored to its present status as the unfinished business before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the unfinished business is temporarily laid aside. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with amendments on page 1, in line 4, to strike out "1927" and insert "1925"; on page 2, in line 12, after the word "shall," insert the words "unless further extended"; in line 13, to strike out "1927" and insert "1925"; and in line 14, after the word "adjudicated," to insert the words "at the direction of Congress," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to withhold until March 4, 1925, his approval of the adjustment of the Northern Pacific land grants under the act of July 2, 1864, and the joint resolution of May 31, 1870, and he is also hereby directed to withhold the issuance of any further patents and muniments of title under the said act and the said resolution or any legislative enactments supplemental thereto or connected therewith, until after Congress shall have made a full and complete inquiry into the said land grants and the acts supplemental thereto for the purpose of considering legislation to meet the respective rights of the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. and its successors and the United States in the premises: Provided, That this act shall not prevent the adjudication of any claims arising under the public land laws where the claimants are not seeking title through the grants to the Northern Pacific Railroad Co., or its successors, or any acts in modification thereof or supplemental thereto: Provided further, That the inhibition against the approval of said land grants and the issuance of patents and muniments of title thereunder shall, unless further extended, terminate on March 4, 1925, unless on said date said land grants and the proceedings thereunder are being adjudicated at the direction of Congress in the courts, in which event the approval of said land grants and the issuance of patents and muniments of title shall await the final adjudication thereof.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to advise Congress of the status of the said Northern Pacific land grants, recommending such action as he believes right and proper for the further adjustment thereof.

SEC. 3. That a joint committee of both Houses of Congress is hereby created to be composed of five Members of the Senate to be appointed by the President thereof and five Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker of that body. Any vacancy occurring on the committee shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment. The said committee is hereby empowered and directed to make a thorough and complete investigation of the land grants of the Northern Pacific Railroad Co., and its successor, the Northern Pacific Railway Co., under the act of July 2, 1864 (13 Stats. p. 365), and the joint resolution of May 31, 1870 (16 Stats. p. 378), and any other acts of Congress supplemental thereto or connected therewith, and the facts and the law pertaining thereto and arising therefrom, and to report to Congress its conclusions and recommendations based thereon. Said committee or any subcommittee thereof is hereby empowered to sit and act during the session or recess of Congress or of either House thereof in the District of Columbia or elsewhere in the United States; to require by subpœna or otherwise the attendance of witnesses and the production of books, documents, and papers; to take the testimony of witnesses under oath; to obtain documents, papers, and other information from the several departments of the Government or any bureau thereof; to employ stenographers to take and to make a record of all evidence taken and received by the committee and to keep a record of its proceedings; to have such evidence, record, and other matter required by the committee printed and suitably bound; and to employ such assistance as may be deemed necessary. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses. Subpœnas for witnesses shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or the chairman of any subcommittee thereof. And in case of disobedience to a subpœna this committee may invoke the aid of any court of the United States or of the District of Columbia within the jurisdiction of which any inquiry may be carried on by said committee in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses, and the production of books, papers, and documents under the provisions of this resolution. And any such court within the jurisdiction of which the inquiry under this resolution is being carried on may in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpœna issued on any person under authority of this resolution issue an order requiring such person to appear before said committee and produce books and papers, if so ordered, and give evidence touching the matter in question, and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee or any subcommittee thereof, willfully makes default, or who having appeared refuses to answer any question pertinent to the investigation herein authorized, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 and imprisonment for not more than one year.

The sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the necessary expenses of said joint committee, the sum to be disbursed by the secretary of the committee upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the naval appropriation bill which is now upon the table. I ask that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection the unfinished business will be laid aside, and the Chair lays before the Senate the conference report on the naval appropriation bill, which has heretofore been read.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6820) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 9, 10, 18, 21, 32, 41, 46, 47, 49, and 64.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 4, 5, 7, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 23, 26, 27, 33, 34, 35, 37, 38, 39, 42, and 61, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,550,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$62,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$17,550,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 20: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,100,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "plant appliances as now defined by the 'Navy Classification of Accounts'"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "in all, $50,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 56: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows: "No officer of the Navy or Marine Corps, while on leave of absence engaged in a service other than that of the Government of the United States, shall be entitled to any pay or allowances for a period in excess of that for which he is entitled to full pay, unless the President otherwise directs"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 57: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 57, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$1,385,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 58: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 58, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$8,911,800"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 62: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 62, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "and limiting the number of officers and enlisted men"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 63: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 63, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "and that no part of the moneys herein appropriated for the Naval Establishment or herein made available therefor shall be used or expended under contracts hereafter made for the repair, purchase, or acquirement, by or from any private contractor, of any naval vessel, machinery, article or articles, that at the time of the proposed repair, purchase, or acquirement, can be repaired, manufactured, or produced in each or any of the Government navy yards or arsenals of the United States, when time and facilities permit, and when, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy, such repair, purchase, acquirement, or production, would not involve an appreciable increase in cost to the Government"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed on amendments numbered 8, 25, 28, 30, 31, 40, 43, 44, 45, 48, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 59, and 60.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I had hoped that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] would be here when the conference report was taken up. I had my attention called to one item in the conference report, but since that has occurred I have conferred with quite a number of Senators on the particular change in the Senate amendment that has been made by the conference report. I was at first going to ask that we delay the consideration of the conference report until the Senator from Tennessee, who was the author of the amendment that has been modified, could be here, but after conferring with a number of Senators in regard to the modification I have reached the conclusion that it was not so important as I had been led to believe it was; and even regardless of that, as a result of conference with Senators who were friendly to the attitude taken by the Senator from Tennessee and myself, I reached the conclusion that it would be useless to try to change the amendment, which would necessarily bring about the rejection of the conference report. So I myself am not going to make any further objection to the conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on certain Senate amendments, which will be read.

The reading clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 30, 31, 44, 45, 55, and 59 to the bill (H. R. 6820) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes," and concurs therein.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 8, and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In line 1, of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "That," insert the following: "until June 30, 1925."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 25, and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: At the beginning of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "during the fiscal year 1925."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 28, and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment to read as follows: "Provided further, That hereafter upon the presentation of satisfactory evidence as to his age and upon application for discharge by his parent or guardian presented to the Secretary of the Navy within 60 days after the date of his enlistment, any man enlisted after July 1, 1924, in the naval service or Marine Corps, under 21 years of age who was enlisted without the written consent of his parent or guardian, if any, shall be discharged for his own convenience."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 40, and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert: "; repair and fitting out pier (limit of cost, $1,190,000), $250,000; in all, $350,000."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 43, and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert: "marine railway accessories house, $20,000; in all, $198,000."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 48, and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert: "; storage for torpedoes, $140,000; in all, $155,000."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 50, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert:

"Supply depot, Marine Corps, San Francisco, Calif.: Construction of extensible building, including grading of site, $500,000, no part of such sum to be obligated until the Secretary of the Navy shall have determined that it is adequate completely to construct, equip, and otherwise make said building ready for occupancy and use, including the preparation and final conditioning of site: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to transfer to the Navy Department a tract of land situated in the city of San Francisco, Calif., consisting of four 50-vara lots fronting 275 feet on the north side of Harrison Street, and extending back, bounded by Spear and Main Streets 275 feet, for use as a site for the building herein authorized."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 51, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of the matter inserted by said amendment, strike out "$410,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$560,000."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 52, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: After the word "Provided" in the first line of said amendment insert "further."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 53, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: After the word "Florida" in the last line of said amendment insert the following: "; and such additional water supply is hereby authorized: Provided, That the sum of $150,000 hereinbefore appropriated for new construction, buildings, and improvements at air station, Pensacola, Fla., shall not be available until the Secretary of the Navy shall determine that in his judgment a water system capable of furnishing an adequate supply of water for such station can be completed within the limits of the funds herein provided, and until the Secretary of the Navy, at the direction of the President, has accepted the conveyance of lands and rights of way as herein authorized."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 54, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert: "Until June 30, 1925, if for any cause the number of civilian professors or instructors employed in the United States Naval Academy on January 1, 1924, shall be reduced after such latter date, no commissioned officer of the Navy shall be detailed or allowed to teach the subject or subjects theretofore taught by such civilian professors or instructors whose service connection with the academy may have been so terminated: Provided, That in reducing the number of civilian professors no existing contract shall be violated: Provided further, That no civilian professor, associate or assistant professor, or instructor shall be dismissed, except for sufficient cause, without six months' notice to him that his services will be no longer needed."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 60, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert: "toward the construction of one fleet submarine (mine-laying type) heretofore authorized, to have the highest practicable speed and greatest desirable radius of action and to cost not to exceed $5,300,000 for construction and machinery and $850,000 for armor, armament, and ammunition; and the Secretary of the Navy shall have prepared plans and estimates of cost of a scouting submarine and a submarine capable of accompanying the fleet, each to have the highest practicable speed and greatest desirable radius of action, such plans and estimates to be in readiness for submission to Congress on the first day of the next regular session."

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives to the amendments of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

POSTMASTERS AND POSTAL EMPLOYEES

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1898) to readjust the compensation of postmasters and reclassify and readjust the salaries and compensation of employees in the Postal Service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads in the nature of a substitute for the bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, what is the bill now before the Senate?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is the Postal Service bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is before the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. But that is only technically before the Senate.

Mr. EDGE. I agree with the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not know what the purpose of the Senate is with respect to discontinuing business at this time, but I desire to discuss the matter which has been before the Senate during the afternoon at some length.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it is apparent that we can not conclude this matter to-night, and I do not suppose that we want to continue in session. It is now half past 5 o'clock. I am about to move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

Mr. EDGE. Will the Senator withhold that motion for a moment? I should like to suggest that, inasmuch as the unfinished business is not a long bill and the amendment is in the nature of a substitute for the bill, I think it would be in order to have it read, and I had hoped that the Senate would remain in session long enough to have the amendment read. I shall not ask the Senate to act on the amendment, but after it shall have been read, then any amendment that any Senator may wish to submit will be in order, but we will at least have reached that stage. When that shall have been done, it was my intention to move a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Utah is not here, and he wants to be here.

Mr. EDGE. Not at this stage, I am quite sure, because there is nothing that he could do under the request already granted that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendment, the committee amendment to be first considered. As I have explained, the amendment is in the nature of a substitute for the entire bill, but necessarily under the rules it must be read. When that shall have been done, I will not make any effort to-day to have the committee amendment adopted, but the bill will then be open to amendment offered by any Senator on the floor.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I suggest to the Senator from New Jersey that in that case he make the request in a different form, namely, that the reading of the amendment proposed be dispensed with.

Mr. EDGE. I have already asked and received unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for the purpose of the committee amendment, which, as I understand, is the usual form.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Then I suggest to the Senator that he make a further request that the reading of the amendment in the nature of a substitute be dispensed with.

Mr. EDGE. I am ready to do that; and I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment in the nature of a substitute be dispensed with and that the bill when taken up be subject to amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think, Mr. President, that is exactly fair. There may be some Senators who desire to amend the amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They will have an opportunity to do so.

Mr. EDGE. Under the unanimous-consent agreement an opportunity will be afforded them to do that.

Mr. OVERMAN. But if the Senator secures unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the amendment at this time, I think that would be unfair to absent Senators who may desire to offer amendments to it.

Mr. EDGE. My request for unanimous consent, if I may say so to the Senator from North Carolina, and which was made upon the suggestion of the Senator from Montana, is simply to waive the reading of the amendment, so that when the unfinished business shall be really before the Senate more than technically, any Senator may offer any amendment to any part of it.

Mr. OVERMAN. The reading could have been completed by this time; it will not take long to read it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment reported by the committee may be dispensed with.

Mr. OVERMAN. I shall object to that, since I know some Senators are interested in having the amendment read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. The Secretary will read the amendment.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I was about to ask the Senator who is in charge of the unfinished business to yield to me for a moment in order to complete the consideration of an appropriation bill which was interrupted on day before yesterday by a Senator who has since told me that he has no objection to the bill being taken up and completed. There is only one more amendment to be offered to the bill, and then, so far as I know, it may be passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be necessary that the pending bill be laid aside before the Senate can take up the bill suggested by the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. I assumed that the Senator from New Jersey would take that course.

Mr. EDGE. Very well, Mr. President, for the purpose indicated I have no objection, and I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside, in order that the Senate may consider the measure which the Senator from Wyoming desires to bring to its attention.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I will inquire if the bill in charge of the Senator from Wyoming is the measure in which the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is interested?

Mr. WARREN. It is the bill the Senator from Utah objected to, but he has since told me that he had no objection to its consideration and passage.

Mr. ROBINSON. I merely wanted to make sure as to that. I observed that the Senator from Utah was absent from the Chamber and I felt in duty bound to give him an opportunity to be present.

Mr. WARREN. Of course, I would not take advantage of the absence of the Senator from Utah. I had an understanding with him.

Mr. ROBINSON. I know the Senator would not do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to laying aside temporarily the unfinished business? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WARREN. I will say that there was an amendment pending when the bill was laid aside. That amendment refers to a fund which I believe expires to-day. I have no objection to the amendment going on the bill, subject, of course, to its consideration in conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wyoming ask that the appropriation bill be taken up for consideration? The bill is not before the Senate as yet.

Mr. WARREN. I supposed that it was before the Senate. I ask that it may be considered at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9192) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment, proposed by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL], will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, after line 2, it is proposed to insert the following:

> Any unexpended balances of appropriations made for the rent commission of the District are hereby reappropriated and made available during the life of said commission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

POSTMASTERS AND POSTAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I request that the unfinished business be now placed before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1898) to readjust the compensation of postmasters and reclassify and readjust the salaries and compensation of employees of the Postal Service.

ANNIVERSARY OF ENACTMENT OF HOMESTEAD LAW (S. DOC. NO. 113)

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President, 62 years ago this day a new epoch occurred in this country. It was the dawn of a new era of national prosperity, and the settlement of the West, to come into its full being when the Civil War, which rocked the Nation at the time, should cease.

To-day is the sixty-second anniversary of the enactment of the homestead law. The part which this generous act has played in the upbuilding of the western portion of our country is unparalleled in the history of any government. The story of the United States homestead act, and its manifold benefits to the people and prosperity of the country is interestingly and authoritatively portrayed in an article written by Mr. George R. Wickham, Assistant Commissioner of the General Land Office.

I request that this article be printed as a Senate document, that the people of the United States may keep afresh in their minds the great heritage left them by Abraham Lincoln, when, on May 20, 1862, he affixed his signature to a law which stands out so conspicuously as a landmark to the wonderful prosperity of our country.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the article will be printed as a public document.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, what is the request? There is a rule about the printing of public documents. I do not know what this is. The rule and the law is—we can not get away from it—that in order to make a matter a public document we must have an estimate of cost submitted along with the application. I do not know what this is.

Mr. CAMERON. I will show it to the Senator.

Mr. FLETCHER. I observe that it is not very long, so I will simply call attention to that fact. I have no objection.

ADDRESS BY DR. NICHOLAS MURRAY BUTLER

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD a copy of an address delivered by Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, we can not hear a word of the proceedings.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am asking unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD a copy of an address delivered by Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, the president of Columbia University, a few days ago on a matter of considerable interest to a great many citizens.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I question whether we ought to grant that permission or not. What is the subject? Will the Senator tell me?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The eighteenth amendment.

Mr. DIAL. I object, Mr. President. We had a speech the other day from that gentleman, and I feel that it ought not to be circulated throughout the United States in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. When we have presidents of institutions of learning teaching young men how to drink whisky we do not want to distribute their utterances through the columns of the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

ALLEGED CORRUPT ELECTION PRACTICES

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate for a brief time to a matter that has been called to my attention by the mayor of the city of Boston. It relates to corrupt practices in national elections.

I doubt if the Senate and the country is aware that there is probably no Federal corrupt practices law applicable to the election of United States Senators that is constitutional. The Federal corrupt practices law was passed before United States Senators were elected by popular vote as a result of a constitutional amendment. It also was passed before the Newberry case was decided by the Supreme Court. Part of the act was declared unconstitutional in the Newberry decision—that part of it which it was believed applied to primary elections. It is probable that the whole law is unconstitutional by reason of the fact that it was passed before the constitutional amendment providing for the election of Senators by direct vote of the people. The result is that we are facing a national election with practically no Federal corrupt practices of law to control or limit the expenditure of moneys or campaign funds by candidates or political parties.

On April 10 I submitted a resolution calling the attention of the Senate to the absence of law regarding the collection of contributions between elections and other irregularities. In that resolution I asked the Committee on Privileges and Elections to give some attention to this important subject and to report a bill for the Senate's consideration. In January the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] presented a very carefully drawn bill providing for a corrupt practices law that would be effective in regulating our elections. Up to the present time no action has been taken by this committee upon either of these measures.

Very recently the mayor of the city of Boston sent me a communication calling my attention to what he believed were abuses of the corrupt practices act or, at least, improper practices in collecting money for the approaching campaign.

The State of Massachusetts has a good corrupt practices law. If the allegations made by the mayor are taking place in Massachusetts and are illegal, they can be prosecuted under the act of that State. In my opinion they can not be prosecuted under any Federal law. In fact, there is, unfortunately, no Federal law which reaches the regulation of campaign funds and expenditures for the election of President or Vice President. It is doubtful if such a law would be constitutional because of the fact that the several States elect the electors who elect the President.

I have no personal knowledge of the methods being employed in Massachusetts to raise campaign funds, but the mayor's letter does disclose a situation there which indicates that an unusual effort is being made by unusual means to raise large sums of money for the Republican campaign. Since his first letter he has written me a second letter stating that attempts are being made to organize all the varied business interests of that State to raise systematically a very large campaign fund. One letter being circulated for funds by an industrial group alleged that in 1920 Massachusetts contributed $500,000 to the election of President Harding, and it makes an appeal that the funds to be raised for President Coolidge should be larger, by reason of the fact that he is a citizen of that State. It is possible that a million dollars may be raised in Massachusetts alone. It is easy to conceive the possibility of a fund being raised reaching into many millions throughout the Nation. It is evident from these letters that the industries of the country are to be solicited without any consideration of their being beneficaries in tariff and other legislation. Will they contribute toward the cause of good government or in the hope of paying for special favors received or to be received in the future?

I have called attention to this matter because I am going to present Mayor Curley's letters in the nature of petitions and ask that they be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and I have myself drawn a resolution, which I shall present, calling attention to the chaotic and unsatisfactory state of our Federal law. In view of our experience with the Newberry case, in view of the fact that we practically have no Federal law that is enforceable, and even some States have no corrupt practie law, I urge that this committee take immediate action in order that we may go into the coming campaign with the Congress indicating a desire for an honest election. Let us not adjourn until some attempt to regulate and control the raising of campaign funds and teh expending of campaign contributions has been made. We should not place the Congress before the American people in the light of indifference to the importance of honest and pure elections.

The various States have corrupt practices acts. The State of Massachusetts limits to $1,000 the amount that any individual can contribute; but I note in this letter which the mayor has written that the solicitor makes a statement which, I believe, is in the very teeth of the law, to wit, that the contributors can give as much as they desire, and that the solicitor will see that the sum contributed is so distributed that it will be within the statutory provisions.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, will the Senator read that part of the letter?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. In this letter, which has been circulated by a committee in the interest of the election of the President, this statement is made:

> There is no limit to the amount an individual may give the committee.
>
> Notwithstanding the fact that the law of Massachusetts limits to $1,000 the amount that may be given for all election purposes by an individual.
> Large contributions will be so divided as to give full observance to the requirements of the statutes.

It seems to me that that expression is very clearly in the teeth of the law. Making that statement may not be a violation of law, but certainly the solicitor who receives a sum of money and does not report the exact sum that was paid to himself would be violating, as I understand it, the corrupt practices act of the State of Massachusetts and possibly the Federal law. If it is not illegal to state what is in that circular letter, it certainly would be illegal to do what was promised.

Mayor Curley, justifiably indignant over such methods, has asked me to inaugurate an investigation. He thought that I was serving on some committee that was engaged in some such work. Unfortunately we have no such committee. The only investigating committee with which I have been associated is the committee that has been investigating the Veterans' Bureau. It does not seem to me that an investigation, though helpful, is necessary, because if the law has been violated, prosecutions can be made in the State of Massachusetts; but the situation does require some Federal law upon this subject, and especially some Federal law controlling the amount of money that can be raised and expended in Federal elections.

I want to repeat that in my opinion, in view of the decision in the Newberry case and in view of the fact that the corrupt practices act that is on the statute books was passed before the constitutional amendment providing for the direct election of Senators by popular vote, there is practically no law that would be sustained by the courts affecting the election of United States Senators and possibly Members of the House.

Mr. President, I ask that these letters from his honor, the mayor of Boston, be inserted in the RECORD and be transmitted to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and that a resolution presented by myself be read for the information of the Senate and referred to the same committee with the request that the Committee on Privileges and Elections, having had before it the Owen bill since January last and having had a resolution introduced by myself upon this subject in April, make some effort to indicate to the country that the Senate of the United States believes in corrupt practices laws and intends to enact a law which will control the abuses likely to result in election of Federal officers by reason of the raising of large campaign contributions without restriction as to amount or method of expenditure.

There being no objection, the letters were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HON. DAVID I. WALSH,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The senatorial committee investigating the existence of certain corrupt transactions, activities, and persons, of which you are a member, would do a much-needed public good at this time by turning its attention to and its light on an organized plan for corruption, designed to "solicit" contributions from business firms, corporations, manufacturing concerns, and trade organizations, the funds so collected to be spent to secure the nomination and election of Federal and State officers—Republicans—from the Presidency of the United States down. This organization is known as the Massachusetts Calvin Coolidge Finance Committee and its announced purpose, as can be seen by the inclosed copy of the original letter of solicitation, is that of "collecting funds to make sure of the nomination and election of Calvin Coolidge." I assume the Massachusetts organization is duplicated in every other State where tariff-protected interests can be reached; and without doubt the mind and man back of this nation-wide corruption campaign is the chairman of the Republican committee, William Butler, of New Bedford, mill owner and millionaire, and one of the notorious industrial group of Massachusetts, fat and growing fatter by the exploitation of child labor and underpaid, overworked mill operatives in certain Southern cotton factories.

The following paragraph has a sinister significance and indicates a cynical determination to evade the provisions of the corrupt practices laws and get around the limitations of expenditures for political purposes incorporated in Federal legislation:

> "There is no limit to the amount an individual may give the committee. Large contributions will be so divided as to give full observance to the requirements of the statutes."

An eminent American has said: "Public office should represent the result of the voluntary act of the people and not be the sequence of an auction." The intimate private and political relations of the Republican national chairman and the pseudoprophet of law and order, who dictated Mr. Butler's appointment as his own choice as campaign manager, leaves no doubt in the mind of any honest and self-respecting American that the President of the United States is not only the inspiration of this scandalous plan to corrupt the American constituencies but is fully cognizant of its purposes and aims and is aiding and abetting this audacious attempt to buy the national election of 1924. This document and the bold campaign of corruption it visualizes illustrate the sustained hypocrisy and manifest unfitness of their authors, organizers, and beneficiaries; and the exposure of the plot to make the 1924 election "the sequence of an auction" is a paramount duty that must not be delayed. The sooner the people of the United States learn something of the subterranean activities of the Republican Party, its candidates, and leaders, the better for the safety of the country. If the public offices of the United States can be bought and sold in 1924, the beneficiaries of the foul transaction will transfer the control of national legislation and administration to the industrial, commercial, and financial underwriters of this outrageous bargain.

You, my dear Senator, have a personal as well as a public interest in this treasonable scheme; you are one of the targets of the dirty dollars of the Massachusetts Calvin Coolidge finance committee; but I am certain your sense of public duty will outweigh any personal consideration and guide your action.

Coming as it does on the heels of the betrayal of New England's industrial interests—the preference shown by the Washington administration for convict prison labor over free labor, the transfer of the Army shoe industry from the factories of Massachusetts to the Federal Prison at Fort Leavenworth, the gift of contracts for Naval khaki cloth to British mills in Manchester, England, and the refusal to give contracts to the Amoskeag Mills of Manchester, N. H., where unemployed American workers walk the streets idle and hungry—it becomes evident that this conspiracy of corruption, to which the aid and sympathy of Calvin Coolidge and his friends are pledged, is a well-considered plot to crush and degrade the American worker. The constant stream of phrase and flummery, humbug, and hypocrisy that flows from the White House is intended to conceal the iniquity and baseness of this scheme to Europeanize American labor and cripple American democracy, and its stealthy progress can only be arrested by a swift and thorough senatorial investigation that the American people may know the peril they are in; for it is idle to expect that the engineers of this corrupt scheme will set the machinery of law in motion to embarrass themselves. You can do the work they will not, dare not, do.

The Walworth Manufacturing Co. of Boston, from which the corrupt correspondence emanated, is a highly protected concern, whose head is president of the Boston Chamber of Commerce; the signer of the circular letter, "G. F. Elliott, chairman pipe fittings and allied-material group," is some inconsequential figurehead behind whom the corruptionists work; and I believe an early descent on this group of conspirators will serve the public good. The sale of Massachusetts must not be permitted; its consummation would be a victory for the deadliest enemies of American liberty.

I earnestly ask early and effective investigation of this audacious scheme to destroy the good name of Massachusetts and the integrity of representative government in America.

With the assurance of my personal regard, I am,

Sincerely yours,

JAMES M. CURLEY, Mayor.

GENERAL OFFICE WALWORTH MANUFACTURING CO.,
Boston, Mass., April 24, 1924.

_____,

_____.

DEAR SIR: The Massachusetts Calvin Coolidge finance committee has delegated to me the chairmanship of the pipe fittings and allied material group in the matter of collecting funds to make sure of the nomination and election of Calvin Coolidge.

The money goes—first, to the national Coolidge preconvention fund for maintaining Calvin Coolge headquarters and organization work; secondly, to pay a proportion of the national committee expense; thirdly, to maintain the Masachusetts State committee's active work of registration and Americanization throughout all our districts, and to carry on the active campaign for all Federal and State offices as soon as nominations are over.

There is no limit to the amount an individual may give to this committee. Large contributions will be so divided as to give full observance to the requirements of the statutes. All contributions must be voluntary.

I assume that you will wish to have a share in making sure of the election of Calvin Coolidge, and I am inclosing a card furnished me by the finance committee.

Your check should be made to Louis K. Liggett, and if you will send it to me for forwarding to him I can keep correctly my records of our group. In any event, whether your response is a check or a signature of promise on the inclosed card, will you kindly make it promptly, so I may make my full report without much delay.

Yours truly,

G. F. ELLIOTT,
Chairman Pipe Fittings and Allied Material Group.

CITY OF BOSTON, OFFICE OF THE MAYOR,
City Hall, May 15, 1924.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Your telegram addressed to me this day in answer to communication forwarded you under date of May 13, relative to solicitation of campaign funds for the Republican Party, and in which communication was included a paragraph clearly indicating that it was the purpose of those in charge of the raising of funds to violate the statutes, both Federal and State, has resulted in the receipt by this office of additional requests for funds and would rather strengthen the opinion expressed in the original communication that it is the purpose to conduct an auction rather than an election, unless the Federal and State authorities intervene.

I have taken the liberty of forwarding copies of all communications to your colleague, Senator THOMAS J. WALSH of Montana, in addition to forwarding copies to you, and have likewise directed the attention of the attorney general of Massachusetts to a request for funds which has been circulated in the city of Newton in the name of Thomas W. White, supervisor of administration in the department of administration and finance of this State, a Republican officeholder, and which communication is clearly in violation of the corrupt practices act.

Respectfully yours,

JAMES M. CURLEY, Mayor.

NEWTON, MASS., May 1, 1924.

DEAR SIR OR MADAM: The Massachusetts Calvin Coolidge Finance Committee has been formed, with Mr. Louis K. Liggett as chairman. Committees are now working throughout the State to raise funds, and as members of the committee in the city of Newton we are writing you.

This is presidential year and money contributed will be used to finance the nomination of Mr. Coolidge, the National and State Republican Committees, and to provide for the further expenses of these committees throughout the year 1924.

Massachusetts should and will take the lead in financing the work that is necessary to elect Calvin Coolidge. State pride and our knowledge of the man, his character, his judgment, will give him our united support.

This is not an intensive campaign for funds. You are therefore asked to give liberally and promptly. You have the assurance that when you have made this contribution you will not be called upon again this year for additional funds.

All contributions must be voluntary. No corporation may contribute and no public-office holders are solicited.

Please make your check payable to the order of Louis K. Liggett, chairman, and send it to Leverett Saltonstall, 240 Chestnut Hill Road, Chestnut Hills, Mass.

Trusting for a generous and prompt response, we are,

Very truly yours,

THOMAS W. WHITE.

MAY 12, 1924.

A member of our committee will call on you within the next few days to accept your contribution to the Calvin Coolidge campaign fund.

Five hundred thousand dollars was raised in Massachusetts for the Harding campaign, and there are many reasons why we should raise more for Calvin Coolidge. The remarkable character and statesmanship of our candidate and State pride should make this task easy.

The fund represents the contribution of the Massachusetts business men to the national Coolidge fund for maintaining Calvin Coolidge headquarters and organization work, also our proportion of the national committee expenses, and for maintaining the Massachusetts State committee work of registration and Americanization throughout all our districts, and to carry on the active campaign for all Federal and State officers as soon as nominations are over.

Strong political opposition in Massachusetts is anticipated and an aggressive campaign must be conducted to secure a straight Republican ticket. We must all beware of overconfidence and do our utmost to achieve the desired result.

Your contribution to this fund will be the only one we will ask of you this year.

The satisfaction of giving and giving liberally to maintain a Massachusetts man in the highest office within the gift of the people of these United States, the assurance that a continuation of the present safe and sane administration will constitute the best possible business insurance for business in general and for the shoe and leather industry in Massachusetts in particular, should be sufficient incentive (all other considerations aside) to make your contribution as liberal as possible.

Very truly yours, E. J. BLISS, Chairman.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I ask that the resolution I submit be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I should like to have the resolution read. Then I shall be glad to answer the Senator's question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 232) was read, as follows:

Whereas existing Federal laws relating to corrupt practices in the appointment or choosing of presidential electors and in the election of United States Senators and Representatives in Congress have been enacted in piecemeal fashion and consist of six separate acts of Congress, passed, respectively, in 1907, 1909, 1911, 1912, and 1918; and

Whereas parts of such laws have been rendered obsolete or inadequate by the adoption of amendments to the Constitution of the United States, and parts have been declared unconstitutional by the United States Supreme Court; and

Whereas such laws fail to require proper publicity in respect of contributions made between election dates, with the result that large unreported contributions have been made after elections, oftentimes in the hope of political reward or favor; and

Whereas there is no law regulating the methods of soliciting campaign contributions, and no record of the activities of persons making campaign solicitations is required; and

Whereas some of the States have no laws relating to corrupt practices in campaigns for nomination and election, and such laws in other States vary greatly as to their provisions: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections is authorized and directed to report to the Senate, as soon as practicable after investigation, upon the advisability of revising the Federal laws relating to corrupt practices in elections, with a view to (1) eliminating the ambiguous, obsolete, and unconstitutional portions thereof, (2) adding thereto provisions to remedy present defects and inadequacies, and (3) requiring the treasurer of each political committee which solicits or accepts contributions or makes expenditures for the purpose of influencing the appointment or choosing of presidential electors, or the election of United States Senators or Representatives in Congress, to file with the Clerk of the House of Representatives between the first and tenth days of each month in the calendar year in which a general election of United States Senators or Representatives in Congress is held, and at least quarterly during every other year, complete as of the day next preceding the date of filing, stating—

(a) The name, address, and amount of contribution of each contributor to the committee;

(b) The total amount of contributions from every source;

(c) The form of letter or petition used in soliciting contributions;

(d) The names and addresses of persons soliciting, in person or by mail, political contributions; and

(e) Detailed information as to all expenditures.

The committee is further authorized and directed to report to the Senate, as soon as practicable after investigation, (1) upon the advisability and probable cost of preparing for publication as a Senate document a compilation of the laws of the several States relating to corrupt practices in respect of the appointment or choosing of presidential electors and the election of United States Senators and Representatives in Congress, including primary elections and nominating conventions, and (2) upon the advisability of preparing a uniform State law in respect thereof, with a view to submitting such law to the several States for adoption.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield now to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. SPENCER. I fully agree with the Senator from Massachusetts, both as to the desirability and as to the importance of some such consideration. But did not the Senator from Massachusetts refer to some bill that had been introduced by the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Yes; the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] introduced a bill in January, which has been pending before the Senator's committee since that time. Otherwise I would have introduced a bill instead of offering a resolution. I thought that bill was very carefully drawn, and it seemed to me to meet all the requirements of a corrupt practices law.

Mr. SPENCER. That is the very point I was about to ask the Senator about. I read that bill with a great deal of interest, but neither the Senator from Oklahoma nor anybody else has ever even intimated to the committee that he wanted that bill considered. My impression is that that bill, immediately after its introduction, was referred to a subcommittee, who have had it ever since, doubtless waiting for the author of the bill to come before it, and it would be exceedingly helpful if the Senator from Massachusetts had the time for him to prepare such a bill, or, if he thinks the Owen bill answers the requirements, to let us know about that.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I do not think that on a matter of such importance as regulating the manner of conducting elections the Committee on Privileges and Elections ought to wait for the initial step to be taken by the Senator who introduced the bill. It seems to me that subject is of such importance that remedial legislation should be framed by the committee itself, especially in view of what the Senator's committee learned by reason of its investigation of the Newberry case, and by reason of the comments in the press of this country in regard to abuses in connection with the campaign contributions which appeared recently in testimony before one of the investigating committees, that campaign contributions after elections, of which no report was made, were made in large amounts by persons who later became beneficiaries of favors that the present administration was able to give them.

Mr. SPENCER. The initial difficulty in the way, I am free to say to the Senator from Massachusetts, is this, that the Committee on Privileges and Elections is now hearing the senatorial contest from Texas, which is taking all their time, and whether they will have any opportunity to frame a bill in the remaining days of this session, if the session shall conclude next month, I am free to say is somewhat doubtful.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Does not the Senator think that it is a very bad spectacle for the Senate to go before the country in the national election that is approaching without any satisfactory law affecting the election of United States Senators or other Federal officials?

Mr. SPENCER. I quite agree with the Senator that the matter ought to have consideration, and that there should be some law, and that is the reason I hope perhaps his mind is so clear upon the subject that he might put his thought in the form of proposed legislation.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I shall be very glad to do that; but, in my opinion, the Owen bill with some amendments is a very good bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON. I wanted to inquire whether the bill of the Senator from Oklahoma provided for periodical reports?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. As I recall, it does not; but in the resolution which I introduced in April I suggested that the committee report a bill which would require periodical reports.

Mr. ROBINSON. The problem of preparing an effective corrupt practices act grows out of the ease with which such statutes are evaded. Usually they require a report prior to and immediately subsequent to an election, and by waiting until after the expiration of the time fixed in the statute to make the contribution a violation is avoided, and publicity is also avoided.

Mr. SPENCER. What does the Senator mean by "periodical reports"?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Between elections.

Mr. ROBINSON. I mean reports between elections.

Mr. SPENCER. By campaign committees?

Mr. ROBINSON. I mean that a committee considering such a resolution as that the Senator from Massachusetts has just offered might report a bill requiring the campaign committees to make periodical reports. I suppose the Senator knows what I mean by periodical reports?

Mr. SPENCER. I understand what that expression means; but I did not know who was to make the report.

Mr. ROBINSON. Weekly, or monthly, or every quarter. Of course, there still remains the probability of evasion. The same is true of limitations on amounts that may be contributed. We may provide in the statute that no one shall contribute more than $100 to a campaign fund, and that is evaded by some wealthy contributor simply handing out $100 to 100 different persons, and of having the contribution actually made by some one else. I do not know how that could be reached; but I am wondering why the Senate can not take up the bill referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts and consider it, either now or at an early date.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Since the Senator from Missouri addressed me a moment ago, my attention has been called to the fact that the Mayfield case is being heard by a subcommittee of the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Why could not a subcommittee be appointed to consider this resolution?

Mr. SPENCER. There has been a subcommittee in existence, as I remember it, since the bill of the Senator from Oklahoma was introduced considering it.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Who is on the subcommittee?

Mr. SPENCER. I think the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] is the chairman of that subcommittee; but I do not want to trust entirely to my memory in the matter. It was brought up before the full committee at once on being introduced, and my recollection is that one of the questions that was raised at the time was that the bill of the Senator from Oklahoma covered contributions in regard to primary elections; and of course the Senator will realize the difficulty that might arise out of that, in view of the decision of the Supreme Court in regard to our power to legislate in regard to primary elections.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I think it will be a matter of serious criticism, and properly so, in the campaign if Congress adjourns finally without any attempt made to pass some Federal law regulating campaign contributions.

Mr. ROBINSON. Perhaps it would be just as well to deal with the regulation of the general elections, and not attempt to control expenditures in the primaries at present.

Mr. SPENCER. That is one of the reasons why the committee referred the matter to a subcommittee.

Mr. ROBINSON. In view of the decision of the Supreme Court and difficulties that grow out of it.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I ask that an editorial in the Baltimore Sun on this subject be printed in connection with my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Baltimore Sun of May 15, 1924]

WHAT ABOUT IT, MR. PRESIDENT?

President Coolidge is fast becoming a man of poignant political sorrows. On the same day that the New England Republican Senators, save GREENE, of Vermont, who is ill, deserted him in a body in the fight over his veto of the Bursum pension grab, he was sorely wounded in Boston—in Boston itself, of all places in the world. For it was publicly revealed there that the devotees and beneficiaries of high protection are gathering a "bar'l" for Mr. Coolidge's campaign with a disregard of political morality so absolute and unashamed as to have won them high place in Republican affairs in the time when Aldrich, Hanna, and Quay were supreme.

There is a law in Massachusetts which limits the sums that may be contributed by one donor to campaign funds. George F. Elliott, one of the heads of a manufacturing concern and an official of the Massachusetts Coolidge finance committee, who is directly charged with raising funds from pipe fittings and allied material groups, thinks that law is nothing as between men who wish four years more of Coolidge and the Fordney-McCumber tariff law. So Mr. Elliott writes to prospective donors and explains that there is no limit to the amounts that may be given, the law to the contrary notwithstanding. Says he:

"Large contributions will be so divided as to give full observance to the requirements of the statutes."

That for the law when it gets in the way of campaign funds for Coolidge and the tariff wall. Now, as to political morality, Louis K. Liggett is chairman of the finance committee, a subdivision of which Mr. Elliott represented when he wrote that message. When the message becomes known it is necessary for Mr. Liggett, as the superior of Mr. Elliott in the committee's work, to approve or disapprove the action of his enthusiastic subordinate. He hesitates not a moment. With the statement public before all eyes that Mr. Elliott had proposed evasion of the law, Mr. Liggett gives his complete indorsement. More, he boldly maintains the evasion of the law is within the law. He says:

"I take full responsibility for Mr. Elliott's letter. Before that letter was mailed I showed it to a lawyer, who said it was within the law."

It is superfluous to argue the merits of the question that is projected by Mr. Elliott and Mr. Liggett. The facts speak for themselves. These men not only seek brazenly to evade the law, but they convey a suggestion of deliberate connivance to prospective donors that raises the whole panorama of bargaining between big politics and big business, in which governmental favors are one article of exchange and campaign contributions are another. That kind of bargaining is an old and familiar story, and as infamous as it is old and familiar. We have had glimpses of it for years. One of the latest glimpses was given in the oil investigation when the political contributions of Sinclair and Doheny were uncovered.

But while it is superfluous to argue the merits of the question projected so shamelessly by these two back-home champions of the President, it is not superfluous to ask what the President is going to do about it. If Mr. Liggett indorses whole-heartedly Mr. Elliott, does the President indorse whole-heartedly Mr. Liggett? This is not some campaign occurrence far away from the President's notice. It is an indecency that has been exposed in his own most intimate political household. The purse bearer for the President in the President's own home has said publicly that he will evade the law, and that he will evade it after consultation with a lawyer who has told him that the evasion will be within the law. This purse bearer of the President in the President's own home has put himself on the moral level of the smarter denizens of the underworld who use a certain class of lawyers preventively, rather than curatively. Will the President give that approval even the tacit approval of silence, or will he condemn it unsparingly?

Early in April Senator BORAH raised the question of how to control campaign contributions. On April 11 the President saw the Washington correspondents in one of his regular interviews with them, and the same day a dispatch was sent to the Sun in which this appeared:

"The White House has let it be known that the Executive agrees with Senator BORAH and others that great sums of money should not be accepted by party committees from selfish interests, and that neither great nor small sums should be accepted from men who expect a financial return from their investment."

In the case that has come to light in Massachusetts a concrete drive is being made in a specific industrial group for contributions larger than the law permits. Will the President be as moral in this concrete case as he was in his abstract meditations before the Washington reporters?

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, may I say, in addition, that we do not have any provision of law regulating an election contest in regard to a Senator of the United States. The law upon the statute books was enacted when Senators were elected by the legislatures, and therefore applied only to the members of the House. Now that Senators are elected by popular vote, the necessity of some provision of law regulating generally election contests is, of course, most important. The Committee on Privileges and Elections have practically agreed on such a law, and it will come before the Senate, I hope, in the next few days. It would obviate thousands of dollars of expense in the present Texas senatorial contest, because, there being no law covering the case, we have to do with the counting of the ballots, and have already expended over $35,000 in that contest alone, all of which is cared for in the law regulating contested elections of Members of the House, because when there are ballots to be counted, they are counted at the seat where the ballots are cast, by the contestant and contestee, under provisions of law. We having no such law, we bring the ballots here and count them ourselves.

Mr. ROBINSON. From press reports I have read lately I suppose the committee also labors under the embarrassment of having no rules of evidence applicable in the consideration and determination of such cases.

Mr. SPENCER. That is quite true.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suppose in all such cases, and probably in the case to which the Senator has referred, the committee has found many offers of evidence that proved to be wholly irrelevant and immaterial.

Mr. SPENCER. We may expect that. I do not think we have as yet had such, but we expect it.

Mr. ROBINSON. May I ask the Senator from Missouri whether he or his committee have given consideration to the adoption of a resolution or some other measure which will fix as applicable to such cases the rules of evidence applied in civil cases in United States courts?

Mr. SPENCER. Not directly, but indirectly. Much of the testimony which we are now considering would, under the bill providing for contested elections, if it became a law, never come before the Senate. All this testimony would be taken as it is in the case of the House of Representatives; merely the result of it would come to the Senate for their consideration. To that extent the character of the evidence and the amount of it would be cared for, but the committee has not considered any rules of evidence in connection with election contests.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not propose to enter on a general discussion of election laws at this late hour. I only rise because the letter which my colleague has asked to have inserted in the RECORD refers to my own State, and to the capital city of the State, and is written by the mayor of the city.

The election laws of Massachusetts, I am sure my colleague will bear me out in saying, are very elaborate and very thorough, so elaborate and so thorough that I think some people fail to understand them occasionally; but they are very elaborate, and they put on the restrictions to which my colleague referred.

I should like to see the election laws of the United States, of which I think there is more than one, formulated and put in proper form, and also very much improved, as they can be; and I think that ought to be done now, when an election is coming on. The stronger we make them the better I shall like them. We can not make them too strong.

This is a letter from the mayor of Boston. It consists chiefly of a very violent and personal attack upon the coming chairman of the Republican National Committee, Mr. Butler, and on the President of the United States, who are not involved in this at all in any way. The text is taken from a circular sent out by a man named Elliott, whom I do not know, but who I think is an officer of the Walworth Manufacturing Co., a large manufacturing company.

It is in response to a personal call that was issued by two gentlemen well known to me, Mr. White and Mr. Liggett, to raise a fund for the coming presidential campaign. There is nothing secret about it. It is the kind of fund that is always raised, and it is perfectly legitimate to raise it. It all turns on the statement in a circular letter that Mr. Elliott sent out acting for the branch covering this one trade. He says:

> There is no limit to the amount an individual may give the committee. Large contributions will be so divided as to give full observance to the requirements of the statute.

I have not had an opportunity to examine thoroughly or, indeed, really at all, the statutes of the State, but I am very sure that the limitation of $1,000 applies to all gifts to any political committee.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. That would seem to relate to the matter that I discussed a moment ago in connection with the statement of the junior Senator from Massachusetts as to the practice of evading limitations on the amount of contributions that may be made by an individual or corporation by dividing them up and having the contributions actually come in the name of several individuals or corporations.

Mr. LODGE. There are all sorts of ways of evading those provisions of the law.

Mr. ROBINSON. It seems to me that a fair construction of the language the Senator has read indicates a purpose on the part of the writer to invite evasions of the Massachusetts statute. That is the point I wanted to bring to the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts. The natural import of the language which the writer employs is that the statute limiting contributions is easily evaded by splitting up large contributions and submitting them in the names of several persons.

Mr. LODGE. I do not know what method he proposes, but there are methods of giving a great deal more than a thousand dollars.

Mr. SWANSON. Will the Senator read that statement again? It seems to me he said he would do it.

Mr. LODGE. He said that "large contributions will be so divided as to give full observance to the requirements of the statute."

Mr. SWANSON. As I understand from that language, it means that if a large contribution comes in the law will be evaded because he himself will divide it up.

Mr. LODGE. That is the possible inference, but I do not think he is so stupid as that. That inference may be drawn, but I do not believe that is intended. That would require an almost superhuman stupidity.

Mr. ROBINSON. What is the construction that the Senator himself places on it?

Mr. LODGE. It never occurred to me that he was going to divide it himself.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is what he said.

Mr. LODGE. No; he said that "large contributions will be so divided."

Mr. ROBINSON. What does it mean if it does not mean that?

Mr. LODGE. I should think it means they would be divided by his committee.

Mr. ROBINSON. What does it mean if it does not mean that in order to evade a provision of the statute which limits the contribution, if one makes a contribution in excess of the limitation it will be divided up so there will be no apparent violation of the statute? I say that is a willful evasion of the statute if it means what the language seems to imply.

Mr. LODGE. I think it does not mean to imply it.

Mr. SWANSON. He gives assurance that it will be divided.

Mr. LODGE. That may be the inference. There are many other ways in which it can be done.

Mr. SWANSON. But he says it will be divided.

Mr. LODGE. But it does not follow that he will divide it with his own hand.

Mr. SWANSON. In other words, he will let his committee do what he will not do himself.

Mr. LODGE. Not necessarily. The money may come in to him in small contributions. The Senator is more familiar with those matters than I am.

Mr. SWANSON. Oh, no. This is in Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator's general information surpasses mine on that question.

Mr. SWANSON. I want to get the Massachusetts method. It seems to me to be a very expert method.

Mr. LODGE. However, I did not start in to discuss the law. I admit that there ought to be, as my colleague suggested, a complete revision of the Federal law. I did want to make a protest against the language used in regard to men in high position and of unblemished character against whom there is not one scintilla of evidence to show that they have anything to do with it. This is a perfectly independent committee. My colleague knows both of the men, Mr. White and Mr. Liggett, who signed the circular.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I know they are very good Republicans.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, yes; they are Republicans undoubtedly. There is no question about that.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. And incidentally good citizens.

Mr. LODGE. I do not know Mr. Elliott, who signed the circular, and who is evidently connected with the Walworth Co., but there is not a scintilla of evidence against either of the other men.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have another letter from Mayor Curley to which was attached what purported to be copies of similar appeals being sent out by other industrial groups.

Mr. LODGE. I think those letters were sent out by Mr. Liggett and his committee, which is the committee that is doing all the work, to all the trades and industries in Boston. I take it from his letter that that is what has been done.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I had an idea that the letters, copies of which I received, were letters which were sent out by the various trades to the corporations and companies pursuing that trade.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I think that is true, but my colleague has not seen those letters. There are subsequent letters which the mayor sent to the Senator from Montana and myself.

Mr. LODGE. I got the impression from the Liggett letter that they have this voluntary committee. These men hold no party position, but they constitute a voluntary committee to raise money for the presidential campaign. The money is being raised by a very common method of obtaining subscriptions of any kind, by one man taking a specific trade and going through that trade and collecting money from the members of that trade.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is the impression I got, and that from some central authority form letters were being sent to the various trades to send to their members.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The Senator has stated the facts as I understand them.

Mr. LODGE. This is being sent out as a circular letter in the name of the Calvin Coolidge Finance Committee, which has been formed with Mr. Louis K. Liggett as chairman. Mr. Liggett's name is well known. He is the head of the great organization bearing his name. He is a very able and energetic man, of high standing in a business way. Mr. White, whom I have known for many years, holds an important office at the statehouse.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. He was chairman of the commission on economy and efficiency.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. What is the purpose of raising this enormous sum of money?

Mr. LODGE. I am sorry the Senator from New York is so innocent as that. They are very apt to raise funds in a campaign. I have known them to be raised even in New York for the ordinary and legitimate expenses of a campaign. The expenses are stated in one of the letters as follows:

> The money goes first to the national Coolidge preconvention fund for maintaining Calvin Coolidge headquarters and organization work; secondly, to pay a proportion of national committee expenses; thirdly, to maintain the Massachusetts State committee's active work of registration and Americanization through all our districts and to carry on an active campaign for all Federal and State officers as soon as the nominations are over.

All, I believe, legitimate election expenses.

Those are the usual purposes. What I wish to say and all I desire to say is that the language of the mayor in regard to Mr. Butler, and still more in regard to the President, is violent and abusive and wholly unjustifiable. They have no connection, either of them, with this committee that I am aware of, and none appears.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I think my colleague will agree that the mayor usually speaks forcibly and without fear.

Mr. LODGE. He does. Of course, he is a man who, as my colleague knows, has been twice mayor of Boston and would be extremely sensitive about the expenditure of money for political purposes. But there was no need of giving rein to his feelings in that violent manner.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. He has an added interest in having the corrupt practices act obeyed, as he is likely to be the candidate of his party for governor. Therefore he would naturally want to limit the amount of money his opponent could raise illegally and improperly to help defeat him and the other candidates of his party.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly. He is a candidate for governor; that is true. I do not know whether this letter has been printed in the RECORD. I hope it has not.

I wish to say about Mr. Butler that I have known him for a great many years. As a young man he was in the State legislature, and more than 30 years ago was president of the State senate. Then he went out of politics entirely. He has not been in active politics at all since. He has taken no more interest than any man ought to take who tries to do his duty to his party and to his State and country. He was an able lawyer and held a high position at the bar. He then was drawn into manufacturing owing to the growth of the cotton industry in the city of New Bedford, where there has been a very great growth of textile industries. He was a very warm personal friend of former Senator Crane, and he has been a personal friend of Governor Coolidge. He is a man of high character and perfectly incapable of doing anything dishonest or that would break the law. He certainly never would think of having anything done that could by any possibility be distorted into a breach of the law. He is a man of property and a business man entirely. On the withdrawal of former Senators Weeks from the national committee he was elected in his place, and has been a member of the national committee for less than a year, which is the only political office I have known of his holding for 30 years. He is a man who deserves and has the respect of everyone who knows him, both at the bar and in business.

As to what is said about the President——

Mr. SWANSON. Will the Senator permit me, before he leaves Mr. Butler, to make an observation? He has given some very interesting information, but with reference to the vital question he has given no information as yet. Has he disapproved of the circular letter and stated that he would not receive any contributions in excess of $1,000? That seems to be the vital point.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think that it is the vital point at all. He has nothing to do with receiving money.

Mr. SWANSON. He is chairman of the committee.

Mr. LODGE. He is not chairman of the committee.

Mr. SWANSON. He will be chairman of the national committee.

Mr. LODGE. He will not raise any money improperly, and the Senator can rest assured of that.

Mr. SWANSON. Has he expressly disapproved of the letter?

Mr. LODGE. Of course he has nothing to do with it whatever. He has no more to do with it than I have.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator expresses disapproval of it, does he not?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly, if it is a breach of the law of Massachusetts, as I am afraid it is.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should like to inquire of the Senator if he has any information as to who the party is that is responsible for that letter?

Mr. LODGE. I do not know him personally. The letter is from the Walworth Manufacturing Co., which is a very large and long-established company, and is signed by Mr. Elliott as chairman of the "Pipe Fittings and Allied Material Group."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. They solicit those engaged in that business, but I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that it seems likely these form letters were sent out to the different trades and lines of business from some central authority. What I want to know from the Senator, if he can tell us, is who the central authority is with which the idea originated?

Mr. LODGE. This is a voluntary committee; it is not a part of the State committee of Massachusetts at all, and has nothing to do with it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Are we to understand that Mr. Liggett is the head of the committee from which the communication emanates?

Mr. LODGE. It is a voluntary committee; but it is a political committee, and under our law it is obliged to make returns.

Mr. ROBINSON. It must have some head. It would not just form itself without suggestion from somebody. What the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] is trying to find out is who is responsible.

Mr. LODGE. I am afraid the Senator has not followed my remarks. I stated all that. The Massachusetts Calvin Coolidge Finance Committee has been formed with Mr. Louis K. Liggett as chairman. A moment ago I stated who he was, and I mentioned that the letter was signed by Mr. Thomas W. White, secretary of the committee, I believe, who is a well-known man in my State. He lives at Newton, which is the date mark on this communication.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It would seem, then, that responsibility for it must be laid at the door of Mr. Liggett.

Mr. LODGE. The man who made the request about the funds, as I said, is Mr. G. F. Elliott, of the Walworth Co., who acts for the particular group of manufacturers from whom they are trying to raise money. As I said, I will not read what is said about the President; it is mere unworthy abuse without a shred of proof. I do not suppose the President knows that the committee exists. But the President needs no defense either here or in Massachusetts or in the country. His character and high public services are a complete answer to such wanton abuse. This, as I have said, is a voluntary committee and not one of the regular committees.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, can the Senator from Massachusetts give us any information as to the success of these efforts and the result?

Mr. LODGE. No; I have not the faintest idea as to that. I do not have anything to do with money, so far as politics is concerned, on either side. I occasionally hear about Democratic expenditures, but I hear very little of those of my own party.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be received and that it be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to submit the resolution which has been read. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the resolution will be received and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I merely wish to add this thought. The real abuse in the raising of funds and the expenditure of money in campaigns is that there is no limit at all upon the amount that may be collected and expended by political committees. Individual candidates may be limited in some States, but not political committees. Some laws define for what purposes money may be employed to promote a campaign—advertising, distributing circulars, printing, postage, and conveying voters back and forth from the polls; but almost unlimited amounts can be spent in advertising and in distributing circulars and in carrying voters to the polls. The only way to cure the evil of possible advantage to parties and candidates making large expenditures of money in our elections, in my opinion, is to limit the amount that may be so expended by political committees as well as by candidates.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, if the enterprise illustrated by this letter is State-wide, the indications are that very large sums of money will be raised as the result of this movement.

The senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] made a very modest and, I will say, mild defense of that procedure, but he can not escape the natural effect of the language employed in those campaign letters soliciting contributions. It indicates a deliberate, organized purpose to evade the statutes of Massachusetts. The senior Senator from Massachusetts finally expressed the opinion somewhat hesitatingly, mildly, and in no sense censoriously, that the letter constitutes the indication of a purpose to violate the election laws of Massachusetts.

It is a very singular thing that an organization should be effected for the purpose of reaching out to the great business interests of the State of Massachusetts and of soliciting contributions from them at a time when there can be no legitimate occasion for the expenditure of large sums.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts, Mr. LODGE, and Mr. COPELAND addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield first to the junior Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I think a significant thing about the information conveyed by the mayor is that the industries are being grouped and a distinct campaign for funds from each particular industry is being made, showing that an enormous sum of money possibly may be raised.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is a systematic effort to reach all of the business interests of the State and to have them contribute. Now I yield to the senior Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator said I spoke mildly. I did not think it was worth while to storm about it. I have been sitting here and hearing these outbreaks of virtue about matters of this kind, but there is not a Member of the Senate who does not know that money is raised for campaigns in every State in the United States.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me a moment more, I do not say it is raised improperly; I make no charge of that kind, but to sit here and to talk as if we did not know that money for legitimate purposes was raised in every State is ridiculous, and I am not going to storm about something as to the existence of which we are all aware.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the righteous indignation of my good friend, the Senator from Massachusetts, is not justified. We all know that campaign contributions are solicited by political committees, and we all know that campaign contributions are made, but here in the home State of the Senator from Massachusetts persons affiliated with the political organization of which he is the head in the Senate of the United States adopt a procedure which enables them to solicit from all the organized industries of the State of Massachusetts campaign contributions, with the declaration that if they see fit to make large contributions the statute forbidding them will be evaded by the very simple process of dividing them up so as to make them appear to be in conformity to law when, in fact, they are in violation of the law.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I was not defending violations of law; I am as much opposed to such violations as is the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON. The significance of this——

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, I should like to say——

Mr. ROBINSON. Just a moment. The significance of this subject and of this discussion is that in the Senator's State persons affiliated with the political organizations to which he belongs are conducting a comprehensive campaign for the express purpose of procuring contributions in violation of the law of the State that binds the Senator from Massachusetts and that binds those who are seeking the contributions, and they are raising money that will be expended not only in Massachusetts but in influencing and controlling the elections in other States.

Mr. LODGE. Undoubtedly, Mr. President, and if there is any illegality there it ought to be punished; but as to money being spent in other States, I think I am putting it moderately when I say that nine-tenths of the money expended on behalf of the party of the Senator from Arkansas, as well as for mine, is raised in the city of New York.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I seem to be unable to bring to the comprehension of the senior Senator from Massachusetts the relevancy of this matter. Here is an organization which calls itself the Calvin Coolidge Finance Committee sending letters to business men in Massachusetts asking them to contribute liberally to campaign purposes and telling them, in effect, that if they make large contributions they need not fear prosecution for volation of the law, because the committee will arbitrarily divide the contributions so that no violation will appear.

Mr. President, it is not relevant for the Senator to answer, as he has attempted to do, that contributions made in New York are expended in various States of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. No; but if the Senator will allow me——

Mr. ROBINSON. The point of this discussion is that the Republicans in Massachusetts are deliberately violating, at this early stage in the campaign, the election laws of Massachusetts, and the Senator from Massachusetts does not seem to feel any very great indignation about it.

Mr. LODGE. I understand that perfectly. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. ROBINSON. He has not even made up his mind yet whether the language employed by the political committee constitutes an expression of purpose to violate the law.

Mr. LODGE. The only reason I referred to other States was because the Senator berated me because this money was to go into other States.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator is mistaken; I have not berated him; I could not do so.

Mr. LODGE. That is not illegal; it is not illegal to raise the money by groups, but it is illegal, under the laws of Massachusetts, to raise money in subscriptions of more than a thousand dollars each, as it proposes in the communication, if it is correctly copied.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to read something that has not been read?

Mr. ROBINSON. With pleasure.

Mr. SWANSON. First, I read the following statement:

> There is no limit to the amount any individual may give to this committee.

Mr. LODGE. I have already read that.

Mr. SWANSON. That is in violation of the law.

Then, there is another statement which I will read.

> A member of our committee will call to see you within the next few days to accept your contribution to the Calvin Coolidge campaign fund. Five hundred thousand dollars was raised in Massachusetts for the Harding campaign, and there are many reasons why we should raise more for Calvin Coolidge.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, that has an added significance when it is remembered that there was not an iota of opposition to Mr. Coolidge in Massachusetts. There could not have been any justification for raising locally a fund in Massachusetts to secure the indorsement of the President. The object of it manifestly was to secure an enormous fund for the purpose of influencing the election.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. ROBINSON. I have concluded all I wish to say.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, right in line with what the Senator from Virginia read, I wish to state that the Republican Party is seeking to do in this instance just what it did in 1920. The Republican Party relies on money, money, money, all the time. In a bulletin issued by that party in 1920, it is stated:

> Harding and Coolidge have the confidence of the people, but, boys, get the money.

That is from an official bulletin issued by the treasurer's office of the Republican National Committee.

Mr. President, this matter ought to be gone into very thoroughly, because an effort is going to be made to buy the approaching election. There is not any doubt of that. The men who made millions of dollars out of the Government in time of war are going to contribute largely to the Republican campaign fund. The profiteers, those to whom Mr. Mellon has refunded $300,000,000, are going to give to the Republican campaign fund, and those who have opposed so bitterly adjusted compensation for the ex-service men are going to contribute largely to the Republican campaign fund, and they are going out now and starting thus early to raise an enormous fund to help control the election and to purchase the electorate where it may be done. There is not any doubt about that. The Senate ought to do something, as well as the House, to prevent the corrupt use of money in a campaign. The very life of the Nation is at stake, and it is high time that the people were waking up to what is going on.

We have seen enough here to convince us that the Republican Party do not intend to appeal to the sober judgment of the American people, but they intend to use money—enormous sums of money—to control the election in 1924, and we owe it to the people we represent here and to the people who shall come after us to see that the money bags of America do not control the election of 1924, flaunting at the head of their list, "The Calvin Coolidge Campaign Finance Committee," and telling the people that "You can contribute, through us, all that you want to contribute. There is no limit to it. This is the way to evade the law. We want the money." It is in keeping with the conduct of that party in 1920, when Governor Cox charged, and charged truthfully, that they raised the biggest campaign fund ever raised in the history of the Government.

I want to say this before I sit down: The Senator from Massachusetts is mistaken so far as the Democratic Party is concerned when he says that nine-tenths of its campaign funds are raised in New York. That is true of the Republican Party, it may be, but not true of the Democratic Party. Over half the funds raised by the Democratic Party come from subscriptions throughout the country, from $1 to $2.50 and $5 and $10, some $25 and some $50, rarely over $100. That is the way the Democratic Party gets its money—from the rank and file of the party who believe in that party. It does not take much money for the Democrats, because we have so much right and principle and justice on our side that we do not have to have so much money.

I want this election determined as free as possible from the use of money. We must do something to protect the interests of the United States.

CONDITION OF RAILROAD EQUIPMENT

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which was read and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
Washington, May 17, 1924.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

SIR: In compliance with the provisions of Senate Resolution 438, dated February 26, 1923, the Interstate Commerce Commission has the honor to transmit herewith a report for the month of April, 1924, showing the condition of railroad equipment and the related information indicated in the resolution in so far as such information is available.

Respectfully submitted.

H. C. HALL, Chairman.

INSTALLATION OF RADIO DEVICES IN SENATE CHAMBER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following communication from the Secretary of War, which was read and ordered to lie on the table:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 17, 1924.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
United States Senate.

SIR: The receipt is acknowledged of the communication dated May 3, 1924, of the Secretary of the United States Senate transmitting Senate Resolution 197, Sixty-eighth Congress, first session, passed April 24 (calendar day, May 2), 1924, requesting the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to cooperate in the appointment of a joint commission of radio experts to investigate and report to the Senate upon the problems relative to the installation and maintenance of certain electrical transmission and receiving apparatus and radio equipment for broadcasting the proceedings of the Senate throughout the country.

In reply I am pleased to advise you that I have designated Maj. Joseph O. Mauborgne, Signal Corps, on the part of the War Department. Major Mauborgne will cooperate with the representative of the Navy Department in investigating and reporting to you the estimated cost of installation, maintenance, and operation of the proposed systems suggested in paragraphs 1 and 2 of the Senate resolution referred to.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN W. WEEKS,
Secretary of War.

RECESS

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, the Senate has made such wonderful progress to-day in disposing of the unfinished business that I think it is hardly necessary to ask the Senate to remain in session this evening; but I do want to give notice, seriously, that I shall ask the Senate to remain in session Friday evening if it is impossible to dispose of the bill during the day sessions to-morrow and Friday.

I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, May 22, 1924, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, May 21, 1924

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

How great and marvelous are Thy works, O Lord, and how bountiful is Thy mercy. Give us this day the token of Thy presence. So conscious are we of our limitations that we wonder how Thou canst love us so and care for us so tenderly. Surely Thou hast planned for us a great destiny and in the ages to come we shall know and understand Thy amazing redemption. In the meantime enable us to go forward from strength to strength with an abiding faith in God as our Father and in Jesus Christ as our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

TAXATION

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on a resolution introduced by me some days ago.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Reserving the right to object, is it the gentleman's own remarks?

Mr. ROMJUE. It is.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House of Representatives, the question of taxation is always an important one, and in fact it is usually one of the most important public questions our people are required to deal with. I hope the time may come when it may be the habit of mankind to consider all public questions thoughtfully, and free from prejudice and passion, and that the human mind may take its course and reach its final decision on any public matter, unfettered by any false premise and guided only with a purpose to be right and just, as the light and information is given to us on any matter of public concern. Therefore it is, in my judgment, necessary in the solution or proper adjustment of any question of public welfare to get at the tap root of the question if we are to intelligently understand it.

If no wrong exists, no remedy is needed. If any wrong or injustice or inequality exists, it should be balanced and a remedy sought out and applied, and even when sought out and applied we must still know that perfection or exact equality is not one of the ministrations of humanity, but surely it should be the common purpose to approach as closely as possible to a state and condition of exact justice and equality for all, within the promised protection of our Government, whether National, State, or local.

Sometimes confusion exists as to taxes and taxation, because many are apt to think of the subject as a whole and do not stop and take time to separate and classify the different kinds of taxes and the sources from which they come and the purposes to which they are devoted. These are all vital matters, and in order to have a more interesting and intelligent view of the theory and practice pertaining to taxes and taxation we should at least direct our attention to the fact that there are different kinds of taxes.

First, there are national taxes.

Second, there are State taxes.

Third, there are the more local taxes, such as—

(a) County and municipal taxes.

(b) School taxes.

I think we have a more interesting view of the taxation question when we realize that national taxes are separate and distinct from our State or other local taxes and that the national taxes are levied alone by our national law.

These national taxes may be and are of different kinds and character.

First, there is the national revenue law, which involves and includes the income-tax feature as one of its principal items.

Most everyone understands and knows of the existence of the national income law.

Then, secondly, there is another national tax, or that which amounts to it, which is much more deceptive and misleading to the public.

THAT IS WHAT IS KNOWN AS THE TARIFF

The present tariff law as a species of taxation forces a large number of people to pay tribute to the few, or by it the great mass of our people are paying tribute to the class, and the high-tariff law or tax is imposed for the benefit of a few special industries, and this law or tariff tax ought to be repealed, and, in my opinion, will be repealed or modified when the management of the Government is intrusted to those who oppose the high protective tariff law or tax.

This law is deceptive and injurious, particularly to the farmer of our country, and at this particular time of depression and low prices weighs heavily upon him. When he buys the manufactured article he frequently uses on the farm in the price paid he contributes or pays part of it, as the tariff law demands, but the tariff he pays being included in the purchase price paid, the purchaser or farmer does not always think of it as a tax yet it is exactly that, and he pays it.

Now, for a moment let us look at the income tax. Of course, everyone knows that the income-tax feature of our national law provides a tax upon the incomes of persons above a certain amount of income. For instance, you are not required to pay any national income tax at all unless you have made at least a certain sum during the year. That is in case you are a married man, no national income tax is assessable against you unless your income was over $2,500 during the year, and the higher your income goes above $2,500 per year the higher goes the tax in grades.

There is a certain exemption of a small amount of this sum from taxation for dependents, such, for instance, as a child or children of the taxpayer. In case the taxpayer is not married the national income tax is not collected from him on any sum until his profits exceed $1,000 per year, then the tax is to be paid, and the higher his income goes above that amount the greater is the tax by grades. It is no longer disputed that a fairly framed income tax is a just method of taxation. The more wealth made or accumulated, the greater the ability and obligation to pay taxes for the legitimate support of the Government and its institutions.

For a moment, now, let us turn our attention to the matter of taxation, which is levied by the local or State government. Each State levies taxes which are separate and distinct from the national income tax and the national tariff tax. For instance, take the State of Missouri, in which I live. The State government in Missouri levies a tax upon all farm land in the State. No part of this tax collected from the tax on farm land goes to the Federal Government; none whatever; but the tax on the farm lands of the people of the State of Missouri goes to the State, county, and local governments for State and local purposes. No part of the tax on the farmers' land can be used to pay the national public debt; in other words, the bonds issued by the National Government to defray the expenses of the recent World War can not be paid by taxes on the farm lands of various States under the present existing laws; no part of such taxes can be used to pay the expenses incurred by the late or any other war of our country under existing laws.

In order to maintain the State government, of course, it is necessary to impose and collect some tax, but the amount of tax levied and assessed and collected should never be excessive, and should at all times be limited to the reasonable necessities of the time, and the necessity to collect and the ability to pay any tax should be given most thoughtful consideration when any such tax is imposed or levied. The levy, assessment, and collection of taxes on the farm lands, for instance, in Missouri are all matters of State administration, and the amount of these taxes are to be determined by the State and local authorities. For instance, in Missouri within the last three and one-half years taxes, especially on the farm lands, have been greatly increased, while the State rate has been cut from 15 to 7 cents, which is about one-half of the old rate, yet at the same time the present State administration in Missouri has increased the valuation for taxation purposes on the farm land, and in many instances three times as high and sometimes even more than that, as was the valuation for taxation purposes when the State rate was 15 cents. In other words, there are at least two important factors in determining the amount of tax paid on the farm lands in Missouri—first, the rate; and, secondly, the valuation. As stated before, the rate has been cut within the last three and one-half years almost in the middle; in other words, the rate has come down about one-half, but at the same time the valuation placed upon the farm lands for taxation purposes has been advanced or fixed by the present State administration approximately three times as high as the original valuation under the old rate and often even higher than that.

This, of course, makes the taxation on farm lands considerably more than they were prior to the present State administration. Moreover, the valuation for taxation purposes made on the farm lands of Missouri by the present State administration were fixed at a time when the actual value of the land was higher than at the present time; in other words, a valuation was employed at a time when there was a general upward swing of land values, and when they were really at their peak, not only in Missouri but all over the United States. Since that time everybody knows that farm land values have depreciated, not only in Missouri, but elsewhere in the United States, occasioned in large part by the low and depressed prices of the farmers' products during the past three years.

Now, with the present low prices of the farm products which have fallen to the farmer in the last three years, and with an advanced and increased tax which is imposed upon his land, he finds himself under a considerable burden. Now, if any class of citizens are in a very prosperous condition financially, the expense burden they have to meet is not so injurious as is the case where the prosperity is not existent.

On April 8, 1924, I introduced the following joint resolution, which is as follows:

Joint resolution providing for the calling of a conference of the governors of the various States for the purpose of furnishing relief to the masses of the taxpayers of the country, and particularly to furnish relief by lessening the burdens of taxation to a more reasonable status on the agricultural lands of the various States

Whereas in many States in the United States the prices of agricultural products have suffered a depression during the past two or three years and the prices of such products still remain in many respects at a figure unprofitable to the producer of such farm products; and

Whereas some of the separate States of the United States have imposed excessive and burdensome taxes on farm lands and agricultural interests of such respective States to such an extent that said land taxes imposed by said States have become oppressive and unreasonably and unnecessarily burdensome to the landowners; and

Whereas said State and county taxes ought to be regulated and altered so as to become less burdensome to the agricultural sections of the various States of the United States: Therefore, for the good of the state of the Union, be it

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States call a conference of the governors of the various and several States of the United States for the purpose of advising and conferring with said governors, with the object in view of having the governors of said various States take the proper procedure necessary for the reduction of the State and county taxes on the farm lands and agricultural interests of the various States.

Resolved further, That, in view of the gravity of the situation, the President shall call said conference as speedily and early as is possible compatible with the general public interests.

Resolved further, That on and at the assembling of said conference any tax-paying citizen or group of citizens who are burdened by the excessive local State and county taxes on their land or agricultural interests have the right to and are requested to appear at said conference and be given an opportunity of expressing their views and relating to the various governors and the President all the facts pertaining to the unreasonable taxes, State and county, now existing on the farm lands and agricultural interests of the country.

Now, relief ought to be given by a reduction of the taxes on farm lands in the State of Missouri, and any other State where the farmers are similarly situated; and a conference along the lines suggested in the resolution ought to be called before the election, instead of afterwards, for the reason that there is considerable distress existing among the agricultural sections of our country, and any possible relief in any way at all legitimate ought to be given as early as possible. In the first place, the taxes never should have been increased on the farm lands in the State of Missouri, especially under the existing conditions of the last few years; but now that they have been increased as stated heretofore, a reduction ought to follow under the existing conditions, and the farmer ought to have the benefit of that reduction this year; and if a conference of this kind as suggested in the resolution is postponed until November, or afterwards, there will not be time to give the relief to the farmers at their next tax-paying date, and, as said before, the reduction ought to come before the election.

Now, there has been considerable said and, in my opinion, a great deal of false impression created through the metropolitan press, or big newspapers of our country, regarding the tax problem. Much has been said about the Mellon tax plan. The truth is, that if the plan outlined in the above resolution calling for a reduction of the taxes on the farm land is carried out and made effective, and that before the election and not afterwards, it will bring some measure of relief to five hundred times more farmers than would the original Mellon plan. Now, if it is the policy to relieve, where relief is needed, then any administration in charge of governmental affairs ought to pursue the course that will bring the greatest needed relief. While we are discussing the tax question and the resolution above referred to, I desire to say that the proposed Mellon plan as it was originally offered would have meant a benefit to only 106 people in the State of Missouri among all income-tax payers of that State, whereas under what is known as the "Democratic, or Garner-Simmons tax plan," which was the tax bill finally passed and which is now a law, 172,413 income-tax payers of the State of Missouri will be benefited. In other words, the original Mellon plan would hardly be of any relief from taxation purposes to a single farmer in the State, because his income is not sufficient to be affected thereby, but the Mellon plan was calculated to and, in my opinion, it would have meant the relieving of the very large incomes made by the large business interests of the country of taxation, and of them only, without giving any reduction to the mass of citizens of our country in the way of reduced taxes. Now tax reduction ought to mean, and be, tax reduction, and the whole mass of the people of the United States ought to be the ones benefited by a tax reduction, and not a special few, while the great mass do not receive any tax reduction whatever; therefore, in my opinion, the purpose set forth in the resolution which I introduced and which is hereinbefore set out ought to be followed, so that the agricultural interests, which are more depressed now than any other class of business or industry, ought to have the benefit of the tax reduction from the various State administrations where the taxes on farm lands are excessive. The Mellon plan would not bring a single penny's reduction on the present taxes against farm lands. If any State administration where there is an excessive tax now existing on land will follow the provisions and requirements and purpose of the resolution introduced by myself and heretofore referred to there will be some benefit come in the matter of tax reduction for the agricultural interests.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 5325) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in any claims which the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes, had agreed to a conference with the House thereon, and had appointed Mr. HARRELD, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. KENDRICK as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution and bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 102. Joint Resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to modify certain contracts entered into for the sale of boats, barges, tugs, and other transportation facilities intended for operation upon the New York State Barge Canal;

S. 825. An act for the relief of Archibald L. Macnair; and

S. 106. An act for the relief of Robert F. Hamilton.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate numbered 21, 22, and 23, to the bill (H. R. 8350) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes, had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 22 and 23 to the foregoing bill.

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. J. Res. 102. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to modify certain contracts entered into for the sale of boats, barges, tugs, and other transportation facilities intended for operation upon the New York State Barge Canal; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 825. An act for the relief of Archibald L. Macnair; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 106. An act for the relief of Robert F. Hamilton; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, on page 8836 of the RECORD appears extension of remarks made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER]. He asked unanimous consent to extend his own remarks. I will quote the exact language of the gentleman. "I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD." Under that leave he publishes four and a half pages from a New York newspaper. I maintain that that is beyond the privilege of extending his own remarks and it ought not to appear in the permanent RECORD.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, following the remarks that are to be made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN] this morning, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. I have consulted the majority and minority leaders, and they have no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I intended to move to strike the matter placed in the RECORD by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] out of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests to the gentleman that that ought not to be taken up in the absence of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. CULLEN. I was about to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] has gone to New York for a slight operation, and I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will refrain from bringing this matter up until he returns.

Mr. TREADWAY. I was not aware that the gentleman was absent. I am glad to withdraw my motion.

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech that I made in Philadelphia last Friday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WHAT ELSE COULD FRANCE HAVE DONE?

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include a speech I made before the American Academy of Political and Social Science, Philadelphia, Friday afternoon, May 16, 1924, which is as follows:

During the last year or two criticism has, both in Europe and in America, been leveled at France because of her international program and policy. Much of this—I believe nearly all of it—is based upon either the misunderstanding or the overlooking of essential facts. Throughout my paper I ask you to keep in the background of your minds two questions: First, what else could France have done? Second, what would the United States have done in France's place?

Let us picture France at the moment of the armistice. The geography of Europe was unchanged. France by victory had not acquired the protective oceans of the United States or the defensive channels of England. Germany, an unrepentant and virtually unscathed enemy, was still next door. Upon the standards of France perched victory; but only after four years of unexampled horror, during which her soil had without intermission been the battle ground and the graveyard of the world. Her public debt had increased thirteenfold. In respect to finances, as well as to man power, she was shattered almost unto death. She had the memory that twice within a half century had she been invaded and almost wiped off the earth by the same relentless enemy. Mr. Pierrepont Noyes has this afternoon accurately phrased her natural—even, indeed, her inevitable—emotions when he said:

> "After the war France felt herself in greater danger than ever. Germany was still Germany, with a population of more than 60,000,000 very effective people—effective from a military standpoint and even more so as regards economic ability to produce the mechanical requirements for modern warfare. Furthermore, it was a Germany likely to nurse during many years a desire for revenge."

President Wilson remarked to me in the spring of 1919: "France feels an almost superstitious awe of Germany." Was that emotion strange? Was any other emotion possible? If we keep always in our minds the thought of that "superstitious awe," much of the confused history of the past five years becomes clarified.

In 1918 and 1919 France had two dominant emotions. The one was a yearning for complete security; the other was the insistence that she be repaid by the vanquished for at least part of the damage which she, innocent of wrong, had sustained. Security and reparation. These were the objectives in 1918. I believe they have been the objectives ever since.

During the negotiations of the first six months of 1919, which culminated in the treaty of Versailles, France never faltered. She pursued single mindedly the path to her goal. Was there anything in her conduct during those months which was strange or unnatural? She sought to draw the fangs of her enemy. Should we have done anything different in her place? Is there the slightest evidence either of imperialism or of militarism in her program or action during that period? She sought merely safety—the right to be let alone. It is always difficult to dogmatize concerning the state of mind of a nation or of an individual. But to my mind it is clear beyond argument that the France of 1919 was seeking only what any patriotic nation in her place would have insistently sought.

Has the state of mind of France become fundamentally altered in the intervening five years? That is the charge against her made by many. It is worth while to examine the basis for this charge. It may be subdivided into four specifications:

(1) That her maintenance of a considerable army and particularly her expansion of aircraft evidence a militaristic and imperialistic aspiration.

But is this reasonable? Was there any encouragement in the events at the Paris conference, or elsewhere in the world, to a policy of demobilization? Would we have whittled our Army to impotence if we had been in the situation and plight of France?

Take the matter of aircraft. It can not be questioned that French airplanes are more numerous to-day than at the time of the armistice. This is the one element in the French policy that more than any other has alarmed Britain.

Yet is it not entirely consistent with a reasonable defense policy to assume that France has always intended her aircraft for use to defend herself against further attack by Germany? Even if she were mistaken in fearing such an attack, was not, after all, her fear a most reasonable one? Certainly there can be no certainty that France even thought of conflict with Britain in her aviation policy and development.

We must ascertain as best we can the purpose of France in expanding her aircraft. To me the preponderance of the evidence is strongly to the effect that the French policy in this regard was and is wholly defensive. Again I say the United States would have done the same or more if we had been in the place of France. France could not afford the construction of an adequate fleet of capital ships. Aircraft was the cheapest defense. Hence her aviation policy. It should be noted that the French budget for national defense is to-day but 41 per cent of our own and but 37 per cent of England's. We are only in remote danger of a transoceanic attack by another great power. Yet the mere suggestion that we are falling below the 5-5-3 ratio of naval strength arouses this country to alarm and to action. The critics of France choose to forget that her naval ratio, voluntarily assumed, is: United States, 5; Great Britain, 5; France, 1.75. I believe it to be the fact that France's use of her military and naval strength has been moderate and free from truculence. Italy is sometimes said to have become a swashbuckling nation. I do not believe that indictment can fairly be laid, on the facts, to the door of France. Bear in mind, too, that France has constantly been reducing the size of her army. Does that policy point to a hidden aspiration to wage offensive warfare or to annex territories beyond her present boundaries?

(2) It is alleged that the Rhineland and Bavarian separatist movements had the strong though secret espousal and assistance of the French Government. In my opinion there is not a scintilla of evidence that the French Government, as such, at any stage has lent its support to the separatists in Germany.

Of course, very many Frenchmen have favored an independent Rhineland region as the best method of permanently securing the safety of France. To my mind there is much force in the arguments from a French standpoint in favor of the desirability of the movement. But I repeat that there is no evidence that the responsible Government of France has at any time lent aid or comfort thereto. It would even have been natural if such aid and comfort had been extended. A buffer state is a time-honored defensive against an adjacent foe. Yet France withstood the temptation. Still less did she desire to annex the Rhineland region. She knew, from her own bitter experience, the danger to pence of a reversed Alsace-Lorraine arrangement.

But assuming she had gone as far as her enemies assert. Are we in the United States in a position to cast the first stone? Let us think over the story of Mexico in 1847 and in 1914; of Panama; of Hawaii; and of the Philippines, before we condemn our sister Republic.

(3) It is alleged by the critics of France that in her dealings with the smaller powers of Europe she has shown a militaristic or imperialistic policy. But here again is it not natural that she should seek as a measure of defense to effect alliances and to promote the strength of the smaller powers of Europe which border upon Germany or which may hinder the spread westward of bolshevism? The formation of alliances is certainly consistent with sound protective measures. A cordon of states imbued with the French viewpoint and adjacent to Germany may unquestionably be regarded as a safeguard against trouble from Germany. Should not we have done the same if we had been in the position of France? Remember always, too, the "superstitious awe" phrase of Wilson.

In my deliberate judgment every phase of France's program as she has dealt with the smaller powers of Europe is consistent with a determined effort on her part to maintain the status quo in Europe as established by the treaty of Versailles. Nothing sinister or offensive need be predicated upon her program in this regard.

(4) And now we come to the apex of the indictment hurled against France by her critics—her policy relative to occupying the Ruhr.

As to this a United States Senator, a member of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, said within a fortnight:

> "The invasion of the Ruhr is as immoral as the invasion of Belgium."

It is difficult to argue against so extreme and, as I believe, so utterly unfounded a charge as this. Let us first ask ourselves if the occupation of the Ruhr was necessarily either militaristic or imperialistic. Clearly the answer must be in the negative. There was no inherent impropriety in the action, as I shall undertake to prove. Was not the program of the Ruhr consistent with the pursuance of the policy of obtaining reparation? Why should not the responsible head of the French Government be believed when he said publicly within a year:

> "We have no intention of annexing any portion of German territory and we dismiss with the contempt they deserve the accusations of imperialism brought against France. We have, therefore, no mad idea of confiscating the Ruhr, but we shall hold it until we are paid our due."

I repeat with emphasis that it certainly can be plausibly maintained that the occupation might promote the pursuit of reparation. Further, I remind you that when France entered the Ruhr a little over a year ago she was desperate, and that the occupation seemed the only available method of securing reparations, without which she faced national bankruptcy and disaster.

These things being so, there remains the inquiry as to the legality of the operations in the Ruhr. Unless their illegality can be established, is there any just cause to condemn France out of hand for doing what she did?

At this point I desire to quote the clause of the treaty of Versailles on the strength of which she embarked upon her great experiment:

> "The measures which the allied and associated powers shall have the right to take in case of voluntary default by Germany, and which Germany agrees not to regard as acts of war, may include economic and financial prohibitions and reprisals and, in general, such other measures as the respective Governments may determine to be necessary in the circumstances."

To establish the legality of the so-called invasion it is necessary to prove:

(a) The fact that Germany was in default.

(b) The fact that it was proper to occupy the Ruhr, assuming the fact of default by Germany.

(c) The fact that single-handed action by France was permissible if the first two elements became established.

Was Germany in default between 1919 and 1923? The answer is so obviously in the affirmative that perhaps it seems superfluous to establish the point by citations.

Five different times were the defaults declared by the responsible spokesmen for the allied powers:

(a) In April, 1920, at San Remo, the Allies stated that—

> "Germany had not carried out her undertakings as regards either the destruction of war material, or the reduction of the army, or the coal deliveries, or reparations, or the cost of armies of occupation. She does not even seem to have considered the means of fulfilling her obligations. The Allies unanimously declare that they can not tolerate any longer breaches of the treaty of Versailles, that the treaty must be carried out."

(b) On June 30, 1920, the Reparation Commission notified to the allied governments the default of Germany as regards coal deliveries.

(c) On March 3, 1921, Mr. Lloyd-George, speaking as president of the supreme council and officially for the allied powers, said to the German delegation:

> "We are convinced that the German Government is not merely in default but deliberately in default."

(d) On May 5, 1921, the supreme council resolved that—

> "The German Government is still in default in the fulfillment of the obligations incumbent upon it under the terms of the treaty of Versailles."

(e) And finally, in January, 1923, the Reparations Commission, by a majority vote, declared the German Reich was in general default as regards all her obligations contracted under the treaty of Versailles.

Default being thus inescapably established, was occupation of the Ruhr by France an appropriate and lawful consequence? Certainly the language of the treaty is very broad. Certainly the Allies throughout the post-war period unanimously regarded occupation of German soil as a possible and even probable remedy for German defaults. Even Great Britain, which was so opposed to the occupation of the Ruhr when it came, had, in several instances, joined in the threat to occupy a part of German soil. In one instance she joined in the actual occupation. Let us examine these instances:

(a) In April, 1920, at San Remo, the Allies stated that they were "resolved to take all steps, even including, if it be necessary, the occupation of a further part of German territory."

(b) On July 9, 1920, at Spa, the Allies threatened to proceed to the further occupation of German territory, whether it be the region of the Ruhr or some other.

(c) In January, 1921, in Paris, the Allies announced their intention, if Germany did not alter her position, to impose "sanctions," including "occupation of the Ruhr or any other territory."

(d) At the London meeting of the Supreme Council held in February and March, 1921, of which mention has already been made, a distinct threat was made to "occupy the towns of Duisbourg, Ruhrort, and Dusseldorf on the right bank of the Rhine." The occupation of the three towns followed, British troops joining the French troops for that purpose.

(e) At a conference of the allied governments held in London in May, 1921, the Supreme Council passed resolutions—

> "To proceed forthwith with such preliminary measures as may be required for the occupation of the Ruhr Valley by the allied forces on the Rhine * * * failing fulfillment by the German Government * * * to proceed to the occupation of the valley of the Ruhr and to take all other military and naval measures that may be required."

Such occupation was to continue so long as Germany was in default.

In the light of the foregoing extracts from the records of the Allies there can be no dissent from the proposition that all the Allies, including Great Britain, regarded, and I believe rightly regarded, Germany as in default and occupation of the Ruhr as an appropriate consequence of that default. Was joint action by the Allies nevertheless necessary? Bonar Law, later Prime Minister of England and one of the fairest of allied statesmen, thought not. On October 28, 1920, he stated in the House of Commons that—

> "the terms of paragraph 18 clearly left to each of the respective Governments to determine upon the action that it may seem necessary to take under the said paragraph."

The British for domestic reasons were bitterly opposed to the Ruhr occupation. Early in January, 1923, Bonar Law was in Paris making a last effort to avert the French action. On January 5, 1923, he became convinced that his mission was hopeless. He prepared to return to London. On that day he said to Poincare—

> "If I believed that we could get the money out of Germany by applying the French plan, I should support it."

In effect, then, he bade the French Godspeed in their great undertaking. He did not question the right, but the practicability, of the plan. The legality was not, and in my judgment could not, be questioned by the British.

So we come back to the observation of the distinguished United States Senator who was unable to differentiate between the occupation of the Ruhr and the invasion of Belgium. Two differences seem fairly obvious. The one was in direct furtherance of a treaty; the other was in direct violation of a treaty. The one was the first step in an aggressive war of conquest; the other was an effort to secure the payments to which a peace-loving country believed it had an inalienable right.

I assert, then, that the occupation of the Ruhr was a natural step to take. It is said by some Americans that the invasion of the Ruhr provoked a German resentment which makes a new war inevitable. On the other hand, countless occurrences since the armistice have given the French ample ground for the conviction that German resentment was inevitable and unquenchable from the moment the Versailles signatures were affixed and that the occupation of the Ruhr neither added thereto nor subtracted therefrom.

To my way of thinking, the extraordinary thing about the French Ruhr policy is not the fact that they occupied but that they waited four years before they occupied. I doubt if such an example of national patience under equal provocation can be found in the history of the world. Certainly it can not be found in the history of the United States. Take the case of Venezuela; take the case of the destruction of the Maine; was the attitude of the United States in either instance notable for calmness or protracted patience? In neither instance do I criticize the United States policy or viewpoint. But I do assert that if the United States had been in the place of France we should have occupied the Ruhr not later than 1920.

France took the only step, in my judgment, which a patriotic nation could take. There wasn't anything else for her to do. Her action was a legal action and the results to France have justified the gravity of the step which she took 16 months ago.

It may safely be said that without the Ruhr there would have been no possibility of such a frame of mind in Germany as would have led to the formulation of the Dawes report and its probable acceptance by Germany.

Weighing the German state of mind a year and a half ago and the inconvenience to the world which in the minds of many has resulted from the French policy, history may regard the Ruhr occupation as a worth-while means to a highly desirable end. But whether the world was inconvenienced or not, France took the step which she had the right to take and which, in my judgment, she was abundantly justified from every national standpoint in taking.

I suppose there will be some who will say, even though they admit all the facts as I have recited them, that nevertheless France's motive throughout has been an aggressive or destructive one. My own view is that this conception is not tenable. I believe the French to be a peace-loving people. As I have said before, it is difficult to be dogmatic concerning another's state of mind. We can certainly assert, at least, that the foregoing facts are consistent with a sincere desire on the part of France for peace at home and abroad.

Let me set forth some of the elements that seem to make this viewpoint the more probable, and, indeed, the only probable, one.

The French are a thrifty race and hate taxation. This state of mind resists appropriations beyond the bare necessities of national defense. We all know that these have been large enough in all conscience in the last 10 years, not only in France but in countries as remote from Europe as the United States. Expenditures for offense are anathema to the French. The elections of last Sunday seem to indicate that even the program of Poincaré, which I do not regard as one of offense, may be deemed by the majority of the French people to involve excessive burdens upon them.

Indeed, is it probable that a modern republic, a truly representative government, would ever be militaristic? The peasant class of France is, and always has been, a peace-loving population.

Let me quote the words of a skilled observer on his return within two or three weeks from a careful survey of France:

> "Is France militaristic, imperialistic? That, again, is a familiar American question. As to this, I can only say that during many weeks in Paris, in which I met men of every rank and station in life—soldiers, statesmen, simple citizens—I never heard a single word spoken which suggested anything beyond the profoundest desire for peace."

Of course in any country one can always find extremists in any view. In the United States you can find both jingoes and extreme pacifists in large number. In saying what I say of the French people, I am dealing with what I believe to be the majority—the warp and woof of the nation. Is any other attitude conceivable after what France endured from 1914 to 1918—to say nothing of the succeeding years? Self-preservation and nothing more must be the national policy. Self-aggrandizement can have no room in the breasts of the French people.

We saw the general restlessness of France when the three German towns were occupied in 1921. We see renewed evidences of restlessness now in the elections of Sunday. While these elections are not to be interpreted as likely to result in a withdrawal from the Ruhr, yet the swing to the left is certainly not a swing toward additional military demonstration. If anything, the reverse is the fact.

The French as a people have been believers in the League of Nations. If they had been actuated by hopes of aggression would they have been likely to espouse the "cause of the covenant"?

But most of all they showed what underlay their whole thought and even existence in their intense yearning for the guaranty treaty with the United States and Great Britain. In the failure to ratify that treaty, in my judgment, the United States took the gravest possible step in its effect upon the remainder of the world. That treaty was in 1919 the greatest contribution to peace which America could have made. Our ratification would have meant a complete change of the streams of history. The fact that France so eagerly wished the guaranty treaty—a defensive treaty solely—is the best refutation of a militaristic state of mind.

You remember the small boy who, with awe-stricken wonder, listened to his father's comments after he had pounded his finger with a hammer. He said, "Mother, the words were the same as the minister used last Sunday, but they were arranged differently." The facts which Mr. Noyes and I rely upon are substantially the same, but to me the evidence seems clearly to overthrow his conclusions as to French objectives.

Of course, it is true that for the immediate recovery of Europe a policy of cancellation all around—a policy of letting bygones be bygones—had in 1919 much to commend it. It might well have hastened Europe's recovery. But would you and I have acted differently from France? Had not she a right to seek security and repayment? Was it reasonable to ask her to give up either one? Does the evidence of the past five years give us in the United States a plausible ground for criticizing bitterly our great ally?

I repeat, perhaps to weariness, that I regard the conduct of France since the armistice as marked by rare toleration and moderation—and by a patience which is almost unexampled in history. I believe that all the evidence negatives the existence in France of any considerable or controlling body of thought which can fairly be termed aggressive.

I think of France always as a nation shattered by war, fearful of a new attack when the enemy at her gates again sees the opportunity to strike. I think of how France since America was in her cradle has been a true friend of the Western Republic. I think of how we fought side by side in the years of trial, making common cause for the preservation of civilization. And as I ponder these things and many others, it is in my heart to resolve every presumption in favor of our lifelong friend and brave ally. Common understanding, common sympathy, and a common purpose between the United States and France! These should be our aspiration, for from them will come the abiding peace for which the world passionately longs.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request that I may be allowed to address the House for five minutes after the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN] has concluded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes after the gentleman from New York has concluded. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, I made a similar request of the majority leader a short time ago.

Mr. BLANTON. I have consulted the majority leader and the leader on this side and they have no objection.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I understood that there would be no other requests made. I couple with the request that I may be allowed to proceed for five minutes following the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois, acting chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, if he proposes on the last day that the committee has to allow all this talk to be made when we have bills on the calendar?

Mr. McKENZIE. I will say that it is not my purpose to permit the day to be used by Members in making speeches. However, the gentleman from Texas has asked for five minutes and the gentleman from New York for five minutes, and I shall not object to these two requests, but if there are any further requests to be made I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Reserving the right to object, I was going to ask a question. Will this time be taken out of the time for the consideration of the agricultural legislation?

The SPEAKER. The agricultural bill does not come up to-day.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Very well; I wanted to know about it. It is all right.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 7877, making appropriations for the War Department, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 7877, making appropriations for the War Department, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Let me ask the gentleman if that is agreeable to the ranking minority member of the committee.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think it is satisfactory to the gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Reserving the right to object, there was an appropriation of $30,000, as I understand, for the repairs of the bridge over the Mississippi River at Rock Island.

Mr. ANTHONY. For the maintenance.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. For repairs, and it is absolutely essential to the bridge. This is an important and essential bridge to the commerce of the country. I understand that appropriation has been cut to $20,000, which would make it dangerous. I want to know if the House conferees will kindly watch that appropriation and try to see it restored?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think all of the conferees are of the opinion that $30,000 is necessary.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. ANTHONY, Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa, and Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the point that no quorum is present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Anderson	Dominick	Manlove	Salmon
Ayres	Drane	Mansfield	Schafer
Begg	Dyer	Mead	Scott
Berger	Edmonds	Merritt	Snell
Bixler	Fairchild	Michaelson	Sproul, Kans.
Boies	Fish	Mooney	Stalker
Bowling	Fleetwood	Morin	Steagall
Brand, Ga.	Geran	Mudd	Stengle
Browne, N. J.	Gibson	Nelson, Wis.	Sullivan
Buckley	Gifford	Newton, Minn.	Sweet
Burdick	Goldsborough	O'Brien	Swing
Butler	Graham, Ill.	O'Connor, La.	Swoope
Byrnes, S. C.	Greenwood	O'Connor, N. Y.	Taylor, Colo.
Cable	Howard, Okla.	Oliver, N. Y.	Temple
Celler	Kahn	Park, Ga.	Thomas, Ky.
Clark, Fla.	Kent	Patterson	Vare
Cole, Iowa	Kindred	Peavey	Ward, N. Y.
Collins	Lampert	Perkins	Ward, N. C.
Connolly, Pa.	Langley	Perlman	Wason
Cramton	Larson, Minn.	Phillips	Weller
Curry	Lilly	Porter	White, Me.
Davey	Lindsay	Prall	Williams, Tex.
Deal	Little	Quayle	Wilson, Miss.
Dempsey	McFadden	Reed, W. Va.	Winslow
Dickstein	Magee, Pa.	Rosenbloom	Yates

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and thirty-three Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were reopened.

SALARIES OF POSTAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a letter from the Postmaster General giving the department estimates of the increased cost involved in the bill (H. R. 9035) to increase the salaries of the postal employees, and giving also the views of the department on the proposed legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, in the absence of my chairman, I shall object.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Oh, I am sure that the chairman would have no objection to it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

THE ROLL CALL

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, I make this parliamentary inquiry for the purpose of maintaining the integrity of the RECORD, and I am asking for information because I do not know how to correct it under the circumstances, which I shall state in a moment. This first roll call last evening, gives the names of those who failed to answer to their names. Therefore all those whose names do not appear in this list are recorded as being present. I know, and everyone else knows, for instance, that the gentleman from Kansas, Mr. TINCHER; the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. LONGWORTH; the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. BURTON, were not here, and that fact was commented upon facetiously here. Yet the RECORD shows that they were here and voting, when everybody knows they were not. I make the parliamentary inquiry for the purpose of asking if there is any way to correct the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman does not exactly state the facts.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I hate to differ with the Speaker, but I think I am stating the facts.

The SPEAKER. This is what is stated in the RECORD, as the Chair understands it. Directly below the first roll call you read:

During the roll call the following occurred:

Then the RECORD goes on for three or four pages with proceedings which occurred, all which are intended to appear as happening during this first roll call, which was not completed until after other roll calls.

Mr. KINCHELOE. If the Speaker will permit, it shows that immediately following what happened there, there was another roll call.

The SPEAKER. Exactly.

Mr. KINCHELOE. And the point I am making is that on the first roll call it shows that these gentlemen were present when, as a matter of fact, they were not present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not catch the Chair's meaning. The Chair says that during the first call, according to the RECORD, "the following occurred," and the Chair assumes that that means that the other roll calls were part of the incidental proceedings, and that the first call shows really the Members who were present at the very end of the proceedings, after all of these other proceedings had transpired.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, everyone knows that these gentlemen mentioned, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER], were not here on the second roll call, and yet that shows that they were here.

The second roll call was on a vote to dispense with further proceedings under the call, and it shows those who voted nay, and among those are to be found the names of the gentleman from Kansas and the gentleman from Ohio, when, as a matter of fact, they were not here.

The SPEAKER. They were here before the roll call was completed.

Mr. KINCHELOE. But that is another roll call altogether.

The SPEAKER. Perhaps the Chair does not understand the gentleman. Let the Chair state his understanding of the matter. The first roll call which appears is a roll call that was pending during the whole evening. A quorum appeared finally on that roll call. That roll call was pending while the other roll calls, subsequently appearing in the RECORD, were taken, and while the other proceedings were going on, so that when those other proceedings were finished, this roll call, which is printed first, was completed, and it shows the names of the Members who were there at the end—in a negative way, of course—because it records only the names of those who failed to answer to their names.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The first call was on a point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. And on page 9044 of the RECORD it shows that "the following Members failed to answer to their names," and then those whose names are absent from that list are the three gentlemen to whom I have referred. Then comes next another roll call on the motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call, which was a yea-and-nay vote, and among those answering nay are to be found the names of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH]. As a matter of fact, they were not here, and they will not say that they were here and voted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not at first understand the gentleman. The gentleman thinks that the RECORD of some of the subsequent roll calls shows that some gentlemen are recorded as present who were not present?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Absolutely; on the second roll call.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not at first understand the gentleman to mean that.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The point I am making, and I am asking it in good faith, because it is not a personal matter, is, How is the integrity of the RECORD to be preserved if it is misrepresented like that was?

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the gentleman. Of course, if the RECORD is incorrect, it ought to be corrected. Will the gentleman state some specific person who was here and let us see in regard to it?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I will state that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] was not here on the second roll call, and I will say that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] was not here on the second roll call, and they will not say they were here, and the RECORD shows they were here and voted "no."

Mr. LONGWORTH. So far as I am concerned, I have not looked at the RECORD and do not know——

The SPEAKER. The Clerk at the desk says that the gentleman from Ohio came in during the roll call.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Then the Clerk at the desk is mistaken about it. The parliamentary inquiry I propound is, What is the procedure to correct the RECORD when we know it needs correction?

The SPEAKER. It ought to be corrected, the Chair thinks, and the procedure would be to ask unanimous consent to correct the RECORD as is done every morning when mistakes are made.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, may I be heard?

Mr. MCKENZIE. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I beg to differ from the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE] about this RECORD. At first glance I thought the RECORD was wrong; but I will call the attention of the Chair to just what happened. In the first place there was a point of no quorum made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE]. On the roll call it developed that there was no quorum; therefore that roll call could not be completed, and the House was at a standstill. Then, later, the gentleman from Kentucky made a motion that the House adjourn; and on that roll call we failed to develop a quorum. Then the motion was made—whether it was in order or not, it was made and no point of order made against it—to dispense with further proceedings under that call, and that motion was lost. We stayed here for some time waiting for a quorum; and when enough Members finally came in to develop a quorum under the last call the gentlemen whose names were mentioned were among them.

The proceedings under the second call had not been dispensed with, and, in my opinion, they had a right to vote and also they had a right to be recorded as constituting a quorum under the unfinished call, or, at least, the clerk was justified under the situation as it then existed in recording them as he did.

The first roll call had not developed a quorum and could not be closed. It was open until we developed a quorum or the House adjourned. We had refused to dispense with further proceedings under the second call, which left it still open.

Under this situation I submit the clerk was justified in recording those Members who appeared and asked to be recorded on those unfinished roll calls.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, I want to say this in conclusion, that every one of these roll calls showed there was not a quorum at any time here, and they voted no on a proposition when they were not here.

The SPEAKER. The first roll call, as the Chair stated, was pending during the whole evening so the men who came in could be recorded on that, although they were not here when their names were called. Of course, on the other roll calls men could not be recorded who were not here, and in that respect the RECORD, if errors were made, should be corrected.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I want to correct the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, first I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky and the House to the fact that further on in the record of the proceedings, after the first roll call, giving the names of those who did not answer to their names, is the statement that subsequently 36 Members appeared and answered to their names. The men whom the gentleman from Kentucky had in mind may have been included in that 36. In looking over the roll call I notice that my name does not appear among those who failed to answer to their names, and I at no time answered to my name on a roll call last night, and I would like to have the RECORD corrected accordingly.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Speaker, I had not noticed but one roll call showing I was absent and not voting until my attention was called to it by the statement of the gentleman across the aisle. I was not here when the roll call was ordered last night and I do not have any notion as to how much the RECORD is wrong. One thing I want to call to the attention of the Speaker and the House is the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE] named three Republicans whose names do not appear on this first list as being absent and complained it should show. I had the good fortune to come in with two Democratic Members, very good gentlemen, and we came in together and our names appear exactly alike throughout the roll call. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. During this melee last night I came in at least half an hour earlier than did the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER], which I think can be demonstrated by many Members on the floor, and answered to my name, and was here when the gentleman from Kansas and his colleagues came in. Yet his name appears as answering on the roll call and mine appears as not answering.

Mr. TINCHER. I am sure I was not to blame for that. I came in with the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] instead of with the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I may be a little bit confused about this——

The SPEAKER. Would it not be wise to let this go over until to-morrow and let the gentleman ascertain where the mistakes were?

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that wherever the gentleman from Kansas is recorded as present I be recorded as present. [Laughter.]

Mr. ASWELL rose.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I would like to ask what is the regular order?

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been these requests to correct the RECORD. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL] is recognized.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kansas named another gentleman on this side of the Chamber as being with him last night. That gentleman is reported as being absent on the roll call and TINCHER present. Entirely impersonally I want to state the fact that can be verified by a dozen gentlemen who stood with me at this door last night after the House had unanimously decided to issue warrants to arrest the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] and other absent Members who were away on this important occasion in the discussion of farm legislation. After the House had sent a warrant to arrest the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] and those along with him came panting into that door, and six of us came and looked at the clock as he walked into this House exactly as the clock struck 10; after two roll calls and a delay of two hours the self-styled friend of the farmer appeared ahead of the arresting officers. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to prefer a request for unanimous consent. It is evident that this slight misunderstanding arose from the fact of the peculiar wording of the rule under which we were acting, which provided that the House should stand in recess between the hours of 6 and 8. I am quite certain that there is nobody on either side of the House who desires to prevent the orderly transaction of this business, and of course it is much more difficult to have a quorum always present in the House than it is in Committee of the Whole. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the rule be amended by striking out the provision as to the recess and permit the House to go into Committee of the Whole and act as in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ASWELL. I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. MOORE of Virginia rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia will be recognized.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I am only going to take a minute. I want to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH]. It is apparent that we can not have a large attendance at night sessions. I will ask the gentleman if he will not move to amend the rule, and request unanimous consent for that purpose, to dispense with a night session to-morrow night?

Mr. LONGWORTH. That was what I intended to do. My purpose was merely to cut out that part of the rule which provides for the recess. In other words, the committee can then go on until it is tired of the discussion. That will prevent what occurred last night in consequence of the House meeting at 8 o'clock, when almost certainly there could not be a quorum. If the House will consent to amend the rule and simply strike out that portion of it pertaining to recess we can save time and dispense with night sessions.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I assume that the gentleman would be willing to dispense with the night session.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I hope we can finish with the debate to-morrow, and by staying until perhaps 7 or 8 o'clock, staying as late as possible, we can make substantial progress.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I hope the gentleman will ask for unanimous consent.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I made an appeal as earnestly as I could yesterday to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] and to the chairman of the Committee on Rules [Mr. SNELL] to omit from the rule any reference to night sessions.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that is the request.

Mr. ASWELL. I insisted then, as I do now, that that was a fatal mistake, and unless the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], or the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE], will state in this unanimous-consent request that the night session is eliminated from the rule, I shall object.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman consent to this, that I prefer the request in this way: That the Committee of the Whole continue in session until 7 o'clock?

Mr. ASWELL. That is all right.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then I will modify my request to that extent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the arrangement made yesterday for an evening session be modified, and that instead it be agreed that the Committee of the Whole stay in session to-morrow evening until 7 o'clock, and not later. Is there objection?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I object to that request. We have before us a bill that every man in this Congress should want to understand. We have had an explanation of some features of it, an explanation from some angles, and I believe we should have an opportunity to fairly present the bill to all of the Members. Now, I know this request is made in the best of good faith, but I do not believe gentlemen on the other side [Democratic] ought to interfere with the debate. If we remain in Committee of the Whole, then it only requires 100 for a quorum; and if some Members, who are not particularly interested, do not want to remain they will not have to do so, but business will not be interfered with.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Under this arrangement—and I think it is fair, although I would personally like to take up more time in general debate—if we meet at 11 o'clock and keep a quorum here we can debate this bill for eight hours. It seems to me this is the most satisfactory arrangement we can expect, and I think it is in the interest of the consideration of this bill. So I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield to me for a minute?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The gentleman, I hope, will not assume that there is any effort being made on this side of the House to block debate, because this side of the House is just as willing to proceed with the matter——

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands the regular order. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

IMPRISONMENT OF EAMON DE VALERA

The gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, while we are sitting here calmly to-day, having liberty of person and enjoying peace and the pursuit of happiness, an American citizen is languishing in a foreign jail, and despite the fact that the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] and I introduced resolutions, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, requesting that the Congress of the United States demand the release of this American citizen and his colleagues, nothing whatever has been done by this House. And a subsequent resolution which I introduced, calling upon the Secretary of State for any information he might have relative to this man's status, was answered by him stating that he had no information whatever.

The Hon. Eamon de Valera is now and has been for eight months imprisoned, held without charge or trial, in solitary confinement in the prison at Arbor Hill, Dublin. He was arrested four months after he had persuaded the most militant group of the republican army to lay down their arms and inaugurate the constitutional campaign for the republic.

In our country we have criticized those who would endeavor to change the form of government by revolution or by anarchy, and we have justly criticized them, but we have never denied to any man or any group of men the right to seek changes in government by constitutional means, and these are the constitutional means adopted by the patriots in Ireland who are now in prison.

De Valera was seized while publicly addressing his constituents. He is an Irish patriot leader. He was elected President of the Irish Republic in 1919 following the last general elections of all Ireland, with over 80 per cent of the Irish electorate voting for the Irish Republic.

He is to-day the elected leader of the party supporting the Irish Republic, which won 44 seats out of 153 in the Irish Congress at the elections in last August.

He was arrested under the abrogation of habeas corpus rights, which abrogation has been condemned as constituting a fraud under the constitution of the Irish Free State.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOYLAN. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Did I understand the gentleman to say that Mr. de Valera is an American citizen?

Mr. BOYLAN. He is; yes.

Mr. DENISON. How can an American citizen be elected President of the Irish Republic?

Mr. BOYLAN. Well, the Irish Republic was not recognized, and de Valera is but actuated by the same motives that actuated Lafayette to come to America, that actuated Steuben and that actuated Pulaski, Kosciusko, and all the other famous patriots, liberty loving as they were, to come and help a country achieve a liberty, a liberty which you, sir, now enjoy and of which you are the accredited Representative of a constituency.

Mr. DENISON. But we could not have elected Lafayette President of this Republic.

Mr. BOYLAN. I decline to yield further, as I have only a few minutes.

No charge of any kind has been made against Eamon de Valera or his colleagues. Their only crime, in the eyes of their captors, is their steadfast defense of the republican ideals of government.

The interest of liberty-loving Americans in his cause is best evidenced by the numerous indignation meetings and resolutions passed throughout the country. To-day millions of our countrymen are desiring and praying for the release of Hon. Eamon de Valera and his fellow prisoners. These Americans love and sympathize with de Valera and the Irish Republic cause because they maintain that they are in consonance with the American traditions and ideals since Jefferson's day, which would accord to men and nations struggling for liberty America's full sympathy and early recognition. They believe that they are only actuated by American ideals of human liberty as defined in the Declaration of Independence and upon which the governmental institutions of America are established.

Our Government has intervened in many cases with foreign countries in behalf of men and women unjustly imprisoned. When the ministers of state were tried in Greece in a procedure that was a mockery of justice, with their so-called judges, their accusers, and condemned on trumped-up charges that might be made against anyone on the losing side of armed conflict; when an archbishop, his vicar general, and a host of their clergy were persecuted by the Soviet Government of Russia, our Government not only deplored but protested these acts of Greece and Russia, and has steadfastly declined to recognize the Soviet Government; and it will be to its eternal credit for our Government to refuse ever to recognize that Government until those in office and their successors renounce or make reparation for such atrocities before God and civilization.

But if these were enormities, what must be said of the reign by which those occupying the seats of government in Ireland have endeavored to save their failing fortunes by illegal proceedings? Greece and Russia, at least, went through a form of trial. What hearings were ever given to Childers, Mellowes, O'Connor, Barrett, and McKelvey or Daly, to say nothing of scores of others who went to death? De Valera and his colleagues are State prisoners. They have been confined nearly a year in prison without any charge being lodged against them. They are not criminals. They are patriots seeking to establish a republican government in their native land. They look to our great Republic with its splendid ideals to intervene and help them in their hour of necessity.

I believe, therefore, that it is a proper matter in which the Congress should intervene and request the discharge of these liberty-loving patriots from prison.

What is going to be the action of this House, seated as we are here to-day, in the very temple of liberty, under the Dome of the great Capitol, basking in the power of this Government of ours whose influence radiates throughout the entire world? Those seeking liberty of conscience or liberty of thought or action have ever looked to America. What would those illustrious descendants of the Pilgrim Fathers say, what would those descendants of the first families of Virginia say, what would the other illustrious Americans sitting here to-day, whose forbears have taken part in the struggle for American liberty—what would they say if they heard that the Sixty-eighth Congress sat quietly and sat supinely without endeavoring to raise a finger in defense of the liberty and rights of an American citizen incarcerated in a foreign jail?

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOYLAN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Suppose we should demand their release and the demand should be ignored, then what?

Mr. BOYLAN. My colleague, you know that the demand of the Republic of the United States could not be ignored. I know you, sir, as a student of government, as a student of the history and the traditions of America know and realize the power of America, and you know the power and the influence of the American Congress, and you know, sir, that if a demand of that kind were made it would not be refused.

Mr. BLANTON. Would our distinguished colleague yield further?

Mr. BOYLAN. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not think our good friend from New York would ever want our Government to make a demand unless it made that demand good and unless it required the obedience of that demand, and the gentleman ought to think along that line.

Mr. BOYLAN. I am thinking along those lines, and I know that a request of our Government would not and could not be ignored. I believe we all follow the traditions of the fathers, I believe we are loyal to the institutions of our country, and I believe that we believe in upholding the rights of our fellow citizens, no matter in what country or in what clime they may be. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

By order of the House, the gentleman from Texas is recognized for five minutes.

VOTING ON BARKLEY BILL

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, our distinguished colleague from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN] is one of the most lovable men in this House. He is such a valuable Member that we could hardly hold a session successfully without his presence. When he appears on the floor there is always such a spontaneity of applause that in his zeal sometimes he says things he would hardly say if he was not under such strain.

Because I saw fit day before yesterday to vote against the Barkley bill, which creates 45 commissioners drawing salaries from $7,000 to $12,000 a year each, he claimed that I was voting against the interests of the poor women and poor children and poor men of the country, while, in fact, my vote was in their interest specifically.

I notice in the RECORD for that day, May 19, 1924, that he and I did not vote together on that matter. One of the main votes is found on page 8894 of day before yesterday's RECORD, where the proposition was to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of that Barkley bill. I find that I voted with our minority leader, the Democratic leader of this House, FINIS GARRETT, of Tennessee, while the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN] voted the other way.

Our friend, Mr. QUIN, helped to elect FINIS GARRETT his Democratic leader. He was elected unanimously by the Democrats of this House, and on the Barkley bill I followed my leader and I voted with him against that motion, but our friend from Mississippi voted for it.

Then the next important vote that came up that day is on page 8940. The motion was to refer the Barkley bill back to the committee for proper consideration. I voted again with the Democratic leader of this House, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], for the motion, and our friend PERCY, from Mississippi, voted against him and against the motion.

Then I find the last important vote that came up that day on the Barkley bill was to strike out the enacting clause. There was a vital question for Democrats to decide. On it and this Barkley bill the RECORD shows that I looked to the great Democratic leader of this House, FINIS GARRETT, and I followed him, and the great Democratic leader and myself voted together for that motion to strike out the enacting clause, and our distinguished friend from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN] voted against him. [Applause.]

So I find that our friend from Mississippi was voting against his own Democratic leader on that measure, but I will forgive him and I hope the Democrats of Mississippi will forgive him. He is so valuable here we will have to forgive him. Every man every once in a while errs. We must give our friend from Mississippi the right to err once in a while. He gets off the reservation once in a while, and I know the provocation.

Mr. KUNZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I regret I can not.

Mr. KUNZ. For just one simple question?

Mr. BLANTON. I regret I can not yield, as I have only a few moments left. I know the provocation that influenced him, and I forgive him. If it were necessary, all of us would do anything we could to get the Democrats of Mississipi to forgive him, and they will. He is otherwise such a valuable legislator they will give him the right to be wrong once in a while. [Laughter and applause.]

IMPRISONMENT OF EAMON DE VALERA

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] is recognized.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, now that the House is again in a good humor, my task is easier than it would have been a few moments ago.

I listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks made by my distinguished colleague from my State [Mr. BOYLAN], who has given the subject a great deal of thought and study.

On March 5, 1924, I introduced a resolution (H. Res. 208), which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the same committee to which my colleague's resolution was referred. Since that time we have been seeking to get a hearing. Permit me to read my resolution:

House Resolution 208

Whereas it has been the policy of people of the United States to give their moral and material support to any people endeavoring to obtain freedom and independence; and

Whereas the people of the United States admire leaders who make sacrifices for the cause of liberty, and the Government of the United States has always offered an asylum to such leaders; and

Whereas Eamon de Valera, formerly provisional president of Ireland, has been languishing in prison for several months, and it being impossible to ascertain the cause of his imprisonment other than that he was one of the leaders in the recent struggle for Irish freedom; and

Whereas the said Eamon de Valera is a native of the United States and an honorary citizen of many cities of the United States, and his mother a resident of the State of New York: Be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the House of Representatives of the United States that in the absence of any specific charge of crime committed by the said Eamon de Valera his continued imprisonment without a trial is against the morals, custom, and policy of liberty loving people in this advanced age; and be it

Resolved further, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit this resolution to the Government of Great Britain as a protest against the continued imprisonment of Eamon de Valera under the conditions hereinbefore set forth.

Before introducing this resolution, gentlemen, I looked up the precedents, and I found that there is nothing unusual in a resolution of this kind. I think that this great Republic of ours has established a record in the history of the world as being ready at all times to assist any people who are striving to attain independence. It is as natural for an American to sympathize with the cause of liberty as it is for a mother to love her own child.

In 1848, when the Hungarian rebellion against the Hapsburg dynasty took place, this country not only openly expressed its sympathy with the Hungarian rebellion but sent an observer to Budapest, right on the spot, to report the progress of that revolution. After the fall of the Hungarian independence the Austrian Government called upon this Government for an explanation.

The Hungarian revolution of 1848 failed. As I have just stated, the Austrian Government protested to this Government for having received representatives and leaders of the Hungarian independence movement and protested very vigorously against our attitude toward Hungary and our sympathy with their leaders.

We were perfectly frank about it. We did not hesitate a moment then to tell Austria that we were interested in the freedom of Hungary as we are sympathetic with any movement of any people seeking their independence. Let me read the frank, bold, courageous, and real American statement of President Taylor in a special message on the subject dated March 28, 1850:

My purpose, as freely avowed in this correspondence, was to have acknowledged the independence of Hungary had she succeeded in establishing a government de facto on a basis sufficiently permanent in its character to have justified me in doing so, according to the usages and settled principles of this Government; and although she is now fallen and many of her gallant patriots are in exile or in chains, I am free still to declare that had she been successful in the maintenance of such a government as we could have recognized we should have been the first to welcome her into the family of nations.

I believe we are quite justified in taking a keen interest in the movement for Irish freedom. Eamon de Valera, former provisional president of the Irish Republic, typifies the spirit of Irish liberty. I know of no better expression of the attitude of this Government in such questions than to read the message of Daniel Webster, Secretary of State, to Mr. Hulsemann, Austrian chargé d'affaires, dated December 21, 1850:

In the course of the year 1848 and the early part of 1849 a considerable number of Hungarians came to the United States. Among them were individuals representing themselves to be in the confidence of the revolutionary government, and by these persons the President was strongly urged to recognize the existence of that government. In these applications, and in the manner in which they were viewed by the President, there was nothing unusual; still less was there anything unauthorized by the law of nations. It is the right of every independent state to enter into friendly relations with every other independent state. Of course, questions of prudence naturally arise in reference to new states brought by successful revolutions into the family of nations; but it is not to be required of neutral powers that they should await the recognition of the new government by the parent state. No principle of public law has been more frequently acted upon within the last 30 years by the great powers of the world than this. Within that period 8 to 10 new states have established independent governments within the limits of the colonial dominions of Spain on this continent; and in Europe the same thing has been done by Belgium and Greece. The existence of all these governments was recognized by some of the leading powers of Europe, as well as by the United States, before it was acknowledged by the states from which they had separated themselves.

If, therefore, the United States had gone so far as formally to acknowledge the independence of Hungary, although, as the event has proved, it would have been a precipitate step, and one from which no benefit would have resulted to either party, it would not, nevertheless, have been an act against the law of nations, provided they took no part in her contest with Austria.

I have heard it suggested by Members that my resolution is improper or, at least, unseeming, in that it seeks to interfere in a purely local matter of a foreign government. That is not so. I would not think of bringing in a resolution of any kind that could by any possible fair construction embarrass my colleagues or the American Government. I have simply followed precedent, and there are several instances where this Government not only took a sympathetic interest in the cause of freedom but also in the individuals who inspired and fought the battles of liberty.

A similar case was that of Louis Kossuth, the great Hungarian liberator. The policy of the American Government was laid down in a letter of instructions written by John M. Clayton, Secretary of State, to Mr. Marsh, our representative in Turkey, on January 12, 1850:

You are well aware that the deepest interest is felt among the people of the United States in the fate of Kossuth and his compatriots of Hungary, who have hitherto escaped the vengeance of Austria and Russia by seeking an asylum within the boundaries of the Ottoman Empire. The accounts respecting them have been so conflicting—sometimes representing them as having escaped and at others as being captive—that we have not known what to credit, and have therefore declined to interfere in their behalf; nor do we now desire to interfere by entangling ourselves in any serious controversy with Russia or Austria. But we can not suppose that a compliance with the dictates of humanity, now that the contest with Hungary is over, would involve our friendly relations with any other power. Should you be of the opinion that our good offices would avail anything to secure their safety and their escape from the hands of those who still pursue them, it is desired by your Government that you should intercede with the Sultan in their behalf. The President would be gratified if they could find a retreat under the American flag and their safe conveyance to this country by any one of our national ships which may be about to return home would be hailed with lively satisfaction by the American people.

The attitude of the American Government could not be stated in clearer and more concise language. If it was proper in 1850 to protest against the action of two foreign Governments and courageously go to the protection of a champion of liberty, as expressed in the letter of instruction of Secretary of State Clayton, surely my resolution simply expressing a desire, if you please, on the part of the Representatives of the American people is within the confines of propriety and international comity.

The case of Eamon de Valera stands on all fours on the facts and the law as laid down in the case of the liberator, Louis Kossuth.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. What did he do that his own people put him in jail?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is the subject of inquiry. There is not a human being that is in a position to state whether Eamon de Valera violated any law. I say that this great leader, Eamon de Valera, will have a glorious place in history as a champion of liberty. He has been incarcerated, no charge lodged against him, no indictment, and they have refused to release him on a habeas corpus, refused to place him on trial; and I say that is an outrage for any civilized country to commit against any of its own subjects or a citizen of another country.

Mr. VAILE. Is he a subject or citizen of this country? That seems to be in doubt.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. He was born in New York State; his mother is a resident of the city of Rochester. I am sure that Eamon de Valera's gallantry, courage, and noble purpose in fighting for the freedom of the people of Ireland is a guaranty that he never took an oath of allegiance to the King of England.

Mr. HOLADAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. HOLADAY. Does the gentleman believe that if an American citizen leaves this country and goes to another country, encourages an insurrection or a civil war, becomes a candidate for President of that country, and is elected or defeated, gets in trouble, is entitled to claim the protection of the American Government?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I claim we have here sufficient precedents in this country to establish the fact that it is proper for this House to give its moral support to any people any place in the world who are seeking to govern themselves and seeking to overthrow any foreign sovereign oppression. [Applause.]

Is it not a common occurrence for diplomatic representatives to seek to intervene and seek clemency on behalf of their nationals who have come in conflict with the law? Surely, if it is proper for a foreign government to ask its representative to use his good offices on behalf of a national who violated the criminal laws of another country, how much more proper and more lofty is it for a government to ask a friendly government of another country for information concerning the status of a man who, it will be admitted, has not violated any criminal laws but has only espoused the sacred cause of liberty. At this point let me read a letter from the Attorney General bearing on this subject:

> In response to your letter of the 2d instant, requesting to be advised whether it is customary for an ambassador, minister, or consul accredited to this country to ask for clemency, and if such requests are frequently made, you are advised that the pardon attorney informs me that a limited number of requests have been made by ambassadors and ministers through the State Department concerning nationals of their representative governments during the past four or five years, and a few requests for status of certain prisoners' cases have been made direct to this department by consuls accredited to this country.
> It is not understood, however, that the ambassadors or ministers have in any instance asked for executive clemency in the sense of making a recommendation that presidential relief be extended.

I do not believe that we are in the slightest overstepping the bounds of propriety or in the slightest impairing the dignity of this House when as Representatives of the free people of America we hail Eamon de Valera as the champion of a great cause for human liberty and ask our Department of State to use its good offices in seeking the liberation of this liberty's champion and to protest against his continued unlawful, unjustifiable imprisonment. [Applause.]

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll of committees.

Mr. McKENZIE (when the Committee on Military Affairs was reached). Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 4820) to amend the act entitled "An act to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service," approved June 10, 1922. The bill is on the Union Calendar, and I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois calls up the bill H. R. 4820 and asks that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act entitled "An act to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service," approved June 10, 1922, be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting immediately after the first sentence thereof the following sentence:

"Such officers whenever entitled to Federal pay, except armory drill and administrative function pay, shall receive as longevity pay, in addition to base pay provided but not exceeding the maximum pay prescribed by law, an increase thereof at the per cent and time rates up to 30 years provided in the ninth paragraph of section 1."

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, in line 6, page 2, I move to strike out the word "ninth" and insert the word "tenth."

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TILSON). The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 6, strike out the word "ninth" and insert the word "tenth."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

What constitutes field duty, sea duty, an assignment as quarters, or a permanent station, within the meaning of this section, shall be determined for each of the services, including adjunct forces thereof, mentioned in the title of this act under such regulations as the President may prescribe from time to time, and such determination shall be conclusive for all purposes.

The following committee amendment was read:

Page 4, line 4, strike out the paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Regulations in execution of the provisions of this section in peace and in war shall be made by the President and shall, whenever practicable in his judgment, be uniform for all of the services concerned, including adjunct forces thereof."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That section 10 of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following paragraphs:

"The retainer pay of all men who were on that day transferred members of the Fleet Naval Reserve or the Fleet Marine Corps Reserve shall be computed on the rates of pay authorized for enlisted men of the naval service by the act approved June 10, 1922: Provided, That the retainer pay of said reservists shall be not less than that to which they were entitled on June 30, 1922, under decisions of the Comptroller of the Treasury in force on that date.

"That all enlisted men of all the services mentioned in the title of this act who served as warrant or commissioned officers in any of said services, including adjunct forces thereof, shall be credited with all active service so performed during the period from April 6, 1917, to December 31, 1921, in the computation of their enlisted service for longevity pay purposes, and shall be paid accordingly."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 5, line 1, correct the spelling of the word "enlisted."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That section 20 of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting the words "and flight surgeons" after the words "qualified aircraft pilots," and by adding thereto a penultimate sentence and amending the final sentence thereof to read as follows:

"Officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men of the National Guard participating in exercises or performing duties provided for by sections 92, 94, 97, and 99 of the national defense act, as amended, and of the reserves of the services mentioned in the title of this act called to active duty shall receive an increase of 50 per cent of their pay while on duty requiring them to participate regularly and frequently in aerial flights, and when such flying duty involves travel they shall also receive the same allowances for traveling expenses as are or hereafter may be authorized for the Regular Army. Regulations in execution of the provisions of this section shall be made by the President and shall, whenever practicable in his judgment, be uniform for all the services concerned."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 5, line 8, strike out all of lines 8 to 12, inclusive, and insert the following:

"SEC. 4. That section 20 of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the last sentence of said section 20 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:"

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 6, line 4, add the following as a new section: "The discrimination now existing in the method of computing service of officers of the Army is hereby removed and hereafter service and what shall be counted for all purposes in computing length of service for all officers shall be the same as now provided by law for officers who were first commissioned as lieutenants in the Army in 1916."

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against that amendment: As I understand it, first, it is an amendment to the national defense act, while the bill under consideration is a bill simply amending the service pay act of Congress.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, the bill that we have before us amends the national defense act, and this is just one additional amendment to the bill. The whole bill is amendatory of the national defense act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That question alone would not be decisive. Is it germane to the paragraph? The Chair has not had an opportunity to examine the amendment.

Mr. McKENZIE. I make the point of order that it is not germane to the paragraph or to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from New York address himself to the feature of whether his amendment is germane to the subject matter of the paragraph?

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, can we have the amendment again reported?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the Clerk will again report the LaGuardia amendment.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I gather from the reading of this amendment that it is a proposition that involves some 1,300 or 1,400 officers of the Army, and it goes back and involves the question of longevity pay for West Point service, and it is a proposition to give constructive service to every man who came into the Army from civil life prior to 1916. That is what I gather from the amendment; and if that is true, then that is an amendment to the national defense act and not to the pay act. It is an amendment that is so far-reaching that I am frank to say from just simply hearing it read that I would not be able to pass upon it, but I think I can scent what the object is. It is a matter that ought to be given serious consideration.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I respectfully submit that the gentleman is not arguing the point of order, but is arguing the merits of it.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that it is an amendment to the national defense act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from New York to the fact that his amendment seems to be the computing of pay and would inquire whether that is germane to the subject matter of this bill. Regardless of what actually is meant, but simply going to the subject matter of the bill, is the subject matter presented by the gentleman the same subject matter as that considered in the bill. That determines the question of germaneness. Will the gentleman address himself to that subject?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, this is an act according to the title of the bill to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, the Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and the Public Health Service.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, let me call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the very first sentence of the amendment seeks to remove existing discrimination between officers now in the Army, as to their commissions and their length of service. The pay act has nothing whatever to do with discrimination.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, the very title of this act and its first provision in the enactment clause refers to section 3 of an act to readjust, and so forth, and it is provided, and it is hereby amended by inserting, and so forth. Then it proceeds to make changes, and the very purpose of this bill is to amend existing law. What my amendment does is to take the personnel mentioned in the enacting clause and amend existing law pertaining to longevity allowance and their retirement. It is clearly within the bill, and is germane to the subject.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Upon such hasty examination as the Chair is able to make of this long bill and the subject matter contained in it, and so far as he is able to apply the amendment of the gentleman from New York to it, it seems to the Chair to deal with the same general subject matter, and while not called upon to pass upon the merits or the demerits of the amendment, the chair is inclined to rule that it is germane to the subject matter under consideration, and, therefore, overrules the point of order.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That section 21 of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended by substituting a colon for the period and adding the following proviso at the end thereof:

"Provided, That the pay and allowances of the members of the Naval Academy Band shall be not less than that which was authorized for the various ranks and ratings in said bands on June 30, 1922, under decisions of the Comptroller of the Treasury in force on that date."

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of section 5 insert a new section as follows:

"SEC. 6. That section 17 of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding to the first sentence thereof: Provided, That the pay saved to an officer by section 15 of this act or by the act of September 14, 1922, shall be construed as the pay provided by this act for the purpose of computing retired pay. Further, by striking out the figure '6' in line 13, page 6, and inserting in lieu thereof the figure '7.'"

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, this is a committee amendment, and was unanimously agreed upon.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That the provisions of this act shall be effective from and after July 1, 1922.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, that should be numbered section 7.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the numbering will be changed.

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McKENZIE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TRANSFER OF CERTAIN MATERIALS, MACHINERY, ETC., FROM WAR DEPARTMENT TO THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 7269. This bill is on the Union Calendar, and I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7269) to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to transfer certain materials, machinery, and equipment to the Department of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transfer to the Department of Agriculture, under the provisions of section 7 of the act approved February 28, 1919, entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year 1920, and for other purposes," and acts amendatory thereto, for use in the improvement of highways and roads as therein provided, the following war materials, machinery, and equipment pertaining to the Military Establishment, out of the reserve stocks of the said Military Establishment, to wit: 2,000 5-ton caterpillar tractors complete with tools and spare parts; 500 ordnance mobile machine-shop units complete with tools and spare parts; and 5,000 motor trucks, 1 to 5 ton capacity. The freight charges incurred in the transfer of the property provided for in this provision shall be defrayed by the Department of Agriculture, and if the War Department shall load any of the said property for shipment, the expense of said loading shall be reimbursed to the War Department by the Department of Agriculture by an adjustment of the appropriations of the two departments. The title of said materials, machinery, and equipment shall be and remain vested in the State for use in the improvement of the public highways, and no such materials, machinery, and equipment in serviceable condition shall be sold or the title to the same transferred to any individual, company, or corporation.

The committee amendments were read as follows:

Page 2, line 3, strike out "two thousand," and insert "one thousand five hundred."

Page 2, line 4, after the word "parts" strike out "500 ordnance mobile machine-shop units complete with tools and spare parts."

Page 2, line 6, after the word "and" strike out "five," and insert in lieu thereof "four."

Page 2, line 7, strike out the word "one," and insert in lieu thereof "three-quarters."

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McKENZIE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SALE OF REAL PROPERTY NO LONGER REQUIRED FOR MILITARY PURPOSES

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 9124. This bill is on the Union Calendar, and I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9124) authorizing the sale of real property no longer required for military purposes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill should be considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that it may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BLANTON. I am just reserving the right to object to find out exactly what the provisions of this bill mean. Under the terms of this bill could the Secretary of War dispose of any piece of this property to any municipality for less than the appraised price after it has been appraised?

Mr. McKENZIE. No; he could not. That is my understanding. We have a provision in the bill——

Mr. BLANTON. There is going to be no giving back of this property to municipalities?

Mr. McKENZIE. I will say very frankly to the gentleman that I expect to offer an amendment. The gentleman from Texas knows there are a number of bills on the calendar reported from the committee.

Mr. BLANTON. That is what I want to have an understanding about. There are a number of such bills on the calendar where municipalities, Mr. Speaker, in order to get the Government to establish these cantonments and camps in their district, have bought land from a commercial standpoint and given it to the Government, thereby causing the Government to establish cantonments and build even street-car tracks and water systems and paved streets and roads and spend millions of dollars in the community, all of which benefited them, and now when the war is over they want to get the land back.

Mr. McKENZIE. To all of which I was opposed.

Mr. BLANTON. And if the gentleman is going to offer that kind of an amendment—why, it is almost impossible to oppose an amendment offered by a committee chairman, and especially such a distinguished gentleman as the gentleman from Illinois—we ought to stop it now when we can do so. We have no chance whatever to defeat any amendment he offers unless we have a chance to discuss it to some extent.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I will say——

Mr. BLANTON. So far as this bill is drawn now, there is no objection whatever to it; it is a good bill and ought to pass; but the gentleman ought not to put an amendment of that kind on this bill without thrashing out that proposition in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. McKENZIE. Let me say to the gentleman from Texas my only purpose in doing as I am doing now in getting these bills along is to expedite the legislation——

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman knows that amendment is subject to the point of order, does he not?

Mr. McKENZIE. No; I do not think so. I want to say this to the gentleman from Texas, because he is fair enough to state his position, and I will be fair enough to the gentleman from Texas to say when these amendments are offered that he shall have his opportunity to move to strike out any particular item.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman give us as much as 30 minutes against that amendment?

Mr. McKENZIE. I will give the opposition as much as 30 minutes to any and all parts.

Mr. BLANTON. There ought to be some time given Members to oppose such amendments.

Mr. McKENZIE. I will agree to give not exceeding 30 minutes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not understand that in the House, when we are considering a bill of this kind, the time is controlled——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not controlled in any way whatever, but the bill is considered just as it would be in committee. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell or cause to be sold, either in whole or in two or more parts as he may deem best for the interests of the United States, the several tracts or parcels of real property hereinafter designated, or any interest therein or appurtenant thereto, which said tracts or parcels are no longer needed for military purposes, and to execute and deliver in the name of the United States and in its behalf any and all contracts, conveyances, or other instruments necessary to effectuate such sale.

FIRST CORPS AREA

Maine: Narrows Island Reservation, Boothbay, Lincoln County.

Massachusetts: Fort Phoenix, near Fair Haven, Bristol County; Springfield Armory, two small tracts.

Rhode Island: Fort Greene, Newport.

SECOND CORPS AREA

New York: Fort Montgomery, Rouses Point, Clinton County; Sag Harbor Reservation, Sag Harbor, Long Island, Suffolk County.

FOURTH CORPS AREA

South Carolina: Bay Point Reservation on Phillips Island, Beaufort County; Hilton Head Reservation at south entrance to Port Royal Sound, Beaufort County.

Alabama: Fort Gaines, on east end of Dauphin Island, Mobile County.

Tennessee: Park Field, Millington.

SEVENTH CORPS AREA

Arkansas: Camp Pike Booster Pumping Station, near Little Rock.

SEC. 2. In the disposal of the aforesaid properties the Secretary of War shall in each and every case cause the same to be appraised, either as a whole or in two or more parts, by an appraiser or appraisers to be chosen by him for each tract, and in the making of such appraisal due regard shall be given to the value of any improvements thereon and to the historic interest of any part of said land.

SEC. 3. After such appraisal shall have been made and approved by the Secretary of War, notification of the fact of such appraisal shall be given by the Secretary of War to the governor of the State in which each such tract of land is located, and such State, or the county, or municipality in which such land is located shall in the order named have the option at any time within six months after the approval of such appraisal to acquire the same, or any part thereof which shall have been separately appraised, upon payment within said period of six months of the appraisal value: Provided, however, That the conveyance of said tract of land to such State, county, or municipality shall be upon the condition and limitation that said property shall be limited to use for public park purposes and upon cessation of such use shall revert to the United States without notice, demand, or action brought.

SEC. 4. Six months after the date of approval of said appraisal, if the option given in section 3 hereof shall not have been completely exercised, the Secretary of War shall sell, or cause to be sold, each of said properties at public sale, at not less than the appraised value, after advertisement in such manner as may be directed by the Secretary.

SEC. 5. A full report of transfers and sales made under the provisions of this act shall be submitted to Congress by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 6. The expense of appraisal, survey, advertising, and sale shall in each case be paid from the proceeds of the sale, whether made in accordance with section 3 or section 4 of this act, and the net proceeds thereof shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of "Miscellaneous receipts."

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McKENZIE: Insert the following as a new section, following section 6:

"SEC. 7. That the transfer from the Department of the Interior to the War Department of the control and jurisdiction over the parcels known as farm No. 1, farm No. 2, and the Sanno tract, now constituting a part of the Government reservation at Carlisle Barracks, Pa., is ratified and confirmed.

"SEC. 8. The Secretary of War is authorized to sell at either public or private sale, upon terms and conditions deemed advisable by him, the land lying north of the Carlisle-Harrisburg highway, being part of the tract of land known as farm No. 2, constituting a part of the Carlisle Barracks reservation, the land to be sold as a whole or in parcels as the Secretary of War may determine, and to execute and deliver in the name of the United States and in its behalf any and all deeds or other instruments necessary to effect such sale.

"SEC. 9. The Secretary of War is authorized to acquire by negotiation or appropriate condemnation proceedings additional land needed at the post of Carlisle Barracks for the use of the Medical Field Service School, to wit."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, as far as the Clerk has read, it is shown very clearly that the amendment is subject to a point of order. I now make the point of order, so that it will save the reading of that amendment further.

This is a bill to authorize the Secretary of War to dispose of certain property at its appraised market value. The Chair will note that in the bill. This amendment that is now offered shows that it authorizes the Secretary of War, first, to give back property and to sell it for less than its appraised value; and, secondly, to acquire new property for a new, specific purpose not within the contemplation of the purpose of the bill. It is not germane to the bill, and it is not germane to the paragraph to which it is offered, and it is clearly subject to a point of order.

Mr. McKENZIE. I will say this, Mr. Speaker, that the bill just read, under consideration, is a bill dealing with real estate, authorizing the Secretary of War to sell and dispose of a certain tract of real estate no longer necessary for military purposes; and as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] says, it is to be sold at not less than the appraised value. But it does not seem to me that a point of order should prevent an amendment authorizing the Secretary of War to dispose of other real estate belonging to the Military Establishment in any other manner than sale for cash. I do not think the words "sale for a consideration and cash value not less than the appraised value" should control. It seems to me it is in the general subject matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is ready to rule. This is a bill for the sale of real property no longer required for military purposes. It provides for the disposition of a number of pieces of property, and it appears to the Chair that a provision providing for the disposition of other property of the same character would be in order.

The question of acquiring additional property, however, is quite a different proposition. This bill makes no reference in any of its provisions or in its title to the acquiring of new property anywhere. It seems to the Chair that the portion of the amendment providing for the acquisition of new property is not germane to this bill; and therefore, on that ground alone, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. ROMJUE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. As I read the bill, it gives authority to the Secretary of War to sell this property. It also gives him the power to cause an appraisal. It authorizes the Secretary of War to sell this property, first having had it appraised. It authorizes the Secretary of War to appoint appraisers, which is equivalent to the Secretary of War appraising the property himself. It also authorizes the Secretary of War, before a sale, to advertise the property in any way that he sees fit.

Now, I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether or not, having the power to appoint the appraisers himself, and to sell the property himself, and to advertise it in any manner he sees fit, he does not think that it gives the Secretary of War almost absolute power to dispose of the property in any manner he sees fit?

Mr. McKENZIE. I will say to the gentleman that we went over the matter very carefully in the committee, and we finally arrived at the conclusion that the language in the bill safeguards the Government just as much as it would be possible to safeguard the Government in any other way. The truth about it is simply this, that we must assume that the Secretary of War has the best interests of the Government at heart.

Mr. ROMJUE. I grant that.

Mr. McKENZIE. Now, if you take it out of his hands and put it into the hands of some one else, you must assume that that other party has at heart the best interests of the Government. In other words, I do not think it is quite fair to presume that the officer filling such a position as the Secretary of War will not fill that office faithfully, so far as the interests of the Government are concerned. I appreciate the fact that if men conspire to rob the Government, they can do it under this bill. They can do it under any bill we might write. As a matter of fact, we thrashed that out and came to the conclusion that in the interest of efficiency, and enabling the Secretary of War to do business and get rid of this property, we had to trust something to him.

Mr. ROMJUE. I think that is the only fair presumption, of course, that the officer will be honest in the administration of these duties. But suppose the power to appoint appraisers were placed in the hands of the governor of the State where the land is located. Does not the gentleman think that might safeguard it a little more?

Mr. McKENZIE. Well, it might and it might not. The governor might be interested in the property or have some friends who were interested in it, and he might see that they made a low appraisement. However, I should think the governor would do his duty as I assume the Secretary of War will do his duty. But if the governor had some friend living out in that locality who helped him get his nomination he might make it possible to have a low appraisement and he could come in and buy the property at a low figure. I can very easily see how they could get around that. I am willing to agree with the gentleman from Missouri that if we are going to assume that men will be dishonest they can carry out their dishonesty under this bill, and I can not conceive of any law they can not defeat if they so desire.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Some weeks ago it was disclosed that perhaps there had been some contracts made, which the House did not approve, providing for the payment of large commissions to auctioneers for making sales, and it occurs to me that the gentleman could very properly consider an amendment which would protect against that kind of a commission being paid for the sale of land.

Mr. McKENZIE. Well, I agree with the gentleman from Alabama that that would be possible, but the greater part of this property will not bring any very large amount of money to the Government, and it would seem to me that if we fixed a per diem for auctioneers that they would probably get more money out of it than they would otherwise, and the committee felt it was unwise to go into that on a bill of this character.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The gentleman does not think that a percentage should be paid to an auctioneer if he were only engaged in selling that property for one or two days, does he?

Mr. McKENZIE. Well, I assume that some local auctioneer will probably handle these matters.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I think that is, perhaps, a correct assumption, but at the same time Congress should protect against abusing a privilege like that.

Mr. McKENZIE. I am against robbery in any form, as far as I am personally concerned.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I fully realize that.

Mr. McKENZIE. But I realize that there are some things which must be provided in order to get business of this kind performed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman have a minute more so that I may ask a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask the gentleman from Alabama whether he thinks we ought to take up any matter affecting auctioneers' fees in the absence of our expert auctioneer colleague from Ohio [Mr. BRIGG].

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, when a bill of this kind comes before us it seems to me we should pause for a moment and give some thought to the cost of the Military Establishment and the way in which that cost is increased yearly by the constant purchase and sale of land.

The members of the Military Committee and the Naval Affairs Committee have had the experience of hearing officials of the department come before them and plead the urgency of the immediate acquisition of land here and there. And when the Government goes out to buy land in any locality it always pays top-notch prices, and then in a few years we find that the urgency was exaggerated, that the need of the land was mistaken, and that there is no longer any use for it. Then they come in and ask to be permitted to dispose of the land. Now, that happens every year. We are buying land all over this vast country at high prices and selling it in a few years at a sacrifice, and when we pay the legal expenses and the expenses of the sale there is nothing left.

Why, gentlemen, you now have a bill pending appropriating $6,500,000 for new hospitals, and this added appropriation is necessary only because the millions of dollars heretofore appropriated were injudiciously expended.

You purchased a hospital in my city a few years ago, in the Bronx, and now we find that hospital does not answer the purpose for which it was purchased, and it is intended to sell it at a loss of $1,500,000.

You purchased a hospital at Dawsonsprings about five years ago. Now there are vacant beds there, and we find that hospital is not suitable for tubercular patients and that we must go elsewhere and build another hospital.

We should give more consideration to these appropriation bills for the purchase of sites, for the purchase of land, and for the purchase of new buildings for the Army and Navy. Unless you do that you are going to have a constantly increasing military budget. The money spent will be of no use to the national defense, but it will simply go to real-estate speculators, contractors, favorite sons, and the like. That is the situation now as to the hospital program for our veterans. I do not believe there is a single hospital which has been purchased that is adequate or fitted for the purpose originally intended. They came here on the plea of helping the disabled veterans, when, as a matter of fact, the real purpose would seem to be to promote some land scheme. [Applause.]

As to this bill, I would like to know—and I am sure the chairman of the committee can give us the information—the amount involved in the original purchase of this property.

Mr. McKENZIE. I will say to the gentleman from New York that if he had read the report he would know. It is all in the record.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Can not the chairman give us the lump sum?

Mr. McKENZIE. No, sir; I can not.

Mr. FREAR. I will state to the gentleman that on page 5 of the report it appears that the value of the improvements at Park Field, Tenn., is $2,128,700 for that one item.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And that is only one item in the bill. It will be interesting to find out how much the Government realizes on that.

Mr. FREAR. That is just what occurred to me.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. We have such property all over the country, and yet if a Member simply shows an interest in a matter of this kind, involving millions of dollars, he is treated by the acting chairman rather flippantly. I think we have a right to inquire, and I think we have a duty to protect the Public Treasury.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me just a moment?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes; certainly.

Mr. McKENZIE. I want to say to the gentleman from New York that before he ever came to Congress some of us were interested in finding out how much real estate was held by the War Department and how much of it was absolutely unnecessary and a needless expense for the Government to carry. There were a number of us on a subcommittee who worked for about a year with some of the officers of the Army in getting up an inventory of all the real estate in the United States and in the insular possessions belonging to or under the supervision of the War Department. After we had that inventory made, we made a report, and in that report we recommended that the War Department dispose of all the unnecessary property which was a needless expense to the Government. Since that time the Secretary of War from time to time has been sending to Congress a number of items representing such real estate.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McKENZIE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have two minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McKENZIE. This is simply following out that policy, and I think it is a good policy.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I submit to the distinguished chairman, would it not be proper at this time that the list of property designated in this bill in Massachusetts and Rhode Island and New York and South Carolina and Alabama and various other States be submitted to the Veterans' Bureau? The Veterans' Bureau is in the market now to purchase lands for hospitals, and they are spending money for that purpose. An appropriation will be before us in a few days of $6,500,000. Some of those hospitals are to be placed in the very localities where we are now authorizing the Secretary of War to sell lands. Would it not be prudent and would it not be economical to place this list in the hands of the Veterans' Bureau and see if they could not use some of this land for that purpose? Otherwise these tracts of land will be sacrificed at great loss to the Government, while the Government is buying other land at exorbitant prices.

Mr. McKENZIE. The gentleman is well aware of the fact that if the Veterans' Bureau wants real estate that belongs to the Government all they have to do is to petition and ask the Congress to have it transferred, and I am sure there would be no objection.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then why in the name of common sense do they not do it instead of going out and buying new land? That is why the expense of the Government is heaping up all the time, and that is why the disabled veteran is not getting the assistance and care that he should be getting.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Does the gentleman know of any real estate herein laid out for sale that the Veterans' Bureau wants?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It seems to me that if they are going to build a hospital in Massachusetts or in New York, in all likelihood some of this land would be available.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Do you know of any case in which they want the real estate?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If I had been a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, I certainly would have inquired.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. You would have gone into that?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I certainly would.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. You did not when you were a member.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, but I did, and if the gentleman will recall, I knew enough about it to reduce the Army by 200,000 men and to cut down the appropriation $170,000,000.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last three words.

I think the chairman of this committee and the other members of the committee are to be commended for trying to turn some real estate which is not now needed into ready cash, because I expect there will be greater need for it in the Treasury during the next fiscal year than perhaps for many years to come on account of the unusual demands now being made on the Treasury.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. YOUNG. Certainly.

Mr. DEMPSEY. It was suggested that the amount expended on the real estate at Park Field, Tenn., was something over $2,000,000. While that is true, the real estate itself only cost $88,000 and the improvements or the greater part of them, including all the substantial improvements of steel, have been removed, so that what is involved here is simply the land costing $88,000 and some improvements not of any particular value.

Mr. YOUNG. It is an unimproved-land proposition.

While there will be differences of opinion upon other items in the conference report covering the tax-reduction measure, there ought not to be any regarding the decision of the conferees to eliminate the Senate amendment providing for a tax upon undistributed profits, increasing the tax in proportion to the amount of net profits left undistributed.

To my mind, such a tax would encourage unwise and unsound business methods, which in turn would weaken the credit of business concerns, seriously affect the volume of business done, and be accompanied with all the unfortunate results to all kinds of producers on farms or in factories which attend a slump in business.

The commercial structure of this country or any other country that amounts to anything commercially is built upon confidence. Any corporation manager who distributes all net profits to stockholders and goes to his banker for a loan is met with a stony stare. Banks want nothing to do with such corporations. Other concerns which extend credit have the same convictions, and properly so. The proposal to tax undistributed profits would encourage loose business methods and put a heavy penalty upon following business rules which have made our country great and prosperous. Our forefathers have left for us examples of thrift. They formed the habit of spending less than they earned. This good old policy is still followed by many of our people. President Coolidge is and has been a conspicuous example of it. He has never been ashamed of economy in his personal affairs and has set a splendid example for all his countrymen. He also believes there is nothing shabby about economy in public expenditures.

Mr. Speaker, the most unfortunate thing which could happen would be to have our Government adopt a tax policy which would encourage extravagance upon the part of the Nation's citizenship.

This novel tax proposal defies all experience. It is the exception when any business runs along from year to year with the same volume of business. They go ahead or behind. If the volume increases more capital is required to handle it, and business managers ought not to be tempted by national laws to try to do business without adequate capital. When bad years come they should be fortified with a surplus. Otherwise they will face bankruptcy.

Mr. Stuart W. Cramer, chairman American Cotton Manufacturers Association, tells how the cotton industry would be affected. He says:

In the first place, the southern cotton mill industry has almost entirely been built up out of earnings reinvested into more income producing property with more employment of labor to the benefit of merchants, truck farmers, farmers' wives (who sell them chickens, eggs, and the like), and to the general prosperity of their communities—with all of which you are familiar. Senator JONES says in his amendment that he will let the past be bygones, but that he will cripple that sort of thing in the future.

In the second place, even granting, for the sake of argument, that further increase of southern industry should be restricted, this amendment does not take into account the plight of existing mills, who have retained sufficient earnings from working capital on a basis of 10-cent cotton and lower labor costs, but who are now trying to save part of their incomes to build up working capital enough to carry cotton and inventories based on 30-cent cotton and higher labor costs—and, while doing it, practically all are borrowing huge sums of money with heavy interest charges. Frankly, the banks who advance that money do so with the understanding that they will be conservative and pay small dividends, if any, until they get themselves into a safe financial situation. If the banks find that mills will no longer be permitted to do that without heavy restraining taxes, what will be the outcome? Why, obviously, southern mill securities will weaken, many thousands of stockholders will find themselves with questionable investments, the mills themselves will be restricted in what they can do, not only in the extension of their plants but in the way of better homes and welfare work for their communities, and not least, the mills will not be able to buy cotton as freely as in the past, not only on account of the money question, but at such a high price for cotton the price fluctuations are so violent that only mills allowed to accumulate adequate surplus dare take the risk.

The amazing part of this bill (amendment) is that there is no longer any pretense of taxing those most able of all to pay; but in a blind effort to reach some large corporations, who perhaps are doing the very things complained of, it is now proposed to cripple others, who no doubt form a large majority of the whole. If there ever was a time to give business a chance, this would seem to be it. If there ever was a time when struggling corporations should be helped instead of hindred, this should be it. Many corporations are now unable to pay dividends even equalling the legal rates of interest, and many are paying no dividends at all, who are making earnings of less than fair return on their investments and who simply must keep some of their earnings in the business—yet, they are to be taxed just the same percentage as the largest and most prosperous ones. Why, this amendment makes no pretense of letting a corporation earn a fair return on its investment before it begins the butchery of its income; even an excess-profits tax allows a fair return on the investment before it begins to assess a surtax.

Nor is it to be lost sight of that there are thousands of wholesale and retail merchandising corporations and miscellaneous industries trying to adjust themselves to the post-war scale of higher inventories, due to higher prices of materials and labor, who will feel the blighting effect of this antipathy to corporate business.

The taxation of undistributed property is also very unjust to those of small means who own stock in corporations. The corporation which retains, say 60 per cent of its profits would pay a total of 33 per cent of its net taxable income, if I understand it correctly. For example a company with a net taxable income of $100,000, which would retain 60 per cent, would pay 40 per cent thereof, or $24,000. This, plus the flat tax of 9 per cent, or $9,000, would make a total of $33,000, or 33 per cent. Now, if a stockholder happens to have an income small enough to call for a normal rate of only 2 or 3 per cent, and no surtax, if invested in, say, a mortgage, he will be stuck for 33 per cent if he is a stockholder in a corporation which retains 60 per cent of its profits such as I have just referred to, and in addition if he sells his stock for a profit in the future he will be caught for 12½ per cent additional upon such profit under the capital gains and losses provision. That is hitting a man with an income of a few thousands pretty hard.

The effect of this proposal upon small business men is discussed by Mr. W. H. Pouch, vice president of New York Credit Men's Association. In a telegram to me he says:

NEW YORK, N. Y., May 27, 1924.

Hon. GEORGE M. YOUNG, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

Will you be good enough to lay the following recommendation of New York Credit Men's Association before the House conferees? This Jones amendment will injure credit of smaller business houses more than it will larger corporations, because smaller companies need to conserve their surplus more than large corporations who can finance their requirements through the public:

"Whereas credit men constantly urge upon their merchant debtors a building up of surplus to provide for fluctuations in business, they may well be apprehensive when they note the serious discussion in Congress of modifications in the Government's taxation policy which would seem to encourage the undue distribution of profits and force the reduction of surpluses of business. Such taxation of undistributed earnings, if it is effected, will exhaust surpluses and leave business in a perilous condition whenever an emergency occurs and is an attack upon that stability in business toward which every credit man is forever striving: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the New York Credit Men's Association wishes to be recorded as being opposed to the enactment of the Jones amendment to the tax law now under consideration by Congress, and furthermore that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the conferees of the House of Representatives and Senate of the Congress."

W. H. POUCH.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HILL of Alabama: On page 3, line 24, after the period insert: "Provided, That no auctioneer or person acting in said capacity shall be paid a fee for the sale of said properties in excess of the sum of $100 a day."

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, let me ask the gentleman, does the gentleman want to pay some auctioneer $100 a day?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I say the fee shall not exceed that much. The amendment does not require that they shall pay him that amount, but they can not pay him over that amount.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman that we have passed page 3.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I ask unanimous consent, then, Mr. Speaker, to return to page 3, section 4.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to return to page 3, section 4. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, my amendment provides that the Secretary of War shall not pay an auctioneer or a person acting in that capacity over $100 a day for services rendered in the sale of any of this property. Evidence has been submitted to the House on several occasions showing that very excessive and extravagant fees have been paid auctioneers for selling United States property. Some fees have run from $5,000 to $50,000 or $60,000. Some of the pieces of property in this bill may sell for as much as $75,000 or $100,000. We do not want any auctioneer making $1,000 or $5,000 or $10,000 for the sale of a piece of property that will bring in $75,000 or $100,000 to the Treasury. All this amendment does is to limit the Secretary of War so that he can not pay any auctioneer over $100 a day for selling the property.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Does not the gentleman think it would be better, if he is going to adopt an amendment of that kind, to put it in the form of a percentage?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. No; I do not think so, because if a piece of property sell for, say, $100,000, if you put the percentage as low as 1 per cent it might give the auctioneer $1,000 for five minutes' work.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not know how it is in the gentleman's country, but I presume that in most parts of the United States there is no self-respecting officer near that place that would auction off a piece of real estate involving a value, say, of $100,000 for $100. If you put that amendment on the bill you would estop the Government from getting an auctioneer that might be necessary to get $10,000 or $15,000 more for the property than could be obtained if you hired a cheap auctioneer.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. It is my judgment that it is not necessary to get an auctioneer to sell the property. Some one in the Quartermaster's Department could sell it just as well as an auctioneer and we could save thousands of dollars to the Federal Treasury.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I disagree wholly with the gentleman, and I think the experience of gentlemen in the House will bring this to the gentleman's mind that when you are selling anything at auction a cheap auctioneer is the most expensive auctioneer you can hire.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. If you had some complicated proposition where you were selling off a number of lots, where you needed a man with a lot of experience, or if you were down here in a crockery shop trying to get rid of a lot of junk, you might need an expert official who had had experience along those lines. But here you have a piece of property that you are not going to sell in subdivision, that you are going to sell in whole, and I do not doubt but that the Secretary of War can get a man to sell the property for $100 a day. I do not think we should burden the taxpayers of the country by allowing the Secretary of War to pay over $100 a day. As the representatives of the taxpayers it is time for us to protect them by stopping enormous fees being paid auctioneers.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HILL of Alabama) there were 23 ayes and 29 noes.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask for tellers.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama demands tellers. All those in favor of tellers will rise. [After counting.] Thirty-one Members have arisen, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that no quorum is present. I object to the vote on the ground that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama makes the point that no quorum is present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] There is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 194, nays 128, not voting 111, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. The authority granted by this act shall not repeal any prior legislative authority granted to the Secretary of War to sell or otherwise dispose of lands or property of the United States.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GARRETT of Texas: Page 4, line 13, after the words "United States," add a new section as follows:

"That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to reconvey to Elizabeth Moore, guardian of G. Bedell Moore, a minor, her successors, or her said ward, or his lawful or legal representatives or assigns, the camp site of Camp Robert E. L. Michie, containing 400 acres, more or less, as described in the deed of conveyance to the United States dated April 26, 1919, in consideration of the payment by Elizabeth Moore, guardian of the estate of G. Bedell Moore, a minor, her successors, or her said ward, or his lawful heirs or legal representatives or assigns, to the Chamber of Commerce of Del Rio, of the county of Val Verde and State of Texas, of the sum of $8,000."

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this is in line with the other amendments. It is a bill heretofore considered by the Committee on Military Affairs. The land is located in the district of my colleague from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH]. It is reconveying land for the same amount of money originally paid for it by the Government. There are no improvements upon it.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Speaker, this is agreeable to the committee and to the chairman of the committee, and I shall not take up the time of the House by making any further explanation.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANDREW. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. ANDREW: Add a new section as follows:

"SEC. 8. That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to convey by quitclaim deed to the city of Gloucester, in the State of Massachusetts, all the proprietary rights, title and interest of the United States to and in that certain tract of land now known as Old Fort Defiance, which was ceded by gift to the United States Government by vote of a town meeting in Gloucester in 1794 for the purpose of erecting a fortification, and which is now no longer needed for such purposes."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the Fourth Corps Area section of the bill for the purpose of offering an amendment at that place.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to return to the Fourth Corps Area. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, after line 17, insert:

"That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to convey by appropriate quitclaim deed to nine trustees and their successors, to be selected by the Chamber of Commerce of Columbia, S. C., and known as 'trustees of Columbia cantonment lands,' approximately 1,192 acres of land within the United States Military Reservation at Camp Jackson, S. C., to wit:

"The following two tracts of land:

"Tract No. 1: Beginning at a stone corner of the Powell, Hampton, and United States Government lands; thence along Hampton lands north 61° 45′ west 8,024 feet to a stone; thence north 47° 5′ west 1,956 feet to a stone; thence north 61° 40′ west 740 feet to a stone; thence north 27° 20′ east across Government lands 2,000 feet to a stone; thence south 87° 40′ east 385 feet to a stone near southeast corner of Camp Jackson incinerator; thence north 6° 20′ east 975.5 feet to a stone; thence north 42° 20′ east 815 feet to a stone; thence north 82° 20′ east 828 feet to a stone; thence north 61° 35′ east 1,430 feet to a stone at intersection of old roads; thence south 72° 40′ east 1,355 feet to a stone; thence south 85° 40′ east 2,798.5 feet to a stone; thence south 27° 50′ west 2,654 feet to a stone; corner of Powell's lands, thence along Powell's lands south 79° 35′ west 1,290 feet to a stone; thence south 11° 40′ west 4,102 feet to a stone, point of beginning, containing in all 705.12 acres.

"Tract No. 2: Beginning at a stone on the eastern side of the Camden public road near the 6-mile post, thence along Camden public road south 89° 45′ west 800 feet to a stone; thence along the Camden public road south 87° 35′ west 985 feet to a stone; thence along the Camden public road south 78° 45′ west 184 feet to a stone; thence south 12° 50′ east 985 feet to a stone; thence north 85° 45′ east 1,240 feet to a stone; thence south 63° 5′ east 1,984 feet to a stone 6 feet from paved road; thence in an easterly and northerly direction 922 feet along paved road to a stone 6 feet from paving; thence south 82° 20′ east 1,050 feet to a stone; thence north 73° 50′ east 1,325 feet to a stone; thence north 8° 20′ east 270 feet to a stone; thence south 86° east 408 feet to a stone; thence south 7° 30′ west 917 feet to a stone; thence south 64° 25′ west 570 feet to a stone; thence south 53° 25′ west 1,460 feet to a stone; thence south 50° 25′ east 323 feet to a stone; thence north 71° 55′ east 1,300 feet to a stone; thence north 52° 15′ east 2,131 feet to a stone on the north side of the Ancrum Ferry Road; thence north 3° 40′ east 4,315 feet to a stone on the eastern side of the Camden public road; thence along said Camden public road south 38° 30′ west 211 feet to a stone; thence south 30° 55′ west 1,039 feet to a stone; thence south 55° 50′ west 620 feet to a stone near the 7-mile post; thence south 67° 55′ west 729 feet to a stone; thence south 69° 40′ west 498 feet to a stone; thence south 55° 55′ west 1,330 feet to a stone on the southerly side of the Ancrum Ferry Road; thence south 75° 20′ west 811 feet to a stone near branch; thence south 70° 15′ west 1,265 feet to a stone; thence south 68° 25′ west 880 feet to a stone near branch; thence north 89° 20′ west 266 feet to a stone, the point of beginning, containing in all 486.88 acres; the land so conveyed being approximately equal in area to the lands donated to the United States by the said chamber of commerce as a part of the site on the said reservation by deeds executed by J. Erwin Belser, trustee, dated July 20, 1917, and November 16, 1917: Provided, That prior to such conveyance by the Secretary of War there shall be conveyed to the United States by appropriate deed all the rights of way and other rights reserved in the aforementioned deeds of donation to the United States to the extent that the Secretary of War may require.

"That the Secretary of War is hereby further authorized, in his discretion, to grant by revocable license to the said trustees, their successors or assigns, subject to such conditions and restrictions as he may deem necessary to protect the interests of the United States and to such regulations as he may from time to time prescribe, the right to use, in common with the United States, the existing roadways and railway lines of the United States, steam or electric, now located upon and extending over and across the reservation, and also the right to occupy and use such other lands within the said reservation as he may designate for the construction and operation thereon of steam or electric railway lines to extend to the lands to be conveyed to the said trustees as hereinabove described, the United States to have the right to use without charge any railway lines or tracks so constructed on the reservation: Provided, That the said existing roadways and railway lines on the reservation so occupied and used and the railway lines so constructed and operated thereon shall be maintained and kept in a good state of repair, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War, at the sole expense of the said trustees, their successors or assigns.

"That the said trustees shall hold, use, manage, lease, sell, and convey, or otherwise dispose of said lands, or any portion thereof, and of the proceeds and revenues of the same, for one or more of the following purposes as they may deem best, to wit: Agricultural, industrial, charitable, and educational purposes: Provided, however, That no sale or conveyance shall be made by the said trustees of the lands conveyed by the Secretary of War under this act until the Secretary of War shall have given his consent in each instance to such sale or conveyance.

"That a majority of the said trustees shall constitute a quorum competent to transact business, and that the said trustees shall make such by-laws, rules, and regulations for their own government and for the management and control of the said property and the proceeds thereof as they may deem necessary and proper, and that in the event of any vacancy occurring among the said trustees by death, resignation, removal of residence from Richland County, S. C., or other cause, such vacancy shall be filled from residents of Richland County by selection by a majority of the remaining trustees, such selection to be approved by the chamber of commerce of the city of Columbia, S. C., or its successors; and if there be no successors, then such selection shall be approved by a majority vote of a committee composed of the president of the University of South Carolina, the mayor of the city of Columbia, the senator in the General Assembly of South Carolina from Richland County, the probate judge of Richland County, and the resident judge of the judicial circuit of South Carolina embracing Richland County, or their respective successors."

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order on this amendment for the purpose of asking the gentleman if this is not the same bill that was on the Private Calendar on last Friday night, to which objection was made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON]?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes; that is the same bill that was under consideration at that time. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] stated that he wanted more information in respect to it. I am informed by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FULMER] that he has talked the matter over with the gentleman from Michigan and that he is satisfied.

Mr. FULMER. It is in line with the same bill that passed a few moments ago, having in mind identically the same purpose.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, in offering the amendment I did a moment ago, I thought I offered the bill as it was reported by the committee, but I find on examination that I offered the original bill. At the end of the bill is the following language which should be added to the amendment that I offered:

To be distributed by said chamber of commerce to the original donors.

I ask unanimous consent that that language may be added to the amendment that I offered a moment ago, and which was adopted by the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to vacate the action of the House by which the amendment to which he referred to was agreed to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to amend the amendment by adding thereto the words:

To be distributed by said chamber of commerce to the original donors.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to again revert for a moment to the Fourth Corps Area for the purpose of offering an amendment in respect to a piece of property in North Carolina.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to revert to the Fourth Corps Area section of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. McSWAIN: Page 2, after line 17, insert: That there is hereby granted to the State of North Carolina, without cost to the State, for public uses, all lands belonging to Fort Macon Military Reservation, and now the property of the United States, together with all the improvements thereon, and that the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to convey to the said State all right, title, and interest of the United States in said lands and improvements, to be held and used by said State for public purposes: Provided, That the following-described land is reserved and granted to the Treasury Department for Coast Guard purposes: Beginning at a concrete monument at the southwest corner of the present Coast Guard property; thence north 299$\frac{4}{10}$ feet to a concrete monument at the northwest corner of the present Coast Guard property; thence north 9° 58" west 1,320 feet, more or less, to Bogue Sound; thence eastwardly about 600 feet along Bogue Sound; thence south 1,340 feet, more or less, to a concrete monument at the northeast corner of the present Coast Guard property, which said monument bears north 134 feet from the center of the top of curb of the old hospital well, also it bears north 84° 22' 30" west 145 feet from the old gun pivot at the northwest corner of the outside wall of old Fort Macon; thence south 299$\frac{4}{10}$ feet to a concrete monument at the southeast corner of the present Coast Guard property; thence south 1,400 feet, more or less, to the Atlantic Ocean; thence westwardly about 200 feet along said Atlantic Ocean; thence north 1,400 feet, more or less, to the south line of the present Coast Guard property; thence west 147$\frac{4}{10}$ feet to the place of beginning, containing 22$\frac{4}{10}$ acres, more or less: Provided further, That the Government at all times has the right and privilege of preserving, erecting, and maintaining on said reservation such buildings as Coast Guard stations, signal stations for pilots, lighthouses, etc., as may be incident to the purposes of the Treasury, War, Navy, and Commerce Departments.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment, which I desire to offer. There has been so much confusion that I ask unanimous consent to recur back to the last page after the last section.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to revert back to page 4. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 4, line 13, after the period, add the following new section.

The SPEAKER. This should follow the sections already inserted.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the sections already inserted add the following new section:

"SEC. 8. The Secretary of War shall submit a description of the several tracts or parcels of real property herein above designated to the Director of the Veterans' Bureau, who shall certify if any such parcel or tract of real property is suitable for hospital purposes, and the Secretary of War shall transfer to the Veterans' Bureau any tract or percel of land so certified."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. LAGUARDIA) there were—ayes 13, noes 62.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment to follow the one just passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. McKENZIE. I think the gentleman ought to ask unanimous consent. I think it proper—if he should have submitted his amendment to some member of the committee we might know what is going on, I have no objection to its being reported, but I will not give consent until I hear it reported. I reserve the right to object until after the amendment is reported.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests that if the gentleman is going to object, as the amendment is four or five pages, he should object now.

Mr. RAKER. I am offering that at the end of the bill as a new section.

Mr. McKENZIE. The bill has been completed.

Mr. RAKER. No; it is before the House. It has not been completed.

Mr. McKENZIE. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

The SPEAKER (after examining). The Chair does not see how this amendment is in order.

Mr. RAKER. I was going to submit that to the Chair, but I did not have time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman will save time by raising the point now.

Mr. McKENZIE. I do.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McKENZIE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bills H. R. 7805, H. R. 490, and H. R. 7145 be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bills referred to be laid upon the table. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

BUILDINGS, ETC., AT CAMP PIKE, ARK.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I now call up House Joint Resolution 254.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois calls up the joint resolution, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 254) authorizing and permitting the State of Arkansas to construct, maintain, and use permanent buildings, rifle ranges, and utilities at Camp Pike, Ark., as are necessary for the use and benefit of the National Guard of the State of Arkansas.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute Senate Joint Resolution 89, which is on the Speaker's table, for the House resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, just reserving the right to object, the amendment I just offered were the provisions of the bill (H. R. 3675) to provide for the equitable distribution of captured war devices and trophies. Do I understand the gentleman is going to call that bill up to-day?

Mr. McKENZIE. No, sir; but I will say to the gentleman from California, I expect, however, on the first unanimous-consent day to move to suspend the rules and pass that bill.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object for a little time, could it not be disposed of to-day?

Mr. McKENZIE. I think not. We had one cannon fight here and I have a very clear recollection of what happened.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request to substitute the Senate joint resolution for the House joint resolution?

Mr. WINGO. I suggest that what the gentleman wants really is to consider the Senate bill in lieu of the House bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this joint resolution be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the Senate joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 89) authorizing and permitting the State of Arkansas to construct, maintain, and use permanent buildings, rifle ranges, and utilities at Camp Pike, Ark., as are necessary for the use and benefit of the National Guard of the State of Arkansas

Whereas on the 22d day of December, 1922, a lease was executed by the United States by the Assistant Secretary of War, Hon. J. M. Wainwright, and the State of Arkansas, by Hon. Thomas C. McRae, governor, conveying to the State of Arkansas certain portions of Camp Pike, Ark., including buildings, roads, walks, and utilities, for the use and benefit of the National Guard of Arkansas; and

Whereas under said lease no permanent construction work can be placed on the reservation without specific authority of Congress; and

Whereas it has become necessary for the proper conduct and training of the National Guard of the State of Arkansas to construct, maintain, and use permanent buildings, rifle ranges, and utilities on said reservation: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the State of Arkansas be, and is hereby, authorized and permitted to erect, maintain, and use such permanent buildings, rifle ranges, and utilities at Camp Pike, Ark., within the areas most suitable, as are necessary for the use and benefit of the National Guard of the State of Arkansas: Provided, That no expense shall accrue to the United States by reason of this authorization.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the whereases.

The SPEAKER. The preamble?

Mr. WINGO. That is, the preamble; I suppose you can call it that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the preamble.

Mr. RAKER. On that I desire to be heard. I rise in opposition to the amendment. The whereases are a good many; and whereas there is now pending on the Union Calendar No. 7 the bill H. R. 3675; and whereas the American Legion all over the United States in various towns and cities are desirous of obtaining these trophies and captured war devices; and whereas, according to the report of the Secretary of War, there are many of them outside in the open air and are being rapidly deteriorated; and whereas they are becoming of less value all the time, why can we not have those distributed to where the people are ready and willing to take care of them? Why not distribute them before they are destroyed?

Mr. McKENZIE. I will say, in answer to the gentleman from California, that whereas the gentleman from California is so deeply interested in this subject; and whereas I have long known, without being informed by the gentleman from California, of that situation; and whereas the American Legion boys all over the country are anxious to have those trophies distributed; and whereas it has been impossible heretofore to get action; and whereas I now intend to get action at the very earliest moment [laughter]——

Mr. RAKER. And whereas the Committee on Military Affairs has the call to-day; and whereas they have full power to call up the bill: Therefore be it resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs call up that bill, the next one on the calendar, so that we may dispose of it within the next 15 minutes. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to strike out the preamble.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McKENZIE, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the House joint resolution of similar purport will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

DIRECTOR OF THE BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I call up Senate Joint Resolution 105, authorizing the President to detail an officer of the Corps of Engineers as Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and for other purposes. This resolution, Mr. Speaker, is on the Union Calendar. I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois calls up the resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. J. Res. 105) authorizing the President to detail an officer of the Corps of Engineers as Director of the Bureau of Engraving, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the resolution be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to detail an officer of the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, possessing a thorough knowledge of engraving, plate printing, and reproduction printing processes, to duty as Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. The President may also detail from time to time not to exceed two officers of the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing to receive instruction in processes and methods which may be beneficial and useful in the reproduction work of the Corps of Engineers: Provided, That the provisions of the national defense act, as amended, referring to duty with troops, shall not apply to any officer detailed under authority of this joint resolution: Provided further, That the authority herein conferred upon the President and any detail made pursuant thereto shall cease to exist and become null and void two years after the date of its approval.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the resolving clause and insert the following: "That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion to direct the said Maj. Wallace W. Kirby to report to the Secretary of the Treasury for duty for a period of six months, and that said Maj. Wallace W. Kirby may, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, perform the duties of Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing for a period not to exceed six months, notwithstanding the provisions of section 1222, Revised Statutes, and section 1224, Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of February 28, 1877: Provided, That the said Maj. Wallace W. Kirby shall receive no emoluments by reason of the performance of said duties, but shall receive the same pay and allowances from appropriations made for the support of the Army as he would receive if he were performing military duty at the War Department."

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that it would be well to strike out the words "the said" in line 13 of the resolution reported.

Major Kirby has not been mentioned, so far as I can see, prior to that point.

Mr. McKENZIE. I accept the gentleman's suggestion. Mr. Speaker, I move the amendment suggested.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McKENZIE: Page 2, line 13, after the word "direct," strike out the words "the said."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, Senate Joint Resolution 105, now under consideration and passed by that body, authorizes the President to detail an officer of the Corps of Engineers as Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

The Military Affairs Committee reports the same back with an amendment in lieu thereof, authorizing the President to direct Maj. W. W. Kirby to report for duty for a period of six months to perform the duties of the director of said bureau, and all this notwithstanding section 1222 of the Revised Statutes of the United States by the act of February 28, 1877, which provides that—no officer of the Army on the active list shall hold any civil office, whether by election or appointment, and every such officer who accepts or exercises the functions of a civil office shall thereby cease to be an officer of the Army and his commission shall be thereby vacated.

It seems to me that this bill should be defeated for two reasons:

First. Because the principle of detailing Army officers to civil positions is detrimental to public policy and the best interests of the Government.

Second. Because it will seriously interrupt and delay the work of the special committee authorized and directed to investigate the duplication of Government bonds and securities.

Men who have spent all their lives in accumulating money must have necessarily excluded the expenditure of any time which might have been devoted to a study of the principles of the fathers, an examination of their accomplishments, or a glance at their words of wisdom. Unhampered by any such advice, free from all scruples that a man of caution should have in governmental matters, where the rights of millions may be involved in his act, an ultra big business man, imbued with the idea of immediate results—always the important thing in his private business—will, without knowledge, experience, study, or advice, rush into the making of bald, crude, and unheard-of suggestions, which, erroneous in themselves, yet because the utterer has made a million or two, will be acquiesced in by the multitude because he is rich. So, in this case, here is a suggestion which, if advocated in the days of the founders, would have been indignantly received; that is, the intermingling of military and civil affairs. The policy of the Government from its infancy has been against such a course, yet now suggested to us in the most casual and calloused way. And because of such attitudes of the richly endowed the moment they become Government officials there is furnished the people an impelling reason for removing from office as quickly as possible the uneducated, the uninformed, the unstatesmanlike, and willful rich.

From 1870 it has been unlawful to do what the Secretary of the Treasury, Andrew W. Mellon, is now asking us to do. While it is proposed to confine the Senate bill to a single case, yet it is the opening wedge.

Furthermore, such a law would be directly in opposition to the economical administration of the Government, for the reason that the average pay of Army officers is greatly above the average pay of civil-service employees now holding executive positions.

Demoralization must result, while a Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing would naturally be influenced by a higher loyalty to the Secretary of War than to the Secretary of the Treasury.

This policy followed to its logical conclusion means that with the important key positions throughout held and controlled by Army officers the Secretary of War would possess power and influence far beyond anything intended by Congress and result in great detriment to the wise administration of our republican form of government.

No measure before this House in years has so threatened to overthrow our highly organized merit system of civil service and the restoration of the spoils system, and, what is far worse, under military control.

The Secretary of the Treasury, who enjoys as a pastime riding like a colossus over the statutes of the country, and, in this case, contrary to the ruling of Comptroller McCarl—who, by the way, maintains in law and in precedent one of the real functioning arms of the Government—who ruled that Kirby could not be so detailed, has maintained this Army officer as Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, in spite of the law, in spite of Congress, in spite of decency and honor for nearly three months. Where is the governmental conscience of Andrew W. Mellon?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to conclude my remarks in not exceeding 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. RAKER. What is the necessity of appointing an Army officer instead of a civilian as director?

Mr. KING. That is what I am coming to. I am going to show why this particular Army officer has been selected in this case.

Mr. RAKER. Is it contended that they can not find a civilian competent and qualified to do the work?

Mr. KING. There are many civilians right down there in the department who are competent and qualified to fill this position at any time.

Mr. RAKER. Then the purpose is to appoint an Army officer and set aside civilians qualified to do the work?

Mr. KING. Yes; for six months, and then for another six months.

Such a proceeding and the passage of this bill recognizing the Mellon action means the open door to militarism and the eventual undermining of this Republic, for what observer can truthfully declare that signs are not apparent clearly showing that certain interests in this country have in mind the overthrow of the Republic? I do not refer to bolshevism, used as a scarehead, or used as a lullaby by the nurses on Fifth Avenue, when they sing to naughty babies:

Hark, hark, the dogs do bark,
The Bolsheviki are coming to town,
Some in rags, some in shags,
And some in velvet gowns.

It is well, however, to direct our attention to those in velvet gowns. Before you can safely destroy representative government it is necessary to discredit it in the eyes of our people, to decry it and hold it up to ridicule and detestation.

That the public having this view of its representatives will then tolerate the forcible seizure of the Congress and Government by an American Fascisti is apparent to those who heretofore have controlled the public against its own interest and found them as President Wilson said, "a most docile people," which group we may most truthfully refer to as the "American house of overlords," by means of its paid itinerant authors, publicists, orators, professors, lecturers, astrologers, and medicine men, together with its Otto Kahns, its propaganda organizations, its international bank group, its Institute of Politics at Williamstown, Mass., and which in one grand diapason resounds in speech, print, pictures, and radio.

This mass attack for thought control is now being directed in an attempt to break down the faith of the people in those whom they have by their votes elected to the House and Senate.

Secretary of War Weeks, exponent of the house of overlords, tells a graduating class at Western Reserve University that "the legislative branch probably has never been at a lower ebb than it is to-day," and "that to say disparaging things of Congress is a habit."

And now comes on General Dawes, the only man who insists on being called by his military title, more than six years after the war, the "shave tails," the first lieutenants, the captains, majors, colonels, and generals, especially those whose commissions were in the service of supplies, and who, like General Dawes, "smelleth the battle afar off" only, have long since dropped their titles.

The "general," a member in good standing in the American house of overlords, in a tantrum against the bonus at the Hotel Sherman in Chicago before the Illinois Manufacturing Association in banquet assembled, said:

We have to have backbone with the bonus business and less of this miserable demagogic attitude which leads men to go into the Senate and House to represent organized and aggressive minorities—

And yet when Dawes was a candidate for the Senate he called upon every politician in the State of Illinois to help him—

And at the present time—

He said—

it is time to throw them out. These quarreling politicians who run to their rat holes at the very shadow of an organization or a collection of men advocating something or other, or women advocating something in regard to maternity, these miserable, dirty, demagogical rats do just what they want.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield again right there?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Is it the purpose now to put the gentleman in as director who maintains these views that the gentleman is just speaking about, and then come before Congress to get an act passed so that he might go in and overlord all the civil officers of the Government?

Mr. KING. I would say he is "horse shedding" our witnesses, to use a common phrase.

Mr. RAKER. I do not get that. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. That is Illinois.

Mr. KING. I take it that the gentlemen of the South understand that term.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman's vernacular is all right.

Mr. BOYLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. BOYLAN. For the edification of those who do not come from the South, will the gentleman kindly give us a more detailed explanation of the term used?

Mr. KING. I expect to have a special paragraph on that in just a moment.

Again Lord Dawes backed Pershing before the Association of Commerce in Chicago December 7, 1922, in his plea for the suppression of the radicals and a "strong army." Sentiments accepted by 1,500 at the association's banquet. Referring to Congress, he said:

There are a lot of demagogues in Congress who have given men, little by little, the chance to undermine the Constitution. We must get a new breed of men in place of those cowards in Congress, who would murder their country for a few votes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Who made that statement?

Mr. KING. Charlie Dawes; Brig. Gen. Charles G. Dawes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Where did he make that statement?

Mr. QUIN. It is "Hell-and-Maria" Dawes. The gentleman knows who he is.

Mr. KING. And Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, who, with her money, keeps the women, so far as she can, in line for the policies of the American house of overlords, just stepping off the Majestic from hobnobbing with the decadent royalty of Europe, the moment her dainty foot feels American soil, and following the policy of injuring the people's representatives, jauntily says:

I wish we had American men in politics who deserve to be there. We want men in our Government who will not only be respected at home but by European nations. American womanhood can do a whole lot toward putting these men into our Government. Some of the Senators we have are a disgrace, and I say this after having listened to many of them on the Senate floor——

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. I shall be pleased to yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it not a fact, after all, that the people at home in each district are responsible for who is representing them in Congress, both in the House and in the Senate.

Mr. KING. It is. And the people are sending some good men to the Senate and the House, and the gentleman from Texas is one of them.

Mr. BLANTON. I did not seek that.

Mr. KING (continuing):

We want the right sort of men in politics, but we haven't them now. We will in time.

And so the diabolical work goes on.

And, to cap the climax, along comes Judge Gary, who occupies the "wool sack" in the American house of overlords, at whose dinner talks the hosts of eager, grasping greed rise and sing in unison and "en masse" Lead, Kindly Light, and he leads.

And Overlord Gary says in a recent speech:

Congress is the most inimical thing in this country so far as its welfare is concerned.

He will add, and in his own good time, "Why not abolish it?"

Contrary to these misrepresentations on the part of the agents of the American house of overlords, there never was a time when Congress was as close to the people; when the common people had greater consideration of their rights; and when there was greater honesty and fidelity to duty than in the present Congress. Those who take and advocate opposite views for the purpose of rendering Congress impotent for want of a friendly public sentiment, when the time comes to defend themselves on the hill against the American Fascisti, are enemies of the people.

Further evidence of the Fascisti purposes in this Nation as presented by the American house of overlords is apparent in the unity of thought and action on its part with Mussolini in Italy.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Does not the gentleman think he is a little wrong in calling these folks Fascisti? You know the Fascisti want to work, while they do not want to work.

Mr. KING. Well, that may be true, but, still, for the purposes of my present presentation, I prefer to retain that name.

Mussolini is the true interpreter of the Fascisti movement. He says:

The Fascisti government is for liberty, but there must be no foolishness in it.

He says:

Men nowadays are tired of liberty. Liberty must be controlled and dominated. Liberty is no longer a chaste and severe maiden, for whom generations in the first half of the last century fought and died. For the intrepid and restless youth, who are now in the dawn of a new history, other words exercise a greater fascination, namely, order, hierarchy, and discipline.

The Fascisti movement is not afraid to declare itself illiberal or antiliberal. It has already passed, and, if necessary, will again pass without the slightest hesitation, over the body, more or less decomposed, of the Goddess of Liberty.

Gary has approved the Fascisti method of nonelected government in Italy. He summoned his cohorts and runners—the International Chamber of Commerce, which connects with the United States Chamber of Commerce, which in turn distributes the commands into the various chambers of commerce throughout the country for their individual members—to meet in Rome, Italy, the home of organized money's Italian emperor, where they might see, hear, and fraternize with the Fascisti as the Russians were "fraternized" by German soldiers during the war, in order that they might return to America and quietly peddle their poisonous dope among its citizens.

If you do not believe that this liberty-destroying movement has already been started in America, I will give you the name of the man who is permitted to be at the head of it. His name is James C. Dahlman, and he is, or was, the mayor of Omaha. He is known as the grand lictor of the Fascisti in America. Lord Gary has pronounced in favor of it, and said that we Americans can learn something from this movement which has taken place in Italy. General Dawes saw Mussolini and ratified the Fascisti idea for America. We fought to make this world safe for democracy, yet since then the spirit of Garibaldi in Italy is dead. There, free speech and free press has been obliterated. Spain has its dictator, Austria its admiral, and the disheartening policy of Mussolini has permeated the confines of Poland and Rumania, and brought new life to monarchy in Germany.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Where does this American house of overlords hold forth, and who are they?

Mr. KING. Well, at some future date, not to be set aside by the House, I shall be very glad to enlighten the gentleman upon that subject. The exact location is not hard to find.

Mr. RAKER. They do not advertise their presence and the place of holding their meetings very often, do they?

Mr. KING. No; I think not. They do have meetings, however.

Mr. QUIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. QUIN. This General Dawes is mentioned as the nominee of the Republican Party for Vice President. Who is responsible for that?

Mr. KING. Well, the rank and file of the Republican Party just now is not having very much to say about it.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of New York. I, perhaps, can give the gentleman some information as to the whereabouts of these overlords. I think if the gentleman will drop in at the White House some morning he may see some of them at breakfast.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois may have five minutes more.

Mr. KING. I would like additional time, because I have some real arguments which I have not yet made.

Mr. MILLS. Reserving the right to object, how much longer does the gentleman desire to proceed?

Mr. KING. Not to exceed six or seven minutes.

Mr. QUIN. Let him have it.

Mr. MILLS. But we have some legislation here which we would like to enact, and the gentleman has already had 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois be permitted to proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have seven minutes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then, Mr. Speaker, I modify my request and ask that the gentleman from Illinois have seven minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York modifies his request and asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois may proceed for seven additional minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KING. When the American house of overlords has been defeated in some of its fondest hopes—the overthrow of the primary system, the return of the ring system in choosing committees, the abolishment of the seniority rule, the reduction of representation—and, in fact, has failed to cut the words "by the people" entirely out of our governmental policy, then will they be prepared to make the attempt to overthrow our representative Republic and set up a Mussolini hierarchy in America.

For this reason no door should be even slightly opened where the military, which Mussolini says in his country is an ally of the Fascisti, can gain control of our civilian activities. There should be no point of contact where our Army can become an ally of the American Fascisti.

My second reason for opposing this bill is, as I have indicated, it will put the witnesses in the bond-investigation matter under military control.

Now, the second reason for opposing this bill, and perhaps the most important reason, is the fact that it will simply be putting charge of the witnesses who are expected to be called before the committee for the investigation of duplicate bonds in the hands of a military officer.

Now, then, I will not have the time within the limit which has been fixed to explain to you how this man Kirby first got into this department as he did. Why should they take this Army officer? He is not a West Point man; he is not a man educated in military affairs; he is not a Napoleon Bonaparte; nor is he such a wonderful printer. He was a mere photographer over here in the Coast and Geodetic Survey, a maker of maps, and he knows nothing about printing money, engraving money, or anything of that kind. He was put into this department solely because he had practically agreed to take care of these witnesses as against this committee.

Mr. MILLS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. MILLS. Does the gentleman know his record abroad during the war?

Mr. KING. I certainly do. He never got anywhere near the smell of powder, as did the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. MILLS. Does the gentleman know what he did?

Mr. KING. I know what he did; yes.

Mr. MILLS. Will the gentleman be fair enough to tell the House what he did?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. Yes. I will tell the House what he did, but you have got to give me time to do it. I have a lot of information as to what he has done and what he has not done.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman has talked for 25 minutes without objection.

Mr. KING. But the gentleman has interrupted considerably.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Does the fact that a man has a brilliant military record fit him for service in any civil department?

Mr. KING. He never had any military record, any more than Dawes had a military record.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. What does the gentleman mean by saying this officer is to be put in charge for the purpose of handling witnesses? That is a very suggestive remark.

Mr. KING. The gentleman knows that there has been a committee of this House appointed to investigate duplicate bonds, and he knows that prior to that time there had been considerable talk in the papers and around Congress with reference to that matter.

Mr. RAKER. Yes; that is right.

Mr. KING. Now, at about that time the director down there was required to resign, and for some time they failed to get anybody; but finally along came Mr. Kirby, a military officer, a friend of the former director, and they were looking at that time for somebody who would take charge of these witnesses and increase the morale. Men down there had been charged with bootlegging. They had been charged with selling Government supplies and putting the money into their pockets. They had been charged with bribing a Mexican official. Those men, a number of whom were discharged by President Harding, had been restored by some order, and this man was put down there to take charge.

Mr. RAKER. He was to marshal the witnesses on the subject.

Mr. KING. Yes, sir; and he has. The first day he was in there he called everybody he could find that had ever seen President Harding's special investigator, Mr. Brewer, and examined them and said:

I want to know what you have told Brewer. Have you made any affidavits to Brewer, and what have you done, and what is your connection with this matter?

Since then everything has been as silent as a tomb in that department. That is the kind of efficiency he is rendering. He is rendering efficiency there for the Treasury Department in covering up their shortcomings.

Mr. RAKER. I thought we had police and marshals in the district attorney's office to handle matters of that kind.

Mr. KING. The gentleman is engaging in very deep humor now.

Mr. RAKER. And that they would not appoint a director to do that kind of work.

Mr. KING. I am not here defending the former Department of Justice by any means.

This is simply a block that is put in this bill for the purpose of interfering with the work of this special committee, and if you pass this bill, you will be doing just that. We have already innocently done one thing here. We have cut out an appropriation of $400,000 which was devoted in the Division of Loans and Currency to the payment of the clerks who were counting these coupon bonds, and it is absolutely necessary for this committee to have that information. These clerks were counting and assorting and arranging the bonds. Unless the House passes a bill to restore that, you are going to have a pile of bonds down there as big as a haystack, all in promiscuous order, for the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] and myself, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. STRONG] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] to go through this summer and assort.

Now, this was done with a purpose. The Treasury never came down here for any other purpose than to put a stop to this committee's work.

Not only that, but I will tell you another thing——

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. Not just now, because the gentleman from New York may object at any moment.

Here is another thing that happened right here in this House. When they were destroying these bonds, or when they were trying to destroy them, and when they had it up with their attorneys to ascertain whether or not they had the right to destroy them, they came to the committee of this House on the destruction of useless executive papers and tried to get them to take these coupon bonds or these duplicate bonds with duplicate numbers on them and destroy them.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. KING. I yield.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition——

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois may have five additional minutes to conclude his statement. The gentleman ought to have that time. He is one of the members of this special committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Illinois be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. KING. I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. MILLS. Reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman whether he expects to conclude in five minutes?

Mr. KING. Of course, I have attempted to answer the questions on the part of the Members, and if any of them desire to ask questions and I have the time, I will answer them. This is the most important bill we will have before us, and is far more important than the New York bill you have in your hand.

Mr. McKENZIE. Could not the gentleman extend his remarks in the RECORD without taking up further time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. RAKER. The statement of the gentleman now divulges the fact that the gentleman is a member of this committee to do this investigating which was appointed by the House, and as a member of that committee the gentleman who is now speaking as a member of the committee feels that to carry out his full, sworn duty he will be embarrassed by having Mr. Kirby as the director of that bureau.

Mr. KING. The entire committee of five takes that position, and we would ask the House, if the House would agree to it, not to pass this legislation.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If the gentleman will permit, may I suggest that the gentleman finish his statement, and not feel under obligation to yield to anyone just because he did not object.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] can take care of himself and does not have to be instructed not to answer questions, and I hope the gentleman will not make that suggestion.

Mr. SWEET. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. I will be very glad to yield.

Mr. SWEET. May I inquire if this is a preliminary report of your committee on investigation?

Mr. KING. No; far be it. I really have an open mind on the subject. I am praying to the Almighty that they can clear this thing up, and I will be glad if they can. I will be glad to give them a clear bill. I think if it should go out that we had to condemn the Treasury Department for a conspiracy in issuing duplicate bonds, it would be a terrible thing.

Mr. SWEET. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. KING. I will.

Mr. SWEET. Does it not appear to the gentleman that remarks of this kind would tend to send broadcast the impression that the committee is somewhat prejudiced?

Mr. KING. That is the very argument of Mr. Winston down there, who is doing his utmost to keep everything under cover for fear that the people might begin counterfeiting out in the country, and it would be a terrible thing.

Mr. SWEET. This seems a pretty prejudiced opinion for a committeeman.

Mr. KING. The gentleman says it is a prejudiced opinion, but I assure the gentleman I have no prejudice in the matter. I am trying to present these facts as to why this bill ought not to be passed.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Does my friend desire the former superintendent, this man Hill, who has been discussed here on the floor of the House, to be reinstated in place of this Army officer?

Mr. KING. No, sir. The gentleman has an interest in the employees down there in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing——

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Very much so.

Mr. KING. Mr. Brewer never made any charges against them. This committee has nothing against them, and only so far as it pertains to the duplication of securities are they to be investigated.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I will say to my friend that Mr. Winston is not a member of my party, but I do not think you can find a higher-class man in the service than he.

Mr. KING. I agree with the gentleman that he is a high-class man and a good lawyer. He has represented Standard Oil.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I do not know whom he represents, but he is a man of splendid character and splendid ability.

Mr. KING. I admit that, but nevertheless he is trying to cover up the duplication of these bonds. Now, gentlemen, I have nothing further to say because I have so much to say on these various propositions and various blocks that have been put in the way of the committee and which confronted President Harding—destruction of bonds, some of them destroyed where we will never find them. There are a number of things that I could mention. I think it is a bad plan in this House when we are just starting out in our inquiry concerning duplicate bonds to put us in such shape by the passage of this bill that we can not get at the true facts in the case.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. I will.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Will the gentleman try and tell us why it was necessary to pass a special bill or resolution in order to enable the President to appoint an Army officer to take charge of the bureau? Is it possible that there is only one man in the Nation whom he must appoint to that position.

Mr. KING. No, sir; I know nothing about him personally. But it is plain that the Treasury claims that he is the man that is superior over every other man in God's world for that position.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the resolution.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise to receive recognition as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs on this resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman from Texas opposed to the resolution?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I am.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARRETT] is recognized.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I am not going to detain you but a minute and a half, and in that time I want to read to you the reasons found in the report of the Committee on Military Affairs for the adoption of this resolution. It is in this language:

> The Secretary of the Treasury advised your committee that the Bureau of Engraving and Printing has been functioning very unsatisfactorily because of disputes between factions within the bureau. As no satisfactory administrative head was available the Secretary of the Treasury believed the only solution was to borrow from the Army Major Kirby, who seems ideally fitted from experience and ability to reorganize the bureau and reestablish confidence and harmony among its 5,000 employees.

I can not give my consent to the passage of this resolution upon that ground. The committee reported further that this resolution must be passed because of the fact that for about 50 years or longer we have had a statute on the books of this Government prohibiting the doing of this identical thing. We have had a law for years and years denying to the President or to the Secretary of War the right to detail an officer of the Army to perform civilian duty.

Now, think of the situation we are in. I raise no question as to the ability or capability of Major Kirby. I have no criticism to make of him as a soldier or as a major in the Army. My criticism of this resolution is that it is legislation that is dangerous and a precedent that this House ought not to establish. Can it be possible that out of the 110,000,000 people in the United States, out of the multiplied thousands of men in civil life that are competent and qualified to transact business in every walk of life that we find ourselves here at the Capital of the United States in a position that, as far as the great Bureau of Printing and Engraving is concerned, that there is only one man, just one, in all the country, and that man is an officer in the Army of the United States, and that he must be taken from the Army and put in this responsible position until they can look about for six months and find some civilian that may take his place. My God, suppose Major Kirby had died 30 days ago. Suppose he should be called hence to-morrow. What would happen? Would we have to close up the Bureau of Printing and Engraving and allow it to stand idle for six months until we could hunt the country over to find some man in private life to perform the duties and discharge the responsibilities of that important position?

Now, gentlemen, that is my objection; I do not believe the House ought to do it. I do not believe that we ought to establish the precedent of setting aside the statutes of the United States by resolution to permit men to be called out of the Army and put into these civilian places by virtue of the fact that they have the peculiar qualifications to do this work.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I ask for one minute more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I believe that the proper thing for Major Kirby to do, if he is the man this report indicates that he is and which I do not question, that this place of importance would demand of him that he resign from the Army, put on the plain clothes of a private citizen, go in and do this most responsible work for the Government as a civilian. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, if you gentlemen want to know who selected Maj. Wallace Kirby for this important position, you will not have to go very far to find him. Major Kirby is the protégé of a very distinguished colleague of ours, one of the oldest Members of this House, one of the most loyal Members of the House, a man who sits here in his seat all day long attending to his business, our distinguished colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE]. [Applause.] He picked him. He told the President to appoint him and put him in charge of this bureau. When he was first put there I was prejudiced against him. I was the most prejudiced man in this House against him, and I will tell you why. There had come to me all sorts of reports that he had been fired from the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and there had come to me reports that he had a bad Army record in France.

I am in favor of the investigation now being carried on by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING], and I am backing him up 100 per cent in it; but I am also for Maj. Wallace Kirby, because I traced back to their source every one of those adverse reports against him, and I found there was not a single report which was true. I went personally to the Coast and Geodetic Survey and I got his record during every month's stay that he was working in that department, and I found that it was as clean as it could be; there was not a black mark against him. They said that he had as good a record as there was in the Government service and recommended him highly. Then I went to the War Department and searched his record from the time that he went in until the time he came out, and there was not a black mark against it there. His record in France was good.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. There was nothing but high encomiums said of him in all departments. Likewise I found his record in the War College first class, and he was highly recommended there. In addition I found that he is the superintendent of one of the largest Sunday-school classes in the District of Columbia, and that is some recommendation worth while for any man. Everyone who attends his class is a friend of his, and I found out something else about Major Kirby.

I was specially interested in the matter because of one fact. I was interested in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing because of some reforms that we have been seeking there ever since I have been in Congress, and I was wanting to know whether Major Kirby was going to carry out those reforms or whether he was going to let them stop, because there were men there who were clamoring to stop them. I found that in every particular Major Kirby was standing foursquare for the reforms in the interest of this Government. I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KING. I wanted to ask the gentleman if, when he was down at the Coast and Geodetic Survey, they gave him his record on the Rock Creek Park photograph matter?

Mr. BLANTON. No. I found this: There is not a black mark against his record there in that department or anywhere else, and I have it over the signatures of the chiefs of all departments. There was not one criticism there against him. There has not been a more efficient man in the employment of the Government than Maj. Wallace W. Kirby, according to all reports given me by departments. It was by a slow process of investigation that the prejudice that I had at first against this man was absolutely obliterated.

Mr. KING. Did they tell the gentleman anything about his bringing students in there and teaching them in that department and charging tuition fees for it?

Mr. BLANTON. No. I think if the gentleman will spend half as much time as I have spent in investigating Maj. Wallace Kirby's record he will find that there is nothing against it. The gentleman had these reports brought to him, as I had them brought to me, but I did not stop when they were brought. I went to the source and found out what facts existed, and I have the files in my office now, and when I submit them to the gentleman from Illinois and he sees the signatures of the gentlemen who have signed these reports favorable to Major Kirby I know that he will withdraw these insinuations that he is making against him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I have always indorsed the law which opposed the detailing of Army officers into civilian activities of the Government. I think it is a wise law, and when this legislation was first proposed that a general bill should be passed authorizing the detailing of two or three officers to this department I gave out an interview in which I stated that I would be opposed to any such legislation. I am opposed to the principle of this, but after hearing something about this particular case, after consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury who pointed out the great emergency that is existing and his inability to find a man who could fill the position, after having visited Chicago and other large cities and finding that the men who were capable of handling this position will not accept it at the salary paid by the Government, I said to those in authority who were asking for this legislation, "Gentlemen, if you will admit that it is an emergency, if you will permit the Congress of the United States to name the officer specifically, if you will concede that we have the right and ought to limit the period of his detail to not to exceed six months, I shall have no objection to the legislation." All there is to this is that there is an emergency. Major Kirby seems to be able to fill the bill. It is demanded by the people down there and by the men at the head of the Treasury Department and by officials. I think we have not set a precedent in this legislation, but that we have once again declared in this bill that the policy of the Congress of the United States is against the plan of detailing Army officers in civilian pursuits, and there is one thing that makes me rejoice. Being a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, remembering some of the harsh criticisms I have heard made against Army officers, it is somewhat gratifying to know that at least in one of the great bureaus of this Government it seems that at the present time it is necessary to call upon one of our Army officers to fill the place until they search the country over to find some one who has the qualifications to take his place. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BUSBY: Page 2, line 22, after the word "emoluments," strike out the remainder of line 22, lines 23 and 24, and lines 1 and 2 on page 3, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Except those provided by law for the Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing: And further provided, That said Maj. Wallace W. Kirby surrender immediately his commission in the Army."

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Speaker, I do not know——

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against the amendment. I do not think it is germane to the purpose of this provision at all. This bill simply provides that he shall draw his Army pay, and certainly we are not in favor of his drawing any more than that, and this amendment would call upon him to surrender his commission, which he should do if he draws civilian pay, but he is not under this bill permitted to draw anything but his Army pay.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, may we have the amendment again reported?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the amendment is clearly subject to the point of order and I want to be heard a moment on the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Mississippi on the point of order.

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Speaker, the point of order just made against this amendment it seems to me will not lie, because the amendment provides for the emoluments or compensation for this same officer. It is a different figure; it is a less amount than is provided for a major in the Army.

Mr. McKENZIE. If the gentleman will yield, I would like to ask him this question: If his amendment is adopted, is it not wholly unnecessary for us to pass this bill?

Mr. BUSBY. That is not to the point of order. The other proposition that is raised is a limitation on the power to serve, and for that reason it seems to me clearly the point of order will not lie.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will yield, why if we do not pass this bill at all he has got the right, he can surrender his commission and be appointed. We do not have to pass the bill to give him that right, so therefore the gentleman's amendment is subject to the point of order.

Mr. BUSBY. This is a question for the House to pass upon and not for me to decide. Now, I have nothing further to say on the point of order but I do not see how it would lie against the amendment proposed which deals with the same subject matter as the words in the original bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts). The Chair is ready to rule. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi provides in part that the person mentioned in this legislation shall surrender immediately his commission in the Army. It seems to the Chair that that is a departure from the subject matter of the bill itself and that it introduces entirely new and irrelevant matter into the joint resolution. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. STEVENSON: On page 3, lines 17 and 18, after the word "printing," in line 17, strike out the words "for a period not to exceed six months" and insert the words "until March 5, 1925."

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this whole proposition. I do not know Mr. Kirby or anything about him but what I have heard and seen in the prints. I am opposed to the principle, and if you are going to put him in by statute, fix the term of office and fix it so that the next administration, if it is Mr. Coolidge, will have an opportunity to appoint his successor, and if it is somebody else, why that administration will have an opportunity to appoint his successor. After all the barrenness which has been displayed in finding a successor by the present administration I take it is unnecessary for us to direct this administration to search this country to find a man to attend to this outside of Major Kirby——

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If the gentleman will permit, for our tranquillity and peace of mind, will the gentleman give us an idea of who the somebody else will be?

Mr. STEVENSON. We will tell you about it in November, and I think it may be satisfactory to us but not to you. [Laughter and applause.] Now, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE] says that he is opposed to this principle. Then why embark on it? It is all foolishness to say that the Secretary of the Treasury can not find a man for the salary he is authorized to pay who can run this bureau down there. This statute of 1870 was enacted because right after the Civil War there grew up a practice of every big Army officer coming back here, with his epaulets and his rank and all that, drifting into civil office, and they filled them from one end of the land to the other, and this statute absolutely prohibiting it was passed because they did not propose to militarize the United States Government in so far as the civil government was concerned. [Applause.] Now, then, this is just simply another manifestation of the same spirit, and I am opposed to it on principle. I do not believe that the Congress was mistaken in 1870 when it said that should not be done. In 1838, as far back as that, under section 1224, they limited it to a certain extent, and in 1870, having seen the evils of the Army officers back from the wars and seen the power they exercised, having seen the evil of Prussianizing the Government, they took away that power, and I think we should be very slow to strike down that safeguard which was placed on it in the past. [Applause.]

Mr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I move that all debate——

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi makes the point of order of no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. STEVENSON) there were—ayes 46, noes 28.

So a call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Anderson	Bowling	Celler	Dickstein

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this call 310 Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

The doors were reopened.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, I believe I had the floor when the point of no quorum was made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I move that all debate on this resolution and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes, 5 minutes to be used by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN] and 5 minutes by the other gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BUSBY].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois moves that all debate on the pending bill and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with some amazement to the assaults that have been made on this bill. There seems to be some misapprehension as to the purposes and objects of the measure. The Secretary of the Treasury did not himself select Major Kirby. The President did not select him. After they had all the trouble in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing it became necessary for a competent and capable man to be placed in charge there immediately. According to the evidence before our committee the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] brought this man to the attention of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. I can not yield.

We declined to consider his request because we would not accept the idea of the President appointing a military officer to that position. The Secretary of the Treasury came back with the additional request that we might grant him the period of six months in which to look the country over and select a man to take that place. On that plea we saw that there was really a necessity for the Secretary to look about and get a capable man. That position is a strictly technical position and one of high responsibility.

I do not know this Major Kirby. Personally, I do not know the Secretary of the Treasury. But the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, according to my conception, is entitled to a square deal from this House. [Applause.]

I am a Democrat, and I do not care whether he is a Republican or a Democrat; if he holds the position of Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, he is responsible to all the people, and when he asks us in fairness to give him an opportunity to get a capable and competent man to occupy the position down there in lieu of this man, Major Kirby, I for one am willing to give him the opportunity.

I do not see what the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] thinks his motion amounts to, because the purpose of the Secretary of the Treasury under his amendment could not be changed at all. He may select a man in two months. He may get him in 30 days. We limit the entire time to six months. The Secretary of the Treasury, at the expiration of those six months, will be compelled to let Major Kirby go if he has not chosen a man to take his place. It is evident that Secretary Mellon would not ask us now to give him that authority if he could go out and immediately lay his hand on the man qualified to take the place. There may have been rascality in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and the Secretary of the Treasury, who is at the head of them all, asks us, as well as the members of his party, to loan him this man, who, as everybody knows, is ably administering affairs down there. The Secretary should have a sufficient length of time to enable him to go out and select a suitable and capable man in whose hands the interests of the Government in that institution will be safe. There has been talk about bonds being issued in duplicate and about erroneous securities being issued by the department, and the Secretary of the Treasury is vitally interested, as is the humblest man in this Republic, in the soundness of the administration of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, which prints all the currency money and bonds of the United States Government. We ought to pass this bill. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. BUSBY rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BUSBY. I rise for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. An amendment is already pending, but the gentleman can have his amendment at the desk for information. Does the gentleman desire his amendment to be read to the House for information?

Mr. BUSBY. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. BUSBY. And I will discuss it as soon as it is in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BUSBY: Page 2, line 23, after the word "duties," strike out the remainder of lines 23 and 24 and lines 1 and 2 on page 3 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "except those provided by law for the Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman will withhold his discussion a moment, the Chair will put the question on the Stevenson amendment, which, without objection, the Clerk will again report.

There was no objection.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BUSBY] offers an amendment, which has just been read, and is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I offered an amendment just a moment ago which embodied the amendment that is before the House now and another proposition. The two propositions embodied in the amendment held out of order by the Chair were, first, that this individual, to whom we are looking for salvation for six months and who must step down and out at the end of six months, should be put in the same class with every other individual in the United States who should occupy the place he now occupies. That was the first proposition. As to salary, he was to receive not the salary of a major in the Army but the salary of the director of this bureau. The next proposition was—and that goes to the vital thing that is before the House—to have him, as a condition to his serving in that capacity, surrender his commission in the Army.

Now, for 47 years, since the enactment of section 1222 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, so far as I am able to learn, there has never been an exception where an Army officer was put into civilian employment.

You say this is an emergency; you treat it as a light proposition, and you say it is a proposition of no consequence. But it is a proposition of consequence, and, to my mind, this is one of the things which has created discord in this bureau, namely, this man being put at the head of 5,000 people, and they are going to be marshaled into right order by him as a military man.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUSBY. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. If I understood the gentleman's amendment when it was read—I could not hear very well—it provides that he shall retain his grade as a major but shall receive the pay and emoluments of the director of the bureau.

Mr. BUSBY. That is it.

Mr. McKENZIE. In other words, you would increase his pay but permit him to still hold his rank in the Army?

Mr. BUSBY. I offered that amendment for this purpose: To show lack of good faith in objecting to it, because it does increase his pay and would not have been in order.

Mr. McKENZIE. I want to say to the gentleman from Mississippi that I am trying to act in all good faith.

Mr. BUSBY. I withdraw that suggestion.

Mr. McKENZIE. And I am opposed to increasing this gentleman's salary.

Mr. BUSBY. I withdraw that suggestion. But the point of order, that being the case, would have been sustained against it.

Mr. McKENZIE. I want to know whether the gentleman is acting in good faith in offering his amendment?

Mr. BUSBY. I have tried to act in good faith, and I mean to see that this thing gets full and fair consideration by all Members of the House. I intend to have a yea-and-nay vote on it or ask for the reading of the enrolled bill.

Mr. BLANTON. This would increase his pay to $7,500 a year and still give him his emoluments?

Mr. BUSBY. That is right. However, I was not so much concerned about this matter as I was the fact that an Army man should be placed at the head of this bureau. I do not care how good he is; there is a principle involved, and I would rather stand by the principle and uphold it than to have him put into this particular place.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUSBY. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Does not the gentleman think it is rather desirable that the Army should guard the Treasury for the next six months?

Mr. BUSBY. Well, it should have started about two years ago. It is too late now.

Gentlemen, this proposition is up to you as individuals. It is a question which you individually must settle as to whether or not you are going to depart from this long-established rule of law enacted into statute, and put an Army man into this position, which will mean an opening for an Army man in some other place, and there is no telling how soon we will have all these things that get mixed up straightened out by Army men. That is the situation I wanted to call your attention to. I have no interest in the matter. I do not know any of them, but I do know a principle when I see it, and I am going to try to stand by a principle on this proposition in opposing this bill. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired. All time has expired, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BUSBY].

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KING. Is it possible to talk five minutes at this time against the amendment of the gentleman?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time has been limited by vote of the House, and all time has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi.

The amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now comes on the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on ordering the Senate joint resolution to be read the third time.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the Senate joint resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BUSBY) there were—ayes 124, noes 74.

Mr. BUSBY. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Those in favor of taking this vote by the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Forty-seven gentlemen have risen; a sufficient number.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 180, nays 121, answered "present" 1, not voting 131, as follows:

Mr. Hudson with Mr. Sabath.
Mr. Fenn with Mr. Taylor of Colorado.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name should have been called?

Mr. HILL of Maryland. I was not; but if I had been here, I would have voted "no."

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name should have been called?

Mr. CARTER. No; I was not in the Hall.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can not vote.

Mr. McLEOD. I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name should have been called?

Mr. McLEOD. I was not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman does not qualify.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name should have been called?

Mr. BARKLEY. I was present a part of the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman does not qualify.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. McKENZIE, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RETIRED ENLISTED MEN OF THE ARMY, NAVY, MARINE CORPS, OR COAST GUARD

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 2450) to amend section 2 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act, approved July 31, 1894.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma makes the point no quorum is present. The Chair will count.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I understand the bill called up by the gentleman is S. 2450. In that case, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2450) to amend section 2 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act, approved July 31, 1894.

The SPEAKER. The bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act, approved July 31, 1894, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new sentence to read as follows: "Retired enlisted men of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard shall not be construed to hold an office within the meaning of this section."

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. STEPHENS: Strike out all of the printed bill after the word "follows," in line 6, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Retired enlisted men of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard retired for any cause, and retired officers of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard who have been retired for injuries received in battle or for injuries or incapacity incurred in line of duty shall not, within the meaning of this section, be construed to hold or to have held an office during such retirement."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MCKENZIE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN LAND TO THE STATE OF DELAWARE

Mr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill S. 2431, conveying to the State of Delaware certain land in the county of Sussex, in that State.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States hereby grants, quitclaims, and reconveys to the State of Delaware all that certain piece or parcel of land situate in Lewes and Broadkill Hundred, Sussex County, and State of Delaware, bounded and described as follows: Beginning at a stone, marked "U. S. 1," on the beach opposite the town of Lewes, Del., and located as follows: Bearing to Henlopen Light south 89° 40' east; angle between Henlopen Light and St. Peter's spire 114° 23' 15"; angle between St. Peter's spire and Greenhill Light 80° 33' 55"; angle between Greenhill Light and Upper Breakwater Light 122° 32' 13"; angle between Upper and Lower Breakwater Lights 9° 28' 17"; angle between Lower Breakwater Light and Henlopen Light 33° 2' 29"; thence southerly 1,630 feet, more or less, along the arc of a circle of 1,872.41 feet radius to the north side of South Street, the center of said circle, bearing south 59° 13' east from said stone; thence south 45° west 230 feet, more or less, along said north side of South Street to lands of the United States of America; thence with said lands in a northwesterly direction 180 feet, more or less, to a point; thence leaving said lands, northerly along the arc of a circle of 2,172.41 feet radius having the aforementioned center, 1,838 feet, more or less, to a point which is 300 feet distant from the place of beginning; thence north 30° 47' east 575 feet, more or less, to the low-water line of the Delaware Breakwater Harbor; thence easterly along said low-water line 320 feet, more or less; thence south 30° 47' west 650 feet, more or less, to the place of beginning, containing 16.7 acres, more or less.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Delaware where this land is. There seems to be no copies of the bill available.

Mr. BOYCE. I hand you a copy of the bill. The land in question was conveyed by the State of Delaware to the United States for canal purposes. It is no longer required, and it is desired to reconvey it to the State of Delaware.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Conveyed recently to the Government?

Mr. BOYCE. No; years ago. The bill authorizes the Government to reconvey it to the State.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Did the deed provide that the land would revert to the State if it was no longer needed for canal purposes?

Mr. BOYCE. I can not answer that question.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I could not hear the gentleman as to where this land was or what it is used for.

Mr. BOYCE. It is land situated in Sussex County, State of Delaware, and was conveyed by the State to the Government without cost to the Government. It is not now needed for canal purposes; and the Secretary of War recommends favorable consideration.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MCKENZIE, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

Mr. ROSENBLOOM, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

S. 2922. An act to authorize the President to reconsider the case of Frederic K. Long and to reappoint him a captain in the Regular Army.

SALARIES OF POSTAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request made this morning to print in the RECORD, in 8-point type, the letter from the Postmaster General on the bill (H. R. 9035) to increase the salaries of postal employees.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, on the 10th of this month I filed a minority report on H. R. 9035, a bill to increase the salaries of postal employees. On the same day I addressed a letter to the Postmaster General for the Post Office Department's estimate of the increased expenditures carried in said bill, and also for that department's views on the proposed legislation. In response to my letter I received the following letter from the Postmaster General, which I submit for printing in the RECORD for the information of Members of Congress:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., May 13, 1924.

Hon. C. WILLIAM RAMSEYER,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. RAMSEYER: I have your letter of the 10th instant, inclosing bill H. R. 9035, reclassifying the salaries of postmasters and employees of the Postal Service, etc., with the majority report of the committee, with request to be furnished with the department's estimate of the increased expenditures carried by the bill; and, further, that the department point out any inequities and to make any recommendations concerning any of its provisions which the department desires to submit.

The following is a summary of the approximate amounts of increased expenditures which will be made necessary should the bill become law:

Postmasters:
First-class offices
Second-class offices, 691, at $100 each	$69,100
Third-class offices, 10,939, at $100 each	1,093,900
Fourth-class offices, 36,639	2,753,720
Total		$3,915,820
Assistant postmasters:
First-class offices, 874, at $300 and $400	432,000
Second-class offices, 1,841, at $300 and $350	1,001,150
Total		1,433,150
Clerks, automatic grades, 49,560, at $300		14,868,000
Special clerks, 7,879, at $300		2,363,700
Supervisors, 5,105		1,711,500
City letter carriers, 43,714, at $300		13,114,200
Watchmen, messengers, and laborers, 3,908, at $150		586,200
Printers, mechanics, and skilled laborers, 56, at $300		16,800
Auxiliary service—clerks, 65 cents per hour		892,500
Auxiliary service—carriers, 65 cents per hour		799,000
Clerk hire and assistant postmasters, third-class offices		3,997,360
Salaries, motor-vehicle service		731,135
Village delivery service, 1,174, at $200		234,800
Additional overtime on basis of 306 days		443,810
Additional pay for night work		5,600,296
Inspectors		179,200
Clerks at division headquarters		35,088
Railway Mail Service:
Salaries, including differential for night work		12,592,971
Travel allowances		1,910,021
Rural delivery service		15,000,000
Grand total		80,425,551

Upon the general subject of salary revision I am in favor of such equitable readjustment of salaries as shall properly meet the conditions existing in the service. However, the extent to which such proposed readjustment is carried in the bill referred to does not appear to the department as being justified by such conditions in the service and the evidence submitted to the joint subcommittee by the department with respect to salaries. As you are aware, there was submitted to the joint subcommittee a proposed revision, the cost of which would approximate $43,000,000. This was also accompanied at the request of the subcommittee by suggestions with respect to the raising of sufficient revenue to meet these expenses by increases in certain postage rates and fees for special services.

The revision noted would, in the view of the department, correct any existing inequalities and provide as much revenue as the department feels can be raised through increased postage rates without danger of impairment of the service. The department further renews its original suggestion that the whole matter of a revision of wages and salaries should be deferred until the result of the cost ascertainment, now in progress, is made known.

If, however, the bill to which your letter refers is to be considered, the department would make certain recommendations with respect to specific features which vary from existing laws and which should be changed in the interest of consistency.

The bill provides in lines 13 to 16, page 19, that for the purpose of promotion and compensation printers, mechanics, and skilled laborers and employees of the United States stamped-envelope agency at Dayton, Ohio, shall be deemed a part of the clerical force. As the service of such employees may properly be required in excess of the regular working hours or on Sundays or holidays the provision should be changed to read as follows:

> "Provided further, That printers, mechanics, and skilled laborers, and employees of the United States stamped-envelope agency at Dayton, Ohio, shall, for the purposes of employment, promotion, compensation, and the granting of compensatory time for Sunday and holiday service, be deemed a part of the clerical force."

The bill provides, in lines 12 to 15, page 34, that whenever an employee shall have been reduced in salary for any cause he may be restored to his former grade or advanced to an intermediate grade at the beginning of any quarter following his reduction, whereas lines 20 to 23 provide that whenever the promotion of an employee is withheld because of unsatisfactory service, such employee may be promoted at the beginning of the second quarter thereafter.

The effect of this would be to penalize the employee whose salary was withheld a loss of salary for a minimum of six months, whereas the employee who was reduced might be penalized a maximum of less than three months.

As ordinarily the offense calling for reduction is greater than that calling for the withholding of a promotion, it is felt that the provision for the withholding of a promotion for a period of six months is unjust and inequitable. It is therefore believed that lines 20 to 23 should be changed to read as follows:

> "Whenever the promotion of an employee herein provided for is withheld because of unsatisfactory service, such employee may be promoted at the beginning of any quarter thereafter."

The words "or of any subsequent quarter" should be striken out.

As promotions are made only at the beginning of the quarter, this would provide for the withholding of a promotion for a minimum of three months in each instance.

The bill provides, in lines 11 to 22, on page 27, for the appointment of substitutes to the grade to which they would have progressed had they been appointed to grade 1. The present law provides for promotion of substitutes to grade 2 after one year, at which grade they are appointed to regular positions, and then begin to progress to higher grades. The department believes that the present law is equitable and should be continued.

The bill provides, in line 23, on page 27, to line 2, on page 28, for promotion of substitutes each year, same as regular clerks. This apparently conflicts with the preceding paragraph in the bill.

The bill provides, in line 10, on page 28, to line 2, on page 29, for travel allowance after 8 hours from time of beginning initial run instead of after 10 hours. In the opinion of the department, travel allowance should begin 10 hours after starting initial run, as the present law provides.

The bill provides, in lines 17 to 19, on page 29, for continuing in present classes of all railway post-office lines, no authority being given to department to reclassify them as conditions change, nor is any provision made for classification of new lines. The department should have authority to reclassify lines as conditions change, otherwise an anomalous situation would soon arise whereby more important lines would be in class A and less important ones in class B.

The bill provides, in line 20, on page 29, to line 9, on page 30, for terminal railway post offices and transfer clerks' offices to be divided into classes A and B. They are now all in class A. Also provides for progressive promotions to grade 5 instead of grade 4 in class B, and eliminates nondistributer positions in both classes, which are now in grade 3. The elimination of nondistributer positions is not believed to be warranted. In our opinion, the pay of clerks occupying nondistributer positions should be less than the pay of those doing distributing work.

The bill provides, in lines 10 to 15, on page 30, for double the number of grade 6 places in superintendents' and chief clerks' offices. The increase of grade 6 places in superintendents' and chief clerks' offices is not favored. The present law provides for a grade 6 clerk in the more important positions, and the number of such important positions is now provided for.

The bill provides, in lines 10 to 13, on page 31, for crediting clerks with full time for delay to trains equal to the period of time between the scheduled arrival and actual arrival of the train at destination of run. This would be undesirable legislation, as a large increase in payment for salaries would result, and that increase in pay would be for time in which no work was performed by the clerks.

Very sincerely yours,

HARRY S. NEW,
Postmaster General.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for half a minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I was out of the Chamber this morning when the House met, attending the sessions of the Select Committee on the Shipping Board, of which I am a member. Therefore, I did not hear the colloquy that took place in the House in respect to the proceedings of last night. I want to say that during yesterday forenoon, as well as yesterday afternoon, I was in attendance upon the Select Committee on the Shipping Board, except that I attended the House session from 12 o'clock until 2 o'clock. I remained at my office until about 7 o'clock last evening, after the House adjourned, and I understood that there would be nothing last night except general debate and that no votes would be had. After leaving the House I was unable to return to the House until after supper—something after 9 o'clock last evening. I came into the lobby with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER], as was stated in the RECORD this morning. I want the RECORD to show that I was here and heard the general debate and was present when the House adjourned.

CAPE COD CANAL

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consume the other half minute not consumed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I recently visited the Cape Cod Canal and became thoroughly convinced that the Government ought to own and operate it. I asked the superintendent to write me a letter showing how life has been saved by its operation, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by incorporating that letter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, being called to my home city of Atlanta on an important engagement of one year's standing, I was prevented from taking part in the debate on the Cape Cod Canal, and I am therefore taking advantage of the leave granted me to print in the RECORD a remarkable letter from the present manager of the canal. This letter was written at my request through the good offices of Mr. Frank J. Batcheller, one of the leading citizens of New England and one of the most unselfishly patriotic men I have ever known.

I am delighted to learn that the House acted favorably on this measure, and I am sending this information for the Senate, where action is pending.

Before giving this stirring letter from Mr. H. L. Colbeth, "a son of the sea" and a high-class Christian gentleman, I wish to say that while the great consideration of humanity and governmental economy of this matter appealed to me, from all I had heard of the dangers of the Cape Cod shore before I ever saw the situation, my visit and personal inspection by a trip through the canal has made me a thorough and enthusiastic convert on the basis of that axiom in the field of both religion and philosophy that "seeing is believing."

I frankly feel that no Member of Congress could vote against the proposition to have the Government take over and maintain this canal if he could visit the spot, as I have done, and see the great need for himself.

Certainly, if it is right to maintain lighthouses and the Coast Guard to save human lives, then surely every law of humanity, of human and divine economy, should have caused this Government to dig and take charge of the Cape Cod Canal a full century ago.

If this had been done hundreds of lives and millions of dollars in property would have been saved.

We appropriate millions of dollars every year to prevent death and alleviate suffering; we appropriate millions to prevent blight on plant and animal life; we are in the act now of appropriating millions for the commercial development of Muscle Shoals. I believe in all these wise investments, but if they are governmentally considerate and sound, surely an investment like this speaks forth the spirit of humanitarian America. Every lighthouse on the shore beams a welcome of sanity and safety to strangers and our own returning citizens; but in this Cape Cod enterprise is found not only every consideration of humanity but the soundest sort of commercial economy. I urge the support of this measure upon the honored Senators who have not been on the scene, for the Cape Cod Canal governmentally perfected and maintained will be a great national asset. Let us give humanity the benefit of the doubt.

A REMARKABLE, CONVINCING LETTER

CAPE COD CANAL,
Buzzards Bay, Mass., April 14, 1924.

Hon. WILLIAM D. UPSHAW,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. UPSHAW: At the request of our mutual friend, Mr. Batcheller, of Boston and Duxbury, I shall attempt to briefly bring to your attention in a more or less personal way the dangers attending navigation on the so-called outside route around Cape Cod and through the Nantucket and Vineyard Sounds as compared with the shorter and safer route via the Cape Cod Canal.

My personal experience on the waters above mentioned covers a period of 25 years of active service in all capacities from a sailor before the mast on the smaller sailing vessels to command of the largest, fastest, and most valuable steamships engaged in coastwise service; and, in addition to the above, my father, my father's and mother's brothers, and my two grandfathers were all shipmasters, making frequent voyages along the New England coast, and among my earliest recollections are the stories of storm, fog, shipwreck, and loss of life on that part of the coast known as "The Graveyard of the Atlantic," between Block Island, R. I., and the northeast extremity of Cape Cod, Mass. In the little town of Machiasport, on the coast of Maine, where I was born and reared, there have been many occasions when the community has mourned the loss of several of its citizens, and sometimes two, three, and four men of one family have been lost in one storm; and, while these mariners sailed all over the world, casualties were more frequent in the vicinity of Cape Cod and Nantucket than elsewhere, and great relief was experienced when ships were reported as having passed these dangerous points in safety.

I was 4 years of age when I made my first voyage around Cape Cod with my father in a sailing schooner which he commanded, he being then engaged in the trade of carrying building material, lumber, stone, and lime from Maine and provincial ports to New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and the West Indies, and on the return voyage from New York and Philadelphia cargoes were almost invariably coal, as is the custom to-day, although a large proportion of the coal is moved in barges under motive power furnished by an attending tug. On my first voyage as a seaman, when about 14 years of age, I sailed from my home town to New York and returned to Portland, Me., on a three-masted sailing schooner carrying about 500 tons of cargo.

The outward voyage was without event, other than considerable delay caused by foggy weather and head winds, but on the return trip, deeply loaded with a cargo of coal in the early winter, we experienced severe weather and considerable delay. We lay at anchor in Vineyard Haven, Marthas Vineyard, in a severe easterly gale, during which one vessel broke from her mooring and was driven on the shore, Vineyard Haven being an open and exposed harbor in northeast gales, as a glance at the map will show. Leaving Vineyard Haven after the weather had cleared and the wind had come out from the westward, we proceeded as far as Highland Light, Cape Cod, a distance of about 60 miles, when the wind veered to the northwest and increased to a gale which made it necessary to reduce canvas, tack ship, and sail back for a distance of about 20 miles to an anchorage under the shore of Cape Cod near the town of Chatham. This anchorage, while comparatively safe in westerly gales, was absolutely unsafe when the wind changed toward the northeast. It was then necessary to watch the weather very carefully, and at the slightest indication of the gale blowing itself out to get under way and either return to Vineyard Haven or make another attempt to get around Cape Cod.

Our captain chose the latter alternative, and we stood out by Cape Cod into a rough sea with the wind blowing half a gale from the westward, close-hauled on the port tack with all light sails carefully furled, with double gaskets, and I will never forget the difficulty attending the stowing of the topsails. I am quite sure my grip on the shrouds was sufficient to leave my finger marks on the topmast rigging, some 85 feet above the deck. The distance from Cape Cod to Portland, Me., is about 100 miles, and when we had covered 70 miles the wind suddenly changed to northeast, blowing with almost hurricane force, which made it impossible to do other than run before the wind under reefed canvas, and we squared away, in nautical parlance, for the harbor of Salem, Mass., which was about 45 miles away. Rough seas broke over the vessel's deck continually, and while it was necessary to man the hand pumps frequently we had to watch out very carefully and jump into the rigging when the big combers came over the rail, otherwise nothing could have prevented our being washed overboard. After two or three more delays we reached Portland Harbor in safety and delivered our cargo of anthracite coal.

There is no harbor of refuge between Vineyard Haven, Mass., and Provincetown, a distance of about 70 miles; and as Provincetown is not much frequented by sailing vessels, it is necessary to make a circuitous course at least halfway around the compass; therefore for sailing vessels there is no feasible harbor between Vineyard Haven and Salem or Boston, a distance of approximately 125 miles, or 24 hours' sailing for a small schooner even under favorable circumstances of wind and weather, and the weather on the New England coast during the winter months is not often continuously fair with no change of wind during a period of this length. More often the sailing vessel reaches a point halfway between Vineyard Haven and Cape Cod, when the weather either becomes thick with fog, rain, or snow and southerly gales or suddenly veers to the north and northeast, which compels a return to Vineyard Haven.

I have often heard my father relate an experience of steering a vessel which he commanded from a point off Cape Cod to Boston Harbor, a distance of 60 miles, in a blinding snowstorm with a southeast gale, he never leaving the helm for 10 hours, and his ship being one of three out of a fleet of 20 that reached port with safety, while the others were totally or partially wrecked or delayed for a period of several days. The above is far from an unusual instance; and, without tiring you with too much detail, I can assure you that the Cape Cod Canal is nothing short of a godsend to the smaller coasting vessels and to the seamen and their families, and I might add that most of these men are of the old, hardy New England stock and who are now carrying on the same business established several generations ago by their ancestors—that is, the building, loading, and operating of sailing ships—and if only one life a year could be saved by the Cape Cod Canal—which, by the way, is a ridiculously low estimate—who shall say that the price of $11,500,000 is too much for the Government to pay for a waterway that will save the life of one of our fellow men, and, more especially, if it should be the life of a son, brother, or intimate acquaintance?

DANGEROUS FOGS AND TORTUOUS CHANNELS

Greater even than the dangers incident to storms, tortuous channels, submerged shoals, and swift cross currents is the menace of fog on this section of the New England coast, and Government records show there is 150 per cent in excess of that experienced at the Cape Cod Canal. During thick or foggy weather vessels are navigated almost wholly by sound signals, and if no wind prevails these signals are reasonably safe guides; but on Nantucket Shoals the acoustic conditions are such that sound signals do not carry for more than short distances and are sometimes deflected by varying density of the air, so that the direction from which they originate is extremely difficult to locate; and while in some localities fog will frequently clear when a strong breeze obtains, it is noticeable in the vicinity of Cape Cod and Nantucket that thick fog is prevalent even with a strong gale blowing, which obviously renders sound signals of minimum value.

PASSENGER SHIPS SUNK BY COLLISION

It was my experience on one occasion when chief officer of a steamship to collide with and sink a large passenger steamer, and after rescuing the passengers and crew it was necessary in consideration of the damaged condition of our own vessel to run her ashore on Cape Cod at a point near the Nausett Light station, where the passengers and all except a skeleton crew were taken ashore by the life-savers. Both steamers were equipped with large steam fog whistles which were frequently sounded, but were inaudible for any appreciable distance, which was the primary cause of the collision. On another occasion while groping our way through the tortuous channels over Nantucket Shoals we collided with a steamer which had not heard our signals, fortunately receiving only minor damage, and about two hours later, at a point 20 miles eastward, we ran into a sailing schooner which was quite seriously damaged and eventually towed into port by our ship. The above instances are typical of what is constantly recurring; and within the last few days one of the Savannah & Boston Line steamers carrying passengers and cargo was in collision with a large collier at a point near the Cross Rip Lightship, the accident having resulted in no loss of life, although both steamers were considerably damaged. On March 12, 1924, just one month ago, the six-masted schooner Wyoming, one of the largest sailing vessels in the world, was totally wrecked about 4 miles off Chatham, Cape Cod, with the loss of every man on board. This vessel carried over 5,000 tons of coal and loaded to a depth of 29 feet, and was obviously beyond the present capacity of the Cape Cod Canal, but undoubtedly this vessel would have availed herself of this shorter and safer route had such course been practical. It is superfluous to state that total loss of the vessel and crew would not have occurred had this shorter route been available. There have been numerous instances during the past winter, which has been far from severe, speaking comparatively, when vessels have attempted to use the outside route and been forced to change their course and retrace considerable distance to one of the entrances of the canal. This is especially true of vessels bound north.

FREEZE TO DEATH WAITING FOR RESCUE

It was my experience to witness an accident to a tow of coal barges owned by the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad, which stranded on the dreaded shoals known as Peaked Hill Bar off the north point of Cape Cod, when several lives were lost, although the crew of a Coast Guard station were at the scene and did everything humanly possible to assist the distressed vessels. I was in command of a steamer at the time and passed this point a few hours after the heart-rending accident occurred, where human lives were lost within sight of and, in fact, within a short half mile of the land. It was also my experience to see a large five-masted ship totally destroyed by fire near the same point, and while no lives were lost it was a sad sight to see a fine, large ship consumed in flames which lighted the horizon for miles. One menace which can not be overlooked is that men are in danger of freezing to death while awaiting rescue on stranded vessels anywhere on the New England coast, which danger does not obtain in parallel cases farther south where the temperature is much higher. Thirteen Life Saving or Coast Guard stations are maintained by the Government along the seaward side of Cape Cod.

These stations are only 3 miles apart, ample testimony of the danger to life and property. A Coast Guard cutter is maintained at Woods Hole with a regular cruising distance of only 40 miles, although the vessel frequently makes longer trips to aid and assist vessels in distress. The cruising radius of Coast Guard vessels stationed farther south is sometimes as great as 600 miles, and a personal letter recently received from Commander P. W. Lauriat, in command of the Coast Guard cutter Yamacraw, stationed at Charleston, S. C., states that with a much larger cruising radius his present position is a sinecure in comparison with his past experience at the Woods Hole station, in command of the U. S. S. Acushnet.

My acquaintance with the waters of the New England coast and my intimate knowledge of the dangers of Cape Cod and Nantucket Shoals are such that I could continue almost indefinitely relating accidents and instances similar to the foregoing, but knowing my communication is already of unpardonable length, I commit the above to you for such consideration as it may receive.

With the assurance that no statements are overdrawn, but to quote from one of the songs in the old Baptist hymnal, "The half has never yet been told." With kindest personal regards, I have the honor to remain,

Yours very truly, H. L. COLBETH,
General Manager.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD the remarks made on the floor of the House to-day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD the remarks that I made this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.), in accordance with the order heretofore made, the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, May 22, 1924, at 11 o'clock a. m.

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] and the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] are engaged in a hearing before a special investigating committee of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2431) conveying to the State of Delaware certain land in the county of Sussex, in that State.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution of the Senate, each with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

S. 2450. An act to amend section 2 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act, approved July 31, 1894; and

S. J. Res. 105. Joint resolution authorizing the President to detail an officer of the Corps of Engineers as Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 4820. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service," approved June 10, 1922; and

H. R. 7269. An act to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to transfer certain materials, machinery, and equipment to the Department of Agriculture.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. CAPPER presented the petitions of sundry members of the congregation of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of Miltonvale, and of sundry citizens of Hutchinson, both in the State of Kansas, praying an amendment to the Constitution relative to the regulation of child labor, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PEPPER presented the memorial of the Philadelphia (Pa.) Board of Trade, remonstrating against the passage of the Senate bill (S. 2327) to amend section 4 of the interstate commerce act, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented the petition of the Philadelphia (Pa.) Board of Trade, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. 8887) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the consolidation of national banking associations," approved November 7, 1918; to amend section 5136 as amended, section 5137, section 5138 as amended, section 5142, section 5150, section 5155, section 5190, section 5200 as amended, section 5202 as amended, section 5208 as amended, section 5211 as amended, of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and to amend section 9, section 13, section 22, and section 24 of the Federal reserve act, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 2842) to provide for compulsory school attendance, for the taking of a school census in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 583) thereon.

Mr. BALL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 1179. An act to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to close certain streets, roads, or highways in the District of Columbia rendered useless or unnecessary by reason of the opening, extension, widening, or straightening, in accordance with the highway plan of other streets, roads, or highways in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 584);

S. 1340. An act to make the necessary survey and to prepare a plan of a proposed parkway to connect the old Civil War forts in the District of Columbia (Rept. No. 585); and

S. 1935. An act to amend, revise, and reenact subchapter 3, sections 546 and 547 of the Code of Law of the District of Columbia relating to the recording of deeds of chattels (Rept. No. 586).

Mr. BALL also, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

S. 1934. An act to amend, revise, and reenact section 549 of subchapter 4 of the Code of the District of Columbia relating to the appointment of deputy recorder of deeds and fixing the compensation therefor (Rept. No. 587); and

S. 2694. An act to enable the trustees of Howard University to develop an athletic field and gymnasium project, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 588).

Mr. BALL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 3053) to quiet title to original lot 4, square 116, in the city of Washington, D. C., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 590) thereon.

Mr. COPELAND, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 3280) to regulate in the District of Columbia the traffic in, sale, and use of milk bottles, cans, crates, and other containers of milk and cream, to prevent fraud and deception, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 589) thereon.

Mr. LADD, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 3292) granting the consent of Congress to the city of Hannibal, Mo., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Hannibal, Marion County, Mo., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 591) thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mr. BALL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on the 20th instant that committee presented to the President of the United States enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 105. An act for the relief of Arthur Frost;

S. 129. An act for the relief of the William D. Mullen Co.;

S. 130. An act for the relief of George T. Tobin & Son;

S. 210. An act of the relief of Peter C. Keegan and others;

S. 589. An act for the relief of James Moran;

S. 1572. An act for the relief of the New Jersey Shipbuilding & Dredging Co., of Bayonne, N. J.; and

S. 1698. An act granting permission to Commander Dorr F. Tozier, United States Coast Guard, retired, to accept a gift from the King of Great Britain.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BALL:

A bill (S. 3359) to establish a bureau for children's aid in and for the District of Columbia, to determine its functions, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. BURSUM:

A bill (S. 3360) granting a pension to John F. Walker; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FERRIS:

A bill (S. 3361) to correct the military record of Charles T. Hollis, deceased; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WARREN:

A bill (S. 3362) permitting Leo Sheep Co., of Rawlins, Wyo., to convey certain lands to the United States and to select other lands in lieu thereof, in Carbon County, Wyo., for the improvement of the Medicine Bow National Forest; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. REED of Pennsylvania:

A bill (S. 3363) to fix the salaries of certain judges of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 3364) granting an increase of pension to Harriet F. Leonard; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FERNALD:

A bill (S. 3365) granting an increase of pension to Inzetta A. Small; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McKINLEY:

A bill (S. 3366) to provide for an examination and survey of the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers at or near Cairo, Ill., for the purpose of determining the practicability and estimating the cost of a tri-State highway bridge over said rivers; to the Committee on Commerce.

MILITARY TELEGRAPH CORPS OF THE ARMY

On motion of Mr. REED of Pennsylvania the bill (S. 1535) granting relief to persons who served in the Military Telegraph Corps of the Army during the Civil War was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT TO GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. ODDIE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $800,000 from the reclamation fund, special fund, for continued investigations, commencement of construction, and incidental operations of the Spanish Springs irrigation project, Nevada, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES of Washington submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,500,000 for continued investigations and commencement of construction of the Kittitas unit of the Yakima irrigation project, Washington, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation and ordered to be printed.

FORT GREEN, NEWPORT, R. I.

Mr. COLT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 9124) authorizing the sale of real property no longer required for military purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

On motion of Mr. BURSUM, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1943) for the relief of Isaac J. Reese, and it was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were each read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

H. R. 4820. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service," approved June 10, 1922; and

H. R. 7269. An act to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to transfer certain materials, machinery, and equipment to the Department of Agriculture.

POSTMASTERS AND POSTAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. WALSH of Montana obtained the floor.

Mr. EDGE. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. In view of the fact that the unfinished business before the Senate is the postmasters and postal employees' compensation bill, I ask unanimous consent that a short editorial from the Pittsburgh Press be read at the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection the Clerk will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

[From the Pittsburgh Press, Friday evening, May 9, 1924]

POSTAL EMPLOYEES' BILL IN DANGER

It will be a surprise, probably, to most readers to learn there is a real threat against the passage of the bill to increase the pay of postal employees.

Such a situation hardly could have been anticipated in view of the cordial public support given the bill.

It is doubtful if there is a more underpaid class of employees in the country, in view of the present costs of living, than the postal employees.

There was no hesitancy on the part of the people in demanding the passage of the bill when they learned it would add only $300 a year to the pay of the various classes of mail carriers and postal employees, bringing their salaries to $1,700, $1,800, $1,900, and $2,100.

The salary bill is in such a position on the calendar of both the Senate and the House that it can not be reached before the adjournment of Congress unless some heroic measure is adopted.

The rescuer is a resolution presented in both Houses to advance the bill on the calendar so that it can come to a vote before the adjournment.

This resolution should be passed without hesitancy by both branches of Congress.

No toleration should be given to the evident plan of opponents of the bill to let it die in the midst of the jam immediately prefacing adjournment, in order that they may accomplish their object without going on record in a vote.

Just why there is opposition to the bill has not been made clear to the public.

Its passage will only be a belated acknowledgment of the richest Government in the world that it has been paying salaries to an army of faithful employees, of which it should have been ashamed.

PERMANENT INTERNATIONAL COURT

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Montana yield to me?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, President Harding, in a message to Congress, recommended the adherence of the United States to the protocol of December 16, 1920, accepting the statute providing for the Permanent Court of International Justice. In his message he recommended that such adherence by the United States should not be taken to involve any legal relation on the part of our Government to the League of Nations or the assumption of any obligations under the covenant of the League of Nations. He also recommended that the United States should accept the protocol, with a reservation that it be permitted to participate through representatives designated for the purpose and upon an equality with the other States, members, respectively, of the council and assembly of the league, in all proceedings for the election of judges or deputy judges of the Permanent Court of International Justice or for the filling of vacancies; also that no amendment to the statute providing for the court should be made without the consent of the United States.

Mr. President, I have believed that the United States should take the lead in any movement looking to the establishment of a Permanent International Court to settle disputes and controversies arising between nations. Indeed, I believed that we should have entered the League of Nations and taken part in the organization of the court and other tribunals for which the league makes provision. The recommendation of President Harding did not go as far as I should have liked but I believed it to be a forward movement, and therefore ga it cordial approval. Accordingly, I offered a resolution immediately after President Harding's message, in which he dealt with this matter, and before the adjournment of Congress secured a vote upon its adoption. I regret that the Republican Senate repudiated their President and refused assent to his recommendation. There was a rather full attendance of the Senate when the vote was taken, and every Republican Senator present voted against my resolution. And may I add that every Democratic Senator present, except three, voted for it.

President Coolidge followed in the footsteps of President Harding and recommended the adhesion of this Republic to the protocol to which I have referred. On the 10th day of December, 1923, when Congress convened, I offered a resolution containing the same provisions as found in the resolution offered in the preceding Congress, and which, as I have stated, was defeated. I have spoken upon a number of occasions to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations [Mr. LODGE], who is the majority leader in the Senate. I have asked him as well as other Senators for a favorable report by that committee upon my resolution. No action, as I am advised, has been taken, and it would appear as though the Republicans in this Congress proposed to rebuke President Coolidge, as they rebuked President Harding at the last Congress.

A few days ago the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] presented a resolution dealing with the subject of a world court and had it referred to the committee of which he is chairman. His resolution is unacceptable to those who believe in a vital and living international court, one which measures up to the demands of those who believe that the world should be brought into closer relation and should be bound by stronger bonds of fellowship and good will. It looks to me as though his resolution was offered for the purpose of torpedoing the resolution which I offered or any other rational and practical scheme which might be suggested to bring about the establishment of an effective world court.

Mr. President, when I offered the resolution which I have referred to following the message of President Harding I suggested that perhaps the statute should be amended as a condition precedent to our entrance into the World Court. I was advised, however, that the matter had been fully considered and that it was the view of the able Secretary of State that the reservations suggested in the President's message would sufficiently meet the situation. Further reflection has convinced me that it might be wise to provide that the adhesion of the United States to the protocol of December 16, 1920, shall be conditioned upon the amendment of the statute creating the Permanent Court of International Justice in such a manner as to cover the points contained in the reservations set forth in the resolution which I have offered in two Congresses. Accordingly I have prepared a resolution which I think meets the situation in a satisfactory manner. I shall not take the time of the Senate to read it, but ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The resolution (S. Res. 233) was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

The President of the United States having on the 24th day of February, 1923, transmitted to the Senate a protocol, dated December 16, 1920, of adhesion to the statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice adopted by the assembly of the League of Nations on December 13, 1920, and adjoined to the said protocol; and the President having asked the advice and consent of the Senate to the adhesion by the United States to the said protocol accepting the adjoined statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice, excepting the optional clause for compulsory jurisdiction: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate, two-thirds of Senators concurring, advise and consent to the adhesion by the United States to the protocol of December 16, 1920, accepting the adjoined statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice, excepting therefrom the optional clause for compulsory jurisdiction; such adhesion to be upon the condition that the statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice be first amended to empower the United States to participate through representatives designated for the purpose and upon an equality with the other States, members respectively of the Council and Assembly of the League of Nations, in any and all proceedings for the election of members of the Permanent Court of International Justice, or for the filling of vacancies, and to provide that the statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice shall not be amended without the consent of the United States.

The Senate declares that the adhesion by the United States to said protocol and the adjoined statute does not constitute an assumption by the United States of any of the obligations of Part I of the treaty of Versailles.

SENATOR BURTON K. WHEELER

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, it would be a work of supererogation on the part of any Senator to attempt to supplement the splendid presentation of the testimony taken on the hearings conducted by the special committee inquiring into charges against my colleague, Senator WHEELER, made by the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] on yesterday. Were it not for the extraordinary report submitted by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], and the even more extraordinary speech made by him in support of it, I should have nothing to say about this matter.

If I understand the Senator from South Dakota aright, he takes the position that the Senate of the United States has no power to inquire into the facts charged in the indictment against the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] or to make any report to the Senate as to whether or not the facts charged are true; and further, that, if the Senate of the United States has any such power, it is against public policy that it should exercise that power. The contention is made that if we undertake to pass upon the facts so charged in the indictment prior to a determination of that question by a petit jury, we are invading the province of the judiciary.

So much has been said recently, Mr. President, about usurpation upon the part of the Senate of the United States that I feel impelled to meet the issue thus raised by the Senator from South Dakota, who, I regret to say, is absent from the Chamber this morning. Some time ago the power of the Senate of the United States respectfully to represent to the President that a high official of the Government was not, in its judgment, a fit person for the place was questioned, and the Senate was charged with usurpation in that matter. Later on the power of the Senate to call witnesses before it or before one of its committees to give information, upon which the Senate might properly discharge its legislative functions, was questioned. The Senate was charged with invading the functions of the judiciary; and the courts are called upon now to pass upon the right of the Senate in that regard, a right which it has exercised without serious question for something over 130 years, namely, since it came into existence.

Now it is charged that the Senate has no power to inquire into the truth of charges of criminality against one of its own Members in order to determine whether or not he is a fit person to sit here; at least, until the question of his criminality is determined by a petit jury.

Pause for one moment, fellow Senators, to reflect upon what that means. A Senator is charged publicly, through the press or otherwise, or through an indictment against him in the courts of some State with some grave offense, possibly treason. The evidence is such as is generally accepted by the community; practically every Member of the Senate believes that he is guilty; indeed, he may even, as has occurred in the history of the United States Senate, proclaim his want of fidelity to the Government of the United States; and yet we must tolerate his presence here among us; we must permit him to vote upon matters that may affect the very existence of the Nation; we can not get rid of him; we can not expel him; we can not inquire into the facts of his guilt at all until, forsooth, by the slow process of criminal procedure, with all of the incidents of delay that ordinarily attend proceedings of that character; his presence must be tolerated here until a jury shall determine whether or not he is guilty. The proposition, Mr. President, is too absurd for serious contemplation; and I propose to demonstrate its falsity and its shallowness so clearly that no Senator shall be able to take refuge, as I do not imagine any Senator will undertake to take refuge, behind the idea advanced—I might say the pretext proposed—by the Senator from South Dakota, to escape a straight vote upon the question of the exoneration of my colleague from these charges.

The Senator from South Dakota told us on yesterday that this procedure was without precedent. Lest I should misstate what he said, I have before me his language. He said:

Mr. President, I say that this case is absolutely without parallel in our legislative history; there is nothing like it, and it is hoped there will be nothing like it in the future.

I shall presently recur to this reference to history.

The committee proceeded under the following resolution adopted on April 9, 1924:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of five Members of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore to investigate and report to the Senate the facts in relation to the charges made in a certain indictment returned against Senator BURTON K. WHEELER in the United States District Court for the State of Montana.

In the report of the Senator from South Dakota is the following statement:

The language of the resolution is broad enough to include an inquiry not only as to whether there was probable cause upon which the Federal grand jury for the district of Montana might properly return an indictment against Senator WHEELER but also whether Senator WHEELER was in fact guilty of the charges laid in the indictment.

Bear in mind that the Senator from South Dakota himself declared that the language of the resolution is broad enough to empower the committee to inquire into these facts, but he asserts that there is no constitutional warrant for doing so.

Mr. President, if the committee had reported as they were directed to report, should the facts justify them in so doing, that the Senator from the State of Montana is guilty of the acts charged in the indictment, what would follow? A resolution of expulsion as a matter of course. Before the Senate can expel a Member it must make investigation as to whether he is guilty of conduct warranting his expulsion. The Senator from South Dakota read from the Constitution, as follows:

Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its Members for disorderly behavior—

And he commented upon the fact that the charges were not of disorderly behavior, which in all probability contemplated disorderly behavior within the Senate. Quite true; but the Constitution continues:

and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a Member.

The resolution had particular reference as a matter of course to the expulsion of Senator WHEELER from the Senate, provided the facts charged in the indictment were established. The offense alleged is of very grave character, it not only subjects the official guilty of it to fine and imprisonment but the statute itself provides that the culprit shall be disqualified from ever holding any office of honor or profit under the United States; and, although a judgment of guilty would not include expulsion from the Senate, it would justify and, indeed, all but require the Senate to expel. Although the Constitution does not specify the grounds upon which a Senator may be expelled it has never been controverted that if it is established that he is guilty of an offense defined in a statute, particularly one involving moral turpitude, he should be expelled. So the constitutional warrant for inquiring into the matter needs no exposition from anyone, and I am astonished that any Senator should rise in his place and question the power of the Senate to make an inquiry of that character.

Mr. President, when charges of this character are made, such as those in the indictment against Senator WHEELER, the Senate has a duty to perform, a duty which it owes to itself, and a duty which it owes to the Member whose conduct has been challenged. It must perform that duty; it can not escape it. If the Member charged is guilty, he ought to be expelled; if he is innocent, it ought to be so declared in order that he might not be embarrassed in the further discharge of his duties.

The Senator from South Dakota generously suggests that he is quite willing that Senator WHEELER should remain in his seat until the matter shall be determined by a petit jury, but any Senator thus accused is under a cloud meanwhile; his services here are affected to a very considerable extent; the influence that he ought to exercise and would otherwise exercise in this body and outside of this body, under such circumstances, would be seriously affected.

But I say, Mr. President, that the Senate of the United States has a duty to perform no matter what may happen before a petit jury. The United States district attorney for the district of Montana conceives that he has a duty to perform, and he has to proceed with the prosecution of the person charged. The Senate has its duty to perform, to see that a Member tainted, as it is charged my colleague is tainted in this matter, shall not longer remain in the Senate.

It has frequently happened in the history of the Senate that a Senator charged with an offense has preferred to ask the Senate to defer an investigation until the matter shall be tried by a petit jury, where he believes, with all the rules applicable to the trial of a criminal offense, he would be better situated in order to establish his innocence, or, at least, meet the accusation of guilt, than he would be before a committee of the Senate. That, however, is a mere matter of comity between this Senate and the judiciary department.

Neither one can claim precedence over the other. But, Mr. President, this question is not a new one. Quite contrary to the statement made on yesterday by the Senator from South Dakota, the very idea he advances was repudiated by the Senate at an early period in its history in a case in every particular identical with the case under consideration so far as the principle to which the Senator appeals is concerned. The whole matter was discussed and determined, and the views expressed by the Senator from South Dakota were entirely repudiated, and the Senate proceeded to consider the expulsion of a Member while an indictment was pending against him. The proceedings grew out of the celebrated Burr conspiracy.

It will be borne in mind that Aaron Burr, after he retired from the office of Vice President of the United States, was charged with having engaged in a conspiracy to set up an empire in the West, and it is generally believed that he was so engaged. One John Smith, a Senator from the State of Ohio, was charged with complicity with Burr in that conspiracy, and it will be borne in mind that Smith was indicted for participation in that conspiracy, and, being so indicted, a resolution was introduced to expel him from the Senate.

I read from the second volume of Hinds' Precedents, at page 816, as follows:

On November 27, 1807, the Senate, after debate, adopted after amendment the following resolution proposed by Mr. Samuel Maclay, of Pennsylvania.

"Resolved, That a committee be appointed to inquire whether it be compatible with the honor and privileges of this House that John Smith, a Senator from the State of Ohio, against whom bills of indictment were found at the circuit court of Virginia, held at Richmond in August last, for treason and misdemeanor, should be permitted any longer to have a seat therein; and that the committee do inquire into all the facts regarding the conduct of Mr. Smith as an alleged associate of Aaron Burr, and report the same to the Senate."

A special committee was appointed to inquire into that matter, the indictment thus pending against Smith. That committee was constituted of the following Members:

John Quincy Adams, of Massachusetts; Samuel Maclay, of Pennsylvania; Jesse Franklin, of North Carolina; Samuel Smith, of Maryland; John Pope and Buckner Thurston, of Kentucky; and Joseph Anderson, of Tennessee.

On December 31 Mr. Adams announced that the committee was ready to report, and made the following motion, which was read and agreed to:

Ordered, That John Smith, a Senator from the State of Ohio, be notified by the Vice President to attend in his place.

The Vice President accordingly notified Mr. Smith in the words following:

JOHN SMITH, Esq.,
Senator from the State of Ohio.

SIR: You are hereby required to attend the Senate in your place without delay.

By order of the Senate. GEO. CLINTON,
President of the Senate.

And Mr. Smith attended.

The committee then submitted its report.

After reciting the facts, the committee of which Mr. John Quincy Adams, afterwards President of the United States, was the chairman, attending to contentions identical with those now advanced by the Senator from South Dakota, among other things in its report said as follows:

The committee have never conceived themselves invested with authority to try Mr. Smith. Their charge was to report an opinion relating to the honor and privileges of the Senate and the facts relating to the conduct of Mr. Smith. Their opinion, indeed, can not be expressed in relation to the privilege of the Senate without relating, at the same time, to Mr. Smith's right of holding a seat in this body; but, in that respect, the authority of the committee extends only to proposal, and not to decision.

I omit, then, and continue:

In examining the question whether these forms of judicial proceedings, or the rules of judicial evidence, ought to be applied to the exercise of that censorial authority which the Senate of the United States possesses over the conduct of its Members, let us assume, as the test of their application, either the dictates of unfettered reason, the letter and spirit of the Constitution, or precedents, domestic or foreign, and your committee believe that the result will be the same; that the power of expelling a Member must, in its nature, be discretionary, and in its exercise always more summary than the tardy process of judicial tribunals.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I just wish to ask the Senator for the reference; that is all.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The second volume of Hinds.

Mr. STERLING. From what page is the Senator reading?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Page 816.

Mr. STERLING. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The committee continues:

The power of expelling a member for misconduct results, on the principles of common sense, from the interest of the Nation, that the high trust of legislation should be invested in pure hands. When the trust is elective, it is not to be presumed that the constituent body will commit the deposit to the keeping of worthless characters. But when a man, whom his fellow-citizens have honored with their confidence, on the pledge of a spotless reputation, has degraded himself by the commission of infamous crimes, which become suddenly and unexpectedly revealed to the world, defective indeed would be that institution which should be impotent to discard from its bosom the contagion of such a member; which should have no remedy of amputation to apply until the poison had reached the heart.

The question upon the trial of a criminal cause before the courts of common law is not between guilt and innocence, but between guilt and the possibility of innocence. If a doubt can possibly be raised, either by the ingenuity of the party or of his counsel or by the operation of general rules in their unforeseen application to particular cases, that doubt must be decisive for acquittal, and the verdict of not guilty, perhaps, in nine cases out of ten, means no more than that the guilt of the party has not been demonstrated in the precise, specific, and narrow forms prescribed by law. The humane spirit of the laws multiplies the barriers for the protection of innocence and freely admits that these barriers may be abused for the shelter of guilt. It avows a strong partiality favorable to the person upon trial and acknowledges the preference that ten guilty should escape rather than that one innocent should suffer. The interest of the public that a particular crime should be punished is but one to ten compared with the interest of the party that innocence should be spared. Acquittal only restores the party to the common rights of every other citizen; it restores him to no public trust; it invests him with no public confidence; it substitutes the sentence of mercy for the doom of justice; and in the eyes of impartial reason, in the great majority of cases, must be considered rather as a pardon than a justification.

But when a member of a legislative body lies under the imputation of aggravated offenses and the determination upon his cause can operate only to remove him from a station of extensive powers and important trust, this disproportion between the interest of the public and the interest of the individual disappears; if any disproportion exist it is of an opposite kind. It is not better that ten traitors should be Members of this Senate than that one innocent man should suffer expulsion. In either case, no doubt, the evil would be great. But in the former it would strike at the vitals of the Nation; in the latter it might, though deeply to be lamented, only be the calamity of an individual.

By the letter of the Constitution the power of expelling a Member is given to each of the two Houses of Congress without any limitation other than that which requires a concurrence of two-thirds of the votes to give it effect.

The spirit of the Constitution is perhaps in no respect more remarkable than in the solicitude which it has manifested to secure the purity of the legislature by that of the elements of its composition. A qualification of age is made necessary for the Members to insure the maturity of their judgment; a qualification of long citizenship to insure a community of interests and affections between them and their country; a qualification of residence to provide a sympathy between every Member and the portion of the Union from which he is delegated; and to guard, as far as regulation can guard, against every bias of personal interest and every hazard of interfering duties, it has made every Member of Congress ineligible to office which he contributed to create and every officer of the Union incapable of holding a seat in Congress. Yet in the midst of all this anxious providence of legislative virtue it has not authorized the constituent body to recall in any case its representative. It has not subjected him to removal by impeachment, and when the darling of the people's choice has become their deadliest foe can it enter the imagination of a reasonable man that the sanctuary of their legislation must remain polluted with his presence until a court of common law, with its pace of snail, can ascertain whether his crime was committed on the right or on the left bank of the river; whether a puncture of difference can be found between the words of the charge and the words of the proof; whether the witnesses of his guilt should or should not be heard by his jury; and whether he was punishable, because present at an overt act, or intangible to public justice, because he only contrived and prepared it? Is it conceivable that a traitor to that country which has loaded him with favors, guilty to the common understanding of all mankind, should be suffered to return unquestioned to that post of honor and confidence where in the zenith of his good fame he had been placed by the esteem of his countrymen, and in defiance of their wishes, in mockery of their fears, surrounded by the public indignation, but inaccessible to its bolt, pursue the purposes of treason in the heart of the national councils? Must the assembled rulers of the land listen with calmness and indifference session after session to the voice of notorious infamy, until the sluggard step of municipal justice can overtake his enormities? Must they tamely see the lives and fortune of millions, the safety of present and future ages, depending upon his vote, recorded with theirs, merely because the abused benignity of general maxims may have remitted to him the forefeiture of his life?

Such, in very supposable cases, would be the unavoidable consequences of a principle which should offer the crutches of judicial tribunals as an apology for crippling the congressional power of expulsion. Far different, in the opinion of your committee, is the spirit of our Constitution. They believe that the very purpose for which this power was given was to preserve the legislature from the first approaches of infection. That it was made discretionary, because it could not exist under the procrastination of general rules; that its process must be summary, because it would be rendered nugatory by delay.

The Senate of the United States was not deterred considering or from voting upon the motion to expel John Smith, a Senator from the State of Ohio, notwithstanding an indictment was pending against him.

Mr. President, how can we escape this reasoning? Why, if we are going to delay action in the Senate in every instance, if we have no power in the premises, as asserted by the Senator from South Dakota in his report here, until an accused Senator shall have been tried by a petit jury, as a matter of course if he appeals, we must wait until the determination of his appeal; and then if there should be found, perchance, some error in the introduction of evidence possibly of no very material character, or some error in the instructions of the court to the jury, or some other irregularity should appear, and a new trial should be ordered, we must allow the Senator to remain a Member of this body until the litigation is eventually determined, and his term possibly brought to an end by the lapse of time. As I said, the proposition is too absurd for serious consideration.

Comity ought to exist in this matter, and I do not undertake to say that under ordinary circumstances, where the offense charged against the Senator is not of a grave character, or the proof in regard to the matter is not entirely clear, and the Senator himself desires that he should not be prejudiced in his trial before the petit jury by any proceedings had in the Senate in anticipation of the trial, the Senate might very properly stay its hand until a determination by that tribunal; but whether it shall do so or shall not do so in the particular case is a matter which addresses itself to the good judgment of the Senate.

It is a fact that in the case of Burton, the Senator, my recollection is, chose to take his chances before a jury, which had to be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of his guilt before it could convict him, and so he asked no investigation by the Senate, which deferred action to await the result of the trial. I believe the same proceeding was observed in the case of Mitchell, of Oregon; and, as we were advised, that procedure has been observed in the case of Congressman LANGLEY in the House. But it is a matter for the Senate to determine as to whether it shall or shall not go on.

We all know the circumstances here. At the time this indictment was returned Senator WHEELER was engaged in prosecuting in a most vigorous and commendable way charges against the Department of Justice that it was teeming with fraud and corruption; and so well did he discharge that duty, whatever may be said concerning the character of the witnesses and the nature of the testimony that was adduced; so well did he discharge that duty that public opinion drove the Attorney General from his place, even before a report of the committee was filed, and the President of the United States himself called upon the Attorney General to send in his resignation. The country owes a debt of gratitude to my colleague for his excellent services in that connection.

Bear in mind that while he was engaged in that work the Department of Justice sent some one out to the State of Montana to get something on him for the perfectly obvious purpose of hampering and if possible destroying his work upon the committee of which he was a member. The direct evidence is to that effect and the circumstances attending the return of the indictment points unmistakably to that conclusion.

The Senator from South Dakota says in his report:

In other words the charge of a frame-up failed entirely of proof.

I do not know what view the Senator from South Dakota may take about this matter; but if he does not believe that the indictment against Senator WHEELER was returned for the express purpose of hamstringing him in the prosecution of his work he stands almost alone among the people of the United States.

Under those circumstances the Senate believed that it would be in the interest of the public to have an immediate inquiry; so that should the charges prove to be unfounded, as most Members believed they would be, Senator WHEELER might not be harassed and embarrassed in the prosecution of his work. The Senate chose rather to proceed than to await the determination of the trial jury, particularly as Senator WHEELER himself asked that the investigation go on, and the resolution was introduced by myself, as I stated at the time, at his request.

So much for the power.

Having in mind the views expressed by that great statesman who in later years was very appropriately called "the Old Man Eloquent," I want to call attention to the views expressed in this minority report. The Senator from South Dakota says:

The language of the resolution is broad enough to include an inquiry not only as to whether there was probable cause upon which the Federal grand jury for the district of Montana might properly return an indictment against Senator WHEELER but also whether Senator WHEELER was in fact guilty of the charges laid in the indictment.

He says further:

A grand jury is one of our time-honored institutions, and has special recognition in our Federal Constitution. Neither the Senate nor the President has any power to control the action of grand juries or in any way to overturn indictments returned by grand juries. When a valid indictment has been found the party indicted must be put upon trial, unless the district attorney concludes, and the court concurs, that for some legitimate reason the indictment should be withdrawn. The legislative branch of the Government nor either House of Congress should attempt to exercise the power to determine, in advance of such trial, whether the defendant is in fact guilty, and its right or power so to determine is seriously questioned. Such determination not only encroaches upon the legal functions of the court but is likely so to prejudice public sentiment at the proper place of trial as to make it difficult and perhaps impossible for either the Government or the defendant to obtain a fair and impartial jury. Furthermore, when a committee of the Senate calls before it, in open session, all the witnesses of the prosecution and examines them before trial, the defendant Senator is accorded an advantage to which no other defendant is entitled under the law, an advantage to which he, merely because he is a Senator, is not entitled.

I will refer to that again directly. I want to read first the further argument along the same line toward the close of this rather remarkable report:

In the face of and contrary to what is believed to be sufficient evidence at least to warrant the action of the grand jury, the majority has specifically and definitely found that Senator WHEELER has not committed any act in violation of law. In doing this the majority have encroached upon the functions of the judicial branch of our Government. Their conclusions prejudice the issue made by the pending indictment and a plea of "not guilty" which it is assumed will be entered; and to this extent the majority report obstructs and interferes with the due administration of justice. In the face of the majority report, which will doubtless be given wide publicity in Montana, how can the Government hope to secure an unprejudiced jury to try the case? How can respect for the courts be maintained if their hands are to be tied and their freedom of action embarrassed by the unwarranted interference of a coordinate branch of the Government? The action of the majority of the committee in assuming to act as a petit jury to determine the guilt or innocence of the person accused, without the necessary orderly proceedings and restraints of a court of justice to safeguard the rights of the Government on the one hand and of the defendant on the other is altogether repugnant to our ideas of justice. "Equality before the law" is one of the cherished principles of our free institutions; it must not be violated by recourse to a proceeding which gives to a United States Senator, when charged with an offense, a privilege not enjoyed by the humblest citizen of the land.

Senator WHEELER, having been charged by a Federal grand jury with the violation of a Federal statute, should be remitted to the proper forum where he will have full opportunity to explain, deny, or refute the charges made against him and where the Government likewise, through its counsel, will be accorded the right to present its case in a lawful and orderly way. That forum is the Federal District Court for the State of Montana; and before a jury duly impaneled and sworn to try the case according to the law and the evidence.

The idea in the mind of the Senator apparently is that in some way or other we are going to try Senator WHEELER in the place of his being tried by a petit jury. The use of the language "remitted to the proper tribunal" conveys that idea. When a person is charged with an offense of which he claims the court has no jurisdiction, he sues out a writ of habeas corpus, and if the judge hearing the writ determines that his contention is not sound, he remits him to the court from which he came in order that the case may be tried. We do not remit Senator WHEELER anywhere. We determine simply whether he ought to be expelled from this body or not. We interfere in no way with the proceeding before the court.

Touching the assertion that a privilege is accorded Senator WHEELER not enjoyed by the ordinary person accused of crime, a word may be said.

The difficulty is that every citizen is not a member of this body. There are only 96 Senators who are subject to expulsion from this body. Every citizen of this country is not subject to expulsion from the United States Senate, and that is why the same matter may be heard in this tribunal and heard in another tribunal without either of them encroaching upon the powers or the functions of the other.

It may be true that a hearing here may indirectly ease the situation of a defendant Senator before a jury trying him, but it may as well be an embarrassment to him. But the duty of the Senate is clear whatever may be such indirect influence.

As pointed out, no matter what we do here, the proceedings in Montana will go on. An acquittal of Senator WHEELER in the courts of Montana would not compel us to retain him as a Member of this body. We would still have the power to go on and expel him. It might be a question whether he was not acquitted by reason of some technical failure of the proof, or some frailty in the indictment. We might prosecute an entirely independent inquiry with respect to the facts whatever the adjudication there might be.

The Senator read at some considerable length from the opinion in the Burton case, for the purpose, as he told us, of establishing that it was not necessary that the Senator should actually be entered as an attorney of record in some proceeding before the department before which he is charged with practicing. Some pages were read for that purpose. That kind of thing perhaps impresses some people, but inasmuch as no one ever even intimated in any wise that that was an essential requirement in order to establish a case against a Senator, it seemed to have little if any purpose.

There was a matter that was determined in the Burton case, however, that is exceedingly important in this connection. I read what the court said about the matter to which I have just adverted:

But the final judgment of conviction did not operate, ipso facto, to vacate the seat of the convicted Senator nor compel the Senate to expel him or to regard him as expelled by force alone of the judgment. The seat into which he was originally inducted as a Senator from Kansas could only become vacant by his death or by expiration of his term of office or by some direct action on the part of the Senate in the exercise of its constitutional powers. This must be so for the further reason that the declaration in section 1782 that anyone convicted under its provisions shall be incapable of holding any office of honor, trust, or profit "under the Government of the United States" refers only to offices created by or existing under the direct authority of the National Government as organized under the Constitution, and not to offices the appointments to which are made by the States acting separately, albeit proceeding, in respect of such appointments, under the sanction of that instrument.

The conviction in Montana would have no effect whatever in the Senate. The Senate might accept its judgment, or might proceed entirely independent of it if it so desired.

But I want to follow this matter a little further in the hope that even the Senator from South Dakota, for whom I have abundant reason for entertaining feelings of regard and esteem, may be induced to change his views.

I have read the language of the resolution under which the committee acted. The Senator said, in language which I have heretofore quoted:

The language of the resolution is broad enough to include an inquiry, not only as to whether there was probable cause upon which the Federal grand jury for the district of Montana might properly return an indictment against Senator WHEELER, but also whether Senator WHEELER was in fact guilty of the charges laid in the indictment.

For myself, I can find no room for such division in the resolution. I can find nothing whatever in the resolution which authorized the committee to go into the question as to whether there was probable cause to find the indictment. I can think of no provision of the Constitution which would authorize the committee to engage in any such inquiry unless, indeed, it be prosecuted as a part of an inquiry into the conduct of the Department of Justice.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PITTMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. The committee was very careful not to go into the proposition as to whether the grand jury had probable cause or not.

I did not think that we had any authority to inquire into it. We were authorized to investigate and report upon the facts touching the charge, and that is what we did, and that is the proceeding of the committee. When the question was suggested at one time the Senator from South Dakota seemed to think we had no authority to go into it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That was my understanding about the matter—that the committee did not go into that question at all and that there was no room whatever for inquiring into the charge made by the Senator from Montana that he was the victim of a frame-up. I did not understand that the Senate authorized any committee to go into the question as to whether he was the victim of a frame-up.

Mr. STERLING. No; not in terms——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly the resolution under which the committee acted did not authorize them to do so.

Mr. STERLING. But the Senator from South Dakota very early took the view that the committee had not the power to determine the guilt or innocence of Senator WHEELER but that the facts might assist in determining whether or not the grand jury had probable cause to find him guilty. That is as far as I thought the committee could go, and that belief was induced by the charge made by Senator WHEELER that this was a frame-up and that the prosecuting officers of the Government had been governed by improper motives. I was willing to go into the facts to that extent, but it was difficult to determine, in the investigation by the committee and in the statement of facts or purported facts by various witnesses, as to how far that would reach. I grant that, in the disclosure of facts other than those that were necessary in order to determine whether the grand jury was warranted in finding an indictment or not, it was difficult to draw the line in the examination of the witnesses or in taking their testimony. So without much reference to whether the inquiry was for the purpose of ascertaining whether he was guilty or innocent or not I allowed the testimony to go in.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But that is a wholly different question. I am not discussing now the question of testimony at all. I am discussing the question of the resolution under which the committee acted. I want to inquire of the Senator from South Dakota where he finds in the resolution any direction to inquire whether the grand jury acted upon sufficient evidence or not?

Mr. STERLING. There is no explicit reference to it in the resolution. I grant that; that is very plain; but I have said that the resolution was broad enough, according to my interpretation of the resolution, to permit the committee to inquire into the question as to whether the grand jury was justified or not, or to go into the whole question of the guilt or innocence of Senator WHEELER.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I inquire of the Senator, suppose the resolution did expressly direct, and directed nothing else, that the committee inquire into whether there was probable cause for the grand jury to find the indictment, where would the Senator find any justification in the Constitution for that kind of inquiry?

Mr. GEORGE. Why would we want to know it? What interest would it be to the Senate of the United States to know that fact?

Mr. STERLING. This was our interest, and mine as a member of the committee, in finding whether or not the evidence would show any of it or all of it together as to whether there was a frame-up against Senator WHEELER. That was my interest in it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am inquiring of the Senator where he finds in the resolution any direction of the Senate to inquire into either of those questions?

Mr. STERLING. There is no specific direction in the resolution to that effect.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Very well.

Mr. STERLING. I am free to admit that, but we were to investigate facts, and under my theory of the case the investigation might have been limited to the facts before the grand jury and any facts showing improper conduct or motives on the part of the prosecution.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I now inquire of the Senator, suppose there were an express direction to the committee to inquire into that subject, where would he find the power in the Constitution to do it?

Mr. STERLING. We would not find the express power in the Constitution to do it no more than we find power in the Constitution to go into the other question.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Why not? Why is it not involved in the power to expel? The committee in 1807 said that it was.

Mr. STERLING. I have not examined the case decided away back in 1807. There has been no case since that time, practically 120 years ago, in which that proposition was laid down, and that was a case of treason against the United States.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But the Senator told us yesterday there was no case being a precedent for the present proceeding.

Mr. STERLING. I did; and I was distinctly under the impression that there was no case. The Senator has found a case, decided in 1807.

Mr. GLASS. Does not the Senator think that is a well-seasoned precedent, being 120 years old?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Moreover, it will be borne in mind that less than 20 years had elapsed since the Constitution was written, and that in all probability not a few of those who contributed to framing it were still in public life.

Mr. STERLING. I will say to the Senator from Virginia that the precedent has never been followed from that time to this, and I do not think there will be another case found where an indictment had been returned when the Senate proceeded to try the guilt or innocence of the defendant.

Mr. GLASS. Perhaps there never was a case—I hope not—just similar to this since that precedent was established.

Mr. STERLING. There is a case pending now in the other House that involves this very principle, and where the committee refused to go on with the investigation until the matter had been decided by the trial court.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, we could refuse to go on, just as the House refused to go on; but the House did not refuse to go on because it did not have the power to go on. It had the power to do it if it wanted to.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senate did, as a matter of fact, direct an investigation into the facts charged against Senator WHEELER in the indictment. The language is perfectly explicit. It did not direct any inquiry as to whether the grand jury had probable cause to believe that Senator WHEELER was guilty or could be convicted. It did not direct the committee to inquire whether he was the victim of a frame-up or not. It directed the committee to inquire whether he was guilty of the facts charged against him, with a view to his expulsion if he was or his exoneration if he was not.

The Senator from South Dakota made no objection at the time the resolution was offered in the Senate to the effect that to do so was beyond the power of the Senate under the Constitution. He made no objection to the effect, when the resolution was offered in the Senate, that it would be unwise public policy to pursue that course because we would prejudice the administration of justice in the State of Montana. No; he was perfectly silent about it. No one in the Senate at the time, I dare say, doubted what it was the committee was directed to do. The Senator from South Dakota apparently admits that he recognized the full meaning and significance of the language of the resolution and expected that the committee would go into the question of the facts of guilt or innocence. Not only that, Mr. President, but when the committee proceeded to inquire into the facts the Senator from South Dakota made no objection to the introduction of testimony concerning the truth of the charge upon the ground that the committee had no jurisdiction to inquire into them or that it would be unwise upon the ground of public policy to do so. All of the testimony went in.

The Senator complains that the order of the presentation of the testimony was reversed, but upon an examination of the record I find that he made no objection about it at the time at all. He said in that connection as follows:

In the presentation of evidence before the committee the customary order was reversed, and eight witnesses were heard who, supposedly, had been summoned at the instance of Senator WHEELER with the view of refuting the charges laid in the indictment and of proving Senator WHEELER was not guilty thereof. This was not in accord with my conception of the proper function of the committee, as above stated, but tended to extend the inquiry far beyond any legitimate scope.

But it was within the scope of the resolution, as admitted by the Senator from South Dakota, and no objection was made either about the order of the presentation of the testimony or against the testimony itself. The Senator, having accepted a position upon the committee which was charged with the duty of going into the matter, said this in his report:

The view here expressed is limited to the first of these propositions—

That is, whether there was probable cause—

namely, as to whether the indictment was justified by the evidence before the grand jury. The second proposition, as to whether Senator WHEELER is in fact guilty of the crime, is not, in my opinion, a proper subject of inquiry by the committee, that being solely a matter for determination by the court in which the indictment is pending.

I inquire, as suggested by the Senator from Georgia, to which end should the committee inquire into the question as to whether there was probable cause for the indictment, as to whether the evidence which came before the grand jury was sufficient or not? Suppose it was sufficient but there was other evidence which wholly overcame that; what should the Senate do? To what end, I inquire, should the Senate prosecute an investigation as to whether the evidence was or was not sufficient? If there was other evidence that overcame that, Senator WHEELER would not be expelled from this body. If evidence other than that heard by the grand jury should be adduced inculpating him he might stand in danger of exculpation. What could the Senate do upon a report either that the grand jury did or that it did not hear evidence sufficient to warrant its action?

Not only then was an inquiry of that kind never authorized by the Senate but the Senate probably never could authorize an inquiry of that kind, and, finally, there was no object in prosecuting an inquiry of that character.

There are a couple of other extraordinary passages in the report to which I invite attention, as follows:

The complaint is here made that the indictment by the grand jury was obtained and found through improper motives and upon evidence insufficient in law to show probable cause for belief in the guilt of the accused.

Who makes the complaint? Where is it made? Something was said in the newspapers to that effect. A great many of us believe that is the case, but what was the committee called upon to inquire into?

For the purposes of this case it may be conceded that the occasion is such as to justify an investigation by a committee of the Senate as to the motives which prompted the prosecution in its beginning and the sufficiency of the evidence before the grand jury to sustain it.

Why, Mr. President, that is just exactly the subject that another committee of the Senate, the Brookhart committee, is going into. They are going into the question as to whether the Department of Justice is not reprehensible in this matter and as to whether it did not prosecute this proceeding without any just foundation for it. That was not within the scope of the inquiry which this committee was directed to make at all.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. The language in the report of the Senator from South Dakota where he says "The complaint is here made," and so forth, would indicate that there was some complaint of that kind in a formal manner before the committee. Of course, no such thing as that was before the committee at all.

Mr. STERLING. I grant that there was no formal complaint of that kind, but I assumed that that complaint was made in the speech delivered by the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] immediately following the publication of the news that an indictment had been found. Here on the floor of the Senate he made a speech charging the indictment with being a frame-up, and I think charging Government officials with being prompted by unworthy or improper motives, holding out the idea that it was his political enemies who were instigating the prosecution. Hence the words in the report, "The complaint is here made." They refer to the complaint as I understood it to be made by the junior Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But I remind the Senator that the committtee was not charged with the duty of inquiring into the truth of the statements made by the junior Senator from Montana upon the floor here; it was charged with the duty of inquiring into the facts charged against him in the indictment; and the Senator from South Dakota endeavors to shift it from the charges in the indictment to the statements made by the junior Senator from Montana on the floor here as to the truth or falsity of the statements made by him or the soundness or unsoundness of the conclusions that he drew.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the junior Senator from Iowa.

Mr. BROOKHART. At the time this resolution was passed I here, on the floor of the Senate, referred specifically to this question and requested that the investigation as to a frame-up be left to my committee. That committee has taken testimony in reference to the matter, which has indicated that it was a frame-up; that the claim of the junior Senator from Montana was true; and we shall take more testimony, and we shall investigate the charge to a conclusion. That is a question apart from the guilt or innocence of the junior Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; I dare say that the committee of which the distinguished Senator from Iowa is chairman will in due course inquire into the question of whether this was a frame-up or not or whether the evidence submitted to the grand jury was sufficient to warrant an indictment or not, but I again remind the Senator from South Dakota that that was not the duty imposed upon the committee of which he is a member.

Mr. STERLING. It was a duty that I was willing to concede the committee might perform.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The committee might perform how? Under the resolution?

Mr. STERLING. Under the resolution.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator from South Dakota continues:

None of the witnesses thus called at the instance of Senator WHEELER had appeared before the grand jury, and obviously their testimony can serve no useful purpose in determining the question of probable cause. In the testimony of these witnesses there is an utter lack of evidence in any manner substantiating the statement of Senator WHEELER that improper motives actuated the Government officers who either made the investigation or presented the evidence to the grand jury which returned the indictment. In other words, the charge of frame-up failed entirely of proof.

But the Senator was not called upon, as I have said, to inquire into that question at all; neither was the committee of which he was a member.

Mr. CARAWAY. There was not a line of testimony elicited by the Senator from South Dakota or anyone else directed to the point that there was or was not a frame-up.

Mr. OVERMAN. Do I understand that the Senator from South Dakota in his report finds that there was no frame-up?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am surprised at that.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have asserted that if the Senator from South Dakota so believes—and I assume that he does, as he has so stated in his report—he stands practically alone among the people of the United States.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I have abundant evidence to show that I do not stand practically alone in my view of this matter. I think it will be found that there is very good authority in support of the view that I have taken. I have fine legal authority, if the Senator will allow me to say so; I have evidence as to that; and so I do not stand alone by any means.

I want to say now to the Senator, once for all—and I do not think from what I said yesterday and from what I say now there can be any misunderstanding of my position—that I state in the minority report that the right of the committee to go into the question of whether the grand jury was warranted in finding an indictment or not is open to serious question; but in view of the statement made here by the Senator's colleague on the floor of the Senate, I thought we might well go into that question. The junior Senator from Montana gravely and seriously charged that the indictment was a frame-up and that the officers were governed by improper motives. I was attracted at the time by that statement on the part of the junior Senator from Montana, which he made here on the floor of the Senate, and I thought that the committee might well investigate the question as to whether there was evidence going to show that frame-up.

Mr. OVERMAN. But the question is, Did the Senate committee investigate that question?

Mr. STERLING. Yes; they investigated it in a way; some of the testimony must have gone to that, necessarily.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the Senator from South Dakota think he is justified in finding that there was no frame-up when his committee did not go into that question and refused to go into it?

Mr. STERLING. The Senator from North Carolina is wrong in that respect.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have taken what the Senator himself has stated.

Mr. STERLING. We did not refuse to go into the question. I did not have control of the introduction of witnesses, so far as that is concerned. Witnesses were called, persons of whom I had never heard and did not know. I once suggested to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] as to whether it would not be a good idea, in view of the charge by the junior Senator from Montana, to have the district attorney brought here from Montana. At first blush he seemed to think it would be; but later on, after consideration, he said he did not think it would be a good idea, and I rather agreed with him that it would hardly be proper, perhaps, for the United States district attorney to come here and testify before a committee of the Senate.

It is my position that we had no right to go into the question as to whether there was guilt or innocence, but we might have had a right, under the very serious charge made by the junior Senator from Montana, to go into the question of a frame-up and ascertain whether the evidence showed it or not. If it did show it, no one would be quicker to condemn it than myself and no one would have been more receptive to testimony of that kind than myself; but it was not introduced.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I want to inquire of the Senator whether he had at any time ever insisted that that subject be gone into?

Mr. STERLING. I did not personally and specifically insist upon it; no.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly.

Mr. STERLING. I did not think it was necessary.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly.

Mr. STERLING. That committee being constituted as it was and Senator WHEELER having made the statement that he made, I did not think it necessary to remind the other members of the committee that the committee might inquire into the question as to whether or not there was a frame-up.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I want to make another inquiry of the Senator.

Mr. STERLING. I thought then, let me say to the Senator from Montana, that if there had been evidence apparent to the other members of the committee to the effect that there was a frame-up they would have been quick enough to have brought it to the attention of the committee.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I want to ask the Senator another question. If he concedes that the only legitimate inquiry that the committee could make was as to the sufficiency of the evidence before the grand jury to indict, did he object when witnesses were called who were not before the grand jury?

Mr. STERLING. I did not.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Then, if that is the theory of the Senator, why did he not object?

Mr. STERLING. I began to see the situation so far as that committee was concerned, and that they were going on and trying the question of guilt or innocence, and I did not object to that.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly.

Mr. STERLING. But I said that in its findings the committee should be limited to the question as to whether there was sufficient evidence to warrant the finding of an indictment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I understand that now.

I merely want to say in conclusion, Mr. President, that I wish I might take a more charitable view of this report, but I can not help but feel that this is an afterthought of the Senator from South Dakota; that it never occurred to him——

Mr. STERLING. An afterthought since when?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Since the testimony was all in, because up to that time the Senator had never advanced the idea; and an afterthought, Mr. President, in order to afford some one an opportunity to evade a direct vote upon the question of the exoneration of my colleague.

Mr. STERLING. The distinguished Senator from Montana may entertain such view as he cares to in regard to its being an afterthought, but it was not an afterthought. Furthermore, when it came to the meeting of the committee in executive session, after hearing the report of the majority read, I submitted the opinion that I could not agree to that report; that I considered our proper function was to make the inquiry only as to whether there was evidence showing a frame-up, and that the indictment was the result of that kind of procedure.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator must appreciate, as a matter of course, as everybody else will, that his minority report simply gives an excuse to some persons to entertain some suspicion against my colleague; and for other people to scatter slander about him over the United States, notwithstanding the Senate may exculpate and exonerate him.

Mr. STERLING. That minority report——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I appeal to my fellow Senators upon this floor to be bold enough to vote either for the exoneration of my colleague or for his condemnation, and not seek to hide and get away from that issue by any suggestion that, although he is not guilty, the grand jury had sufficient reason for returning an indictment against him, as proposed by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, the minority report contains much more than mere conclusions. It refers to the evidence, including the evidence taken before the grand jury, to the oral evidence and documentary evidence, and I submit that that evidence, without explanation, without denial, would warrant the grand jury in finding as it did. That evidence, as I have stated in the report, may be explained, it may be refuted by the Senator from Montana in the proper place.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I realize that no useful purpose can be subserved by continuing to discuss the minority report submitted by the Senator from South Dakota. I hope he does not go away, for I wish to call attention to one statement in that report. In the second paragraph he says:

> The language of the resolution is broad enough to include an inquiry not only as to whether there was probable cause upon which the Federal grand jury for the district of Montana might properly return an indictment against Senator WHEELER but also whether Senator WHEELER was in fact guilty of the charges laid in the indictment.

If that is true, if the views that he was to present were to be confined exclusively to the question of whether there was probably ground to warrant the grand jury in returning an indictment, everybody knows that the Senator from South Dakota should have discussed no testimony except that which the grand jury had before it, because if the whole inquiry was as to whether the grand jury had probable ground for believing Senator WHEELER guilty, then no evidence except that which the grand jury had should have been considered by the committee or should have been discussed by the Senator from South Dakota. That is evident; and yet in his report he discusses matters that the grand jury never had an opportunity to consider, and in his speech on yesterday he sought to bolster up the contention that he was justified in his position by reading an affidavit that was never before the grand jury. I can not understand how the Senator from South Dakota, who is a lawyer, can find any excuse for dragging into this discussion evidence that the grand jury never saw and never heard of in order to uphold his contention that the only thing that the committee had a right to inquire into was whether the grand jury had probable cause for believing Senator WHEELER guilty. That is only one of the inconsistent statements that the Senator from South Dakota has made.

I repeat, because I do not want anybody to vote without having at least an opportunity to know it, that skillfully led as some of the witnesses were by the Senator from South Dakota, there is not a line in the testimony, no witness testified to it, that Senator WHEELER ever at any time undertook, for a consideration or without a consideration, to represent Campbell or any other interest before the Department of the Interior, or that he did so represent anyone. If there is anyone who thinks that statement is inaccurate, I shall be glad to yield for him to point out the testimony by which that fact is established.

If, as the Senator said in the conclusion of his minority report, he was actuated only by a sense of duty, and it was abhorrent to his feelings to have to bring in this minority report, I ask him, then, in fairness to the Senator from Montana

[Mr. WHEELER], to withdraw his report, or else put his finger on some line of testimony that would justify it.

Let us take the Rhea case. I shall not read the testimony, because it has been in the RECORD twice. Rhea made an affidavit. Before that, Coan went to Montana in the pay of the Republican National Committee, according to his own sworn testimony, to "get something on" two Senators. He wanted to "smear" them, as he said, in order that they might be compelled to desist from prosecutions before committees of charges against the Department of Justice. I want to read Coan's testimony, because it is of a very remarkable character. On page 127 of the testimony Coan said:

The CHAIRMAN. Who employed you to go to Montana?

Mr. COAN. Mr. Lockwood—George B. Lockwood—of the Republican National Committee.

Senator SWANSON. Is he a member of the Republican National Committee?

Mr. COAN. Yes, sir.

Senator SWANSON. And he is also interested in the National Republican?

Mr. COAN. Yes, sir; he is secretary of the Republican National Committee.

Senator SWANSON. At that time were they interwoven?

Mr. COAN. I do not know the connection exactly. I did not ask him when he gave me the job whether they were interwoven or not.

The CHAIRMAN. You may take the witness.

Senator SWANSON. Did he tell you the purpose for which he employed you?

Mr. COAN. Yes; I was sent out to Montana to investigate some of these stories about Senator WHEELER. WHEELER had been attacking the administration and everybody in public life here, and nobody seemed to be willing to get up and answer him, and they thought it was up to somebody to find out who this fellow was, and what he had been doing.

Senator SWANSON. Who thought so?

Mr. COAN. The Republican National Committee.

Senator SWANSON. And they sent you there for that purpose?

Mr. COAN. Yes.

Coan went to Montana and got two affidavits. First, he got an affidavit from a man by the name of Glosser, upon whom the Senator from South Dakota relies. In that affidavit Glosser never pretended to say what he had been employed to do, but he did say that Campbell had told him about WHEELER's contract. Coan then took Glosser to Denver, Colo., at his expense or at the expense of the Republican National Committee, I presume—because, I take it, that he was furnished expense money—and found a man by the name of Rhea, the only other witness that the Senator from South Dakota quotes with approval; and from Rhea he had an affidavit. In that affidavit there is not a word that Senator WHEELER ever agreed to do anything touching any matter that Mr. Campbell had, so far as witnesses by competent evidence know. There was, however, a statement said to have been made by Campbell. When these two witnesses are put upon the witness stand and are pressed for the exact language of WHEELER, both of them said they never heard him at any time say what the scope of his employment was to be, much less that they, or either of them, knew he was to appear before any department of government.

Take the case of the Rhea permit, the James MacGowan permit: That is the one that the Senator discusses. Rhea said this. I shall not read his testimony. If anyone is interested in it, I shall be glad to do it. Rhea said that he and Campbell and Glosser and WHEELER were in room 212 in the Rainbow Hotel in Great Falls, and that in the course of the conversation Campbell said:

If Senator WHEELER can get this MacGowan permit fixed up, you—can afford to give him a good slice of it.

Referring to Rhea—

It is perfectly obvious—the Senator from South Dakota knows it—that if the MacGowan permit had been within the things that WHEELER had been employed to do, and for which he had been paid, there would have been no occasion then to dicker for a new deal with WHEELER. There would have been no occasion for Campbell to say: "If WHEELER can do something for the MacGowan permit, you can afford to pay him for it," because the answer is obvious that if the MacGowan permit had been within the things that Campbell had employed WHEELER to do and for which WHEELER had been paid, there would have been no occasion to offer to pay him further for those services; and, in addition to that, the answer of Rhea is obviously to the same effect, because if you concede that the thing happened at all—and I will do that much, though I presume there is nobody on earth that believes it except the Senator from South Dakota—Rhea would have said, "Why, that is what we are paying WHEELER to do"; but, instead, he said: "I have got me a lawyer. That is my permit, and I have got me a lawyer to do that, and I have already paid him, and I am not going to pay anybody else." Therefore that ended it; and the Senator from South Dakota knows that under either theory of that testimony WHEELER had nothing to do with the MacGowan permit for a consideration or without one, because, in the first place, as I say again, and I want to repeat here, if that had been within the purview of the first employment of WHEELER by Campebll there would have been no offer upon his part to pay WHEELER additional for this, and there would have been no occasion for Rhea to have said: "I have got a lawyer to look after this meeting."

So, therefore, the only people that testify about that at all make it absolutely impossible for anybody, however anxious he may be to follow out the policy that brought about this indictment of smearing WHEELER, not to know that that permit had nothing to do with WHEELER's employment. It is denied by the very people that are put on the witness stand to prove it.

There is something that I might refer to here if we wanted to talk about frame-ups. I read this testimony yesterday, but I want to read it again in this connection, because here is the origin of this matter. It comes from people who at least are not in sympathy with Senator WHEELER politically. It comes from a Republican of the State of Montana, who was formerly the assistant attorney general of that State, and it shows this, and I will read it largely for this reason:

Here is Coan, under the employ of the Republican National Committee, who went out and framed up these indictments with somebody to help him here in the department; Coan, who admitted that there was nothing in the case, and we find Coan walking the streets to-day, confessed as a man who had entered into a conspiracy to frame up a Senator and to do it by perjured testimony, enjoying his liberty, with no effort to indict him, no desire to prosecute him, no suggestion that he ought to be prosecuted, and the man against whom he hatched up the conspiracy is to be tried upon what is known to be perjured testimony!

I want to look at the statement of this man. I shall skip the parts that merely show who he was.

Did you have any conversation with him about his business out there?

That is, with Coan.

I did; yes.

What did he say to you about that?

Well, he first came to me and wanted to get something on Senator WALSH. In this connection I may state that while I was assistant attorney general I had occasion to make some investigation in Butte, Silver Bow County, in regard to some election frauds.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. I would like to know from what the Senator is reading; that is all.

Mr. CARAWAY. I shall be glad to tell the Senator. I am going to be so much nicer to him than he was to me. He said he would not yield to me, but I am going to yield to the Senator all the time. I was reading from the sworn testimony of a Republican lawyer who was formerly the assistant attorney general of the State of Montana. His name is Grorud, and he testified before the committee investigating the Department of Justice.

Mr. STERLING. Is the Senator reading from the printed testimony?

Mr. CARAWAY. No, sir; it is not in the printed testimony. I have the stenographer's copy.

Mr. BORAH. Transcribed.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, yes; taken here under oath before the committee of which the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] is chairman.

I want to read something else that occurred. When Coan was on the witness stand, among other things he testified under the examination first of the Senator from South Dakota:

Senator STERLING. Let me refresh your recollection a little. Do you know the clerk of the hotel at which you were stopping?

Mr. COAN. Oh, yes; Walter Paul.

Senator STERLING. Walter Paul?

Mr. COAN. Yes.

Senator STERLING. Would you like to include Walter Paul?

Mr. COAN. Yes. I would like to have him subpœnaed, Mr. Chairman, Washington, D. C., the Arlington Hotel.

I read that for two reasons. The Senator from South Dakota left me under the impression a minute ago that he was not suggesting witnesses. He was not only suggesting them, but he was asking other witnesses, the men who did the framing, if there was anybody else that they would like to call to help bolster up this case against the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. STERLING. Will the Senator tell us just what he is reading from now?

Mr. CARAWAY. I will do that. I am reading on page 130 of part 3 of the hearings as they appear in the printed copy. Let us go a little further:

Senator STERLING. I think that is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Was there anyone else on your list when you went to Montana aside from WHEELER?

Mr. COAN. What do you mean—anyone else on my list?

The CHAIRMAN. That you were looking after—that you were investigating.

Mr. COAN. Well, yes; I was looking up another Senator. Do you want me to tell you about it?

What happened?

Senator STERLING. No; we submit, Mr. Chairman, that we do not want anything about that.

Of course, that is just one of the coincidences in this case. I want to finish reading this man's testimony. I had never up to that time heard of his having two Senators on the list, but there was a quick objection made by the Senator from South Dakota. I read further.

Now, to Grorud's testimony again:

In this connection I may state that while I was assistant attorney general I had occasion to make some investigation in Butte, Silver Bow County, in regard to some election frauds, illegal voting, and Mr. Coan came to me and wanted an affidavit from me.

Here is the important part of it:

He wanted me to make a strong affidavit.

There is nobody so unsophisticated who does not know that that was an invitation to swear a lie, because if he had wanted only the facts he could have said, "I want you to tell the truth about this," but it shows the great confidence Coan had that if he had the backing of the Republican National Committee he could safely go the limit.

I want you to make it a strong affidavit.

For what purpose? He tells us. I want to show now that he intended the case to be a frame-up.

I told him that I would make an affidavit or testify as to the facts for him, and I also said to him that as far as Senator WALSH was concerned he had nothing to do with that and he was not connected with that in any shape or form.

This is Coan's answer to that statement:

Well, he said he knew that, but he wanted something on WALSH so that he could smear him.

Mr. STERLING. I would like to have the Senator designate just what he is reading from. He is not reading from the hearings here. He is reading the testimony before the Brookhart committee?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes; and here is a man who admits that he went to a man in this "frame-up," about which the Senator wants to talk, and asked a reputable lawyer—a Republican—a former assistant attorney general of the State of Montana, to make a "strong affidavit," and in the very conversation said, "I know the Senator against whom I want to use it is guilty of no wrongdoing, but I want you to lie about it so that I can smear him." Yet that man is walking the streets of Washington to-day, I presume, unwhipped of justice. Nobody—not even the Senator from South Dakota, who declaimed against frame-ups so eloquently a minute ago—has ever suggested that he ought to be prosecuted for subornation of perjury; oh, no; he is entirely a "reputable" citizen. He is one of the tools of this frame-up.

That is not all.

Well, he said he knew that, but he wanted something on WALSH so that he could smear him because he wanted to stop him in the oil investigations here at Washington.

I am not saying the Senator from South Dakota is consciously aiding in that, but if he were he could not be any more helpful than he is to-day, or was when he proposed the minority report. There is not a thing on God's earth Coan could have suggested had he been permitted to suggest to the Senator from South Dakota that the Senator from South Dakota has not done. I do not say that he would intentionally do it, but it looks to me as if he might pause and see if he is not being used unconsciously by the very crowd that was perfectly willing to commit perjury that they might smear a Senator to make him stop the investigation. That is not all.

The CHAIRMAN. Now go ahead and state what was said about Senator WHEELER.

Mr. GRORUD. Well, in one of the conversations he said something about WHEELER.

I am now quoting what Grorud said:

He knew, of course, that Mr. WHEELER and myself had been law partners, and he said something about having WHEELER smeared.

Senator MOSES. Was that WHEELER or WALSH?

Mr. GRORUD. WHEELER.

Senator MOSES. You testified a moment ago that he wanted to have Senator WALSH——

Mr. GRORUD. That he wanted to have Senator WALSH smeared.

The CHAIRMAN. This conversation occurred after Senator WHEELER's indictment out there?

Mr. GRORUD. Oh, yes. He has already smeared WHEELER in such a shape that he had him sewed up, he said, and I said to him, "How did you ever happen to put this over?" I said, "You can't get any place with that," because I thought I knew something about the case that he had for Mr. Campbell. "Well," he said, "we don't care anything about that."

That is, "We do not care anything about what we are going to do with it"—meaning the case against WHEELER:

"We do not care anything about that. We just simply want to smear him." I said to him, "Supposing now that the case is set down for trial?" "Well," he said, "we will see to that, that the case don't come up for trial immediately. We will simply hold it over him, because we had to do something to stop him." And he said, "Well"—he said—he just simply wanted to smear him; that is all. He knew that he couldn't get any place.

What is significant is that that is exactly what has happened. WHEELER can not get an immediate trial of this case, but they are holding it over him and they are smearing him, and I want to repeat, the Senator from South Dakota unconsciously is lending his most valuable aid in "smearing" WHEELER, because here is a report that is not sustained by the testimony of any man, living or dead; it is not within the purview of the resolution; it never was suggested by anybody when the testimony was being offered and when the report was being considered; it never found anybody to give it breath of life in the committee until after there had been agreement and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] had prepared and was ready to have reported the opinion of the committee, and then for the first time the Senator from South Dakota said, "Oh, well; I do not think that is what we ought to have considered," and then brought this minority report on the floor.

I proceed with the testimony:

Well—

He said—

he just simply wanted to smear him; that is all. He knew he couldn't get any place.

If that means anything—I do not think it needs interpretation—it means that he knew that the testimony against WHEELER was an infamous lie. "We know it will not stand up, but we had to smear him, because we simply had to stop him."

Mr. Crim, of the Department of Justice, or who was formerly of the Department of Justice, an ex-Assistant Attorney General, testified to-day before the Brookhart committee investigating Daugherty that one of the great evils in this country at this time is failure to provide stenographers for grand jury proceedings in many of the Federal courts. He said:

Failure to have stenographic reports of these grand jury proceedings often leads to perjury, fixing, and breaking down of justice.

What is suggestive about that is this—and I presume other people have found it out—in this particular case against WHEELER the grand jury kept no notes. For the first time, so far as I ever knew, a grand jury kept no notes of what took place before it. It would not have been so remarkable, possibly, if that had been the rule; but we had one of the jurors before us and he said:

We kept notes in the Butte case, but we kept no minutes in the Wheeler case.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I think in no other case than the first case.

Mr. CARAWAY. There is no record that the grand jury had any other case before it, and whenever the Senator says "the rest of it," he is drawing on his imagination.

Mr. STERLING. I refer the Senator to the testimony.

Mr. CARAWAY. I have it before me, and we would have gotten more except for the fact that the very next question was objected to by the Senator from South Dakota. He shut off testimony, for the reason that he did not want the witness to answer the question as asked.

Mr. STERLING. Will the Senator give me the page?

Mr. CARAWAY. I will be delighted to do it. It is page 101. It strikes me now as showing such poor taste—I will say that and no more—for the Senator from South Dakota to have been so active and earnest in wanting to shut out testimony and then so insistent that his report shall rest upon testimony that was not produced but might have been. In other words, he objected to having certain testimony introduced and then comes into the Senate and says, "If I had had my witnesses, we could have proved that."

When I am talking about "my witnesses," that reminds me that I want to read the Senator's own language to show that he recognized that he had one side of the controversy and the Senate the other. I read from page 139. When there was some question about closing the hearings, or some suggestion by Senator STERLING that he wanted to call a lawyer here by the name of Nyce, the chairman said:

All right; call him up and get him. We are going to close this this afternoon.

Senator STERLING. I do not know whether we will be prepared to close or not, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. You will have to get ready. I am not going to postpone this any longer.

Senator STERLING. Let me suggest right here that as far as that is concerned, the witnesses have all been called by the chairman in this case, every one of them. Not one has been called at our instance.

Who is "our"? Was it Coan, who had framed this case, who had procured perjured testimony, who sought other perjured testimony? Who was "our"? I asked him that question. I said, "Who is 'our?'"

Senator STERLING. Well, to be frank, I will say——

Senator CARAWAY. That is what I want to know.

Senator STERLING. At the instance of those who would like to get at the facts in this case, and that is not assuming that the rest are not anxious to get the facts, but there are different methods of which we are conscious more or less in the procuring of those witnesses.

Senator SWANSON. Have you asked for any witness that has not been summoned?

Senator STERLING. I have not as yet, but it depends somewhat on the course of the testimony as to whether I want to have some particular witness called, and I might, after the conclusion of the testimony, have some other witness.

He never had another witness.

If the Senator thought this resolution was not a proper one, he ought to have objected to it. If he thought, after he got to be a member of the committee, that the committee was not pursuing the proper line of testimony and in the proper way, he ought to have said something about it. If, when all the testimony was in and before the case was closed, there was any suggestion in his mind that there was any further testimony that had not been adduced, he ought to have said so. He should not have waited until the committee had closed its hearings, until the executive meeting had been had in which he had assented that the report should be prepared by the chairman of the committee. He still said nothing. He never intimated to anybody we know anything about that he had any other view until the report was ready to be signed.

Then he did not ask that we reopen the case, and did not say that he had testimony to support his theory, but he for the first time announced this report; and I do not care to repeat his exact language, although I would be delighted if he would tell what he said about the testimony then in the committee. We all remember that distinctly. This Senator from South Dakota then for the first time suggested this remarkable theory that he has brought in. I say, and I take the privilege of saying it and repeating it, that if he did not intend to find the facts according to the resolution he ought not to have sat upon the committee. If he did not intend to vote yes or no, he ought to have made that fact known before the testimony was closed. He ought, and I suggested it then and I think so yet, and I think the people who read the testimony will think so, to say yes or no to this question, "Did Senator WHEELER violate the law?" If he did, he ought to be condemned, and if he did not, no man ought to lend himself to a cowardly conspiracy to smear and besmirch his reputation. He ought to say yes or no. He ought to say he is guilty or he is not guilty.

Mr. STERLING. I almost think the language the Senator has used is objectionable under the rules.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am not talking about the Senator. However, I am willing to let the Senator state his objection.

Mr. STERLING. The objection is this, and the inference is very plain, that the Senator from South Dakota was lending himself to a conspiracy.

Mr. CARAWAY. Here is what I said about the Senator from South Dakota, and I have tried to make it perfectly clear. I said I did not think he had consciously lent himself to it, but if he had there was not a thing on God's earth he had not done, there is not anybody who could have more effectively lent himself to a conspiracy to blacken the reputation of Senator WHEELER than the Senator from South Dakota has lent himself, though I say again that I do not say that the Senator was conscious of that fact. It simply so happens that his report runs in line with the statement that Coan made to the effect that "We know we can not do anything to WHEELER, but we can smear him until his activities shall be stopped, and then when he demands a trial we will put it off." That is what he said was their purpose. That stands undisputed as the purpose of the indictment against Senator WHEELER. I want to disclaim, because I do not want to be offensive to the Senator from South Dakota, that I say he is lending himself to that. I am not intimating that. I am just saying that it so happens that his report does lend itself to the general scheme—unintentionally, of course.

Let me say this in conclusion. I started to read some more of the testimony, but I will not do it. Every Senator must be the keeper of his own conscience, but I do not see how—it does not appeal to me at least—when a fellow Senator is charged with an offense and here is the testimony that covers the case, and every Senator present can read it, and no Senator ought to vote upon it until he does know what the testimony is, because he is now sitting as a court. He has no more right to vote upon this case until he has read the brief than a juror has to shut his ears to the testimony and then vote guilty or not guilty. If a Senator wants to preserve his honor and self-respect he has to know what the facts are and vote upon them accordingly. I say—and I am willing to stop and go to the record—that when he reads the record he will find there is not a witness anywhere who said that Senator WHEELER was guilty of any offense or detailed facts that would lend a suspicion to that conclusion. Now, let Senators read the evidence and, as they would like to be dealt with themselves, let them have the courage to say that under the testimony he is guilty or innocent. Do not try to bring in a Scotch verdict of not proved as to the question "Did WHEELER violate law?" Let us be frank and say either yes or no.

I can not conceive of a Senator—aside from the attitude of the Senator from South Dakota, and I have not been able to fathom his mental processes, but that is my limitation, I know—when he is face to face with the question and must answer it under his oath as a Senator, "Do the facts show that the Senator from Montana is guilty or innocent," wishing to dodge that question. Every man has the right to have his reputation protected. It is the most valuable thing he has. But to avoid answering that question must lead to the conclusion—and I am acquitting the Senator from attempting to do it—that it is playing into the hands of those who framed this case. It is the most effective way of destroying Senator WHEELER's reputation. It is the process by which Coan boldly admitted that he set out to "smear" him in order that he might stop him from disclosing the corruption in the Department of Justice. It is the process, he said, "we have to adopt, and we are not going to try the case because we know we have no evidence to sustain our charge."

I hope, therefore, that the Senator from South Dakota upon reconsideration will lay aside his minority report and let us be frank and say Senator WHEELER is guilty or he is not guilty. If he is guilty, God knows you owe it to your country to say so, and you can not afford to avoid that responsibility. If he is not guilty, you certainly owe it to Senator WHEELER to say so by your vote. A man can do no less and keep his self-respect.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I wish to say just a few words. I shall not detain the Senate long. I do not want my vote on the question of the adoption of the majority report to be taken as a vote of "guilty" so far as Senator WHEELER is concerned. It can not and should not be so construed. I want to be understood as voting against the majority report which presumes to pass upon the guilt or innocence of Senator WHEELER here, and no more than that. I hope other Senators in the Chamber will take that same view of their duty and their obligation when the matter comes up for a vote. I had hoped that in what I said yesterday I would disabuse the minds of my colleagues in the Senate of the idea that I wanted to vote to the effect that Mr. WHEELER was guilty of those charges. I tried to make that plain to the committee.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. BAYARD. Just for a question?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. BAYARD. As I understand it, the Senator stated that he interprets the resolution under which the committee was appointed to warrant the majority report and to warrant the minority report. Is that right?

Mr. STERLING. That might be, and still that is hardly a proper construction of it. The majority report, of course, passes upon the guilt or innocence of Senator WHEELER. In making the majority report the committee, of course, took for their foundation the evidence in the case, I suppose. My idea is that we have no right to go further than to find whether the grand jury was justified, whether this was a frame-up or not. The grand jury having found its indictment, in the absence of evidence of a frame-up and without any proof of a frame-up, I think the Senate should await the decision of the petit jury that tries the case.

Mr. BAYARD. I think the Senator misunderstood the purport of my question. I would like him to answer, if he will, categorically, yes or no, whether or not his statements heretofore made on the floor of the Senate in regard to this matter have not been in substance that the resolution appointing the committee was broad enough to admit of the majority report and the minority report?

Mr. STERLING. Not to admit of the majority report, but perhaps to admit of an investigation of the facts and all the facts connected with the case. That is what I have said, and that is what I say in my minority report. A full investigation of all the facts connected with the case or that were admissible in evidence on a trial of the case might have been warranted under the terms of the resolution.

Mr. BAYARD. May I ask the Senator one more question?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. BAYARD. Assuming that the answer to my question has been "yes," may I ask the Senator whether, in his opinion, any or every Senator on the floor would be warranted in voting on both of those reports, voting to sustain both of those reports—first, the report of the majority that Senator WHEELER is not guilty of the facts as charged in the indictment, and, second, having voted that way, then voting in accordance with the report of the Senator from South Dakota that the facts disclose that the evidence warranted the indictment?

Mr. STERLING. No; I can not concede that that is the correct view of it at all, that a Senator would be warranted in voting for both of these reports.

Mr. BAYARD. They must adopt one or the other.

Mr. STERLING. Yes; the minority report refers the matter without finding whether Senator WHEELER is guilty or not, and takes the position that the case should go to the jury for trial, without our passing upon his guilt or innocence.

Mr. BAYARD. May I ask the Senator another question? Assuming when the matter comes up for vote that a Senator should vote in the affirmative on the majority report, would he, in the opinion of the Senator from South Dakota, be precluded from voting for the minority report?

Mr. STERLING. I am inclined to think he would be precluded from voting for the minority report.

Mr. BAYARD. Will the Senator state why?

Mr. STERLING. Because, having voted for the majority report, he has voted that Senator WHEELER is innocent of the charges contained in the indictment, and therefore is not in a position by voting for the minority report to refer the matter to the jury for trial. He has already passed upon it. That is what the minority report does; without finding Senator WHEELER guilty of the charges, it would refer the matter to the trial jury.

Mr. BAYARD. Does the Senator maintain that, while thus it may be found that Senator WHEELER is not guilty on the facts found, they can still admit the grand jury of Montana had the right to indict him?

Mr. STERLING. They might possibly agree to it, but it seems to me there is an inconsistency in voting for the majority report and then voting for the minority report.

Mr. BAYARD. Does the Senator think such action would be proper action?

Mr. STERLING. That is the way it occurs to me now. It seems to me that would be the correct position, either to vote for the majority report or to vote for the minority report. There would be no mistake as to position then.

Mr. BAYARD. Does the Senator really think it would be consistent?

Mr. STERLING. Rather inconsistent, I say, to vote for the majority report and then for the minority report. That is the way it appeals to me, I will say to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Suppose we had gone into the question of whether the grand jury had probable cause to find the indictment, and suppose we had concluded that the grand jury did not have probable cause for finding the indictment, what then would have been the report and what should the action of the Senate have been?

Mr. STERLING. The report would have been, I think, in accordance with the facts, and with that as the report, I hardly think there would have been necessity then for any further consideration of the case by the Senate. If they had reported according to the facts that they believed the finding of the indictment was not warranted, was, in other words, a frame-up, they could have so reported.

Mr. BORAH. After finding the indictment was unwarranted, the Senator would not have felt the necessity of going so far, in justice to a Member of the Senate, as to exonerate him?

Mr. STERLING. There is some question about that. I am not prepared to say positively whether I would or not, but I am inclined to think, I will say to the Senator from Idaho, had the committee found that here was a frame-up and the facts did not warrant the finding of an indictment, that the Senate would have been justified in passing a resolution exonerating Senator WHEELER.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have listened to what the Senator has said. He has heard all of the testimony in this case while I have not.

Mr. STERLING. I did not hear quite all of the testimony; there were some witnesses whose testimony I did not hear.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Do I understand the Senator to say that if he had been a member of the grand jury investigating the case and the evidence that came before the grand jury was the evidence that came before his committee, he would not find an indictment upon that evidence?

Mr. STERLING. Oh, no; the Senator from Alabama misunderstood me if he thought that I so stated; I did not say that. My position has been, and I so state in my report, that I thought the grand jury was warranted in finding an indictment with the evidence, and the inferences that might have been plainly drawn from the evidence which was before it. That is my position.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The reason I asked the Senator that question was that I understood him to say that he did not report that the junior Senator from Montana was guilty of the charge, and, of course, I assumed from that that he meant that the evidence would not sustain the indictment.

Mr. STERLING. Oh, no; that is not the position; but that, having been indicted by the grand jury, it was Senator WHEELER's business, and without our trial of the case in advance, to appear and stand trial before the petit jury.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not considering that part of the question: I agree with what the other Senators here have stated; that this case can be, and would properly be, tried in the United States Senate; and I am trying to find out the attitude of the Senator from South Dakota. We are proposing to try the case ourselves.

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am one of the judges. I have got to find a verdict. I want to know whether sitting as judges—and the Senator is one of the judges—he thinks the testimony before his committee justifies him in finding a verdict of guilty?

Mr. STERLING. No; I will not say that it does justify me in finding a verdict of guilty.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to call attention to a very few more phases of the evidence in this case.

Much has been made of the testimony of Mr. Cohn, testimony taken largely in another proceeding, being the proceedings conducted by the so-called Brookhart investigating committee, which is investigating the activities or nonactivities of the Department of Justice. Mr. Coan testified before the select committee investigating the Wheeler case. Whatever his testimony may have been elsewhere, there is nothing in his testimony before the select committee that warrants any unfavorable opinion of Mr. Coan. In order that I may point out to the Senate his real attitude, why he went to Montana, and so forth, I wish to read from his testimony.

Senator SWANSON. Is he a member of the Republican National Committee?

The Senator from Virginia was referring to Mr. Lockwood. I wish to say here to Senators that I would not know Mr. Lockwood to-day if I should meet him.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Lockwood was the person who employed Mr. Coan to go to Montana.

Mr. STERLING. Yes; he was the person who sent him there.

I saw Mr. Lockwood, as I remember, some years ago and have not seen him since. I have had no conversation with him and do not now recall his features. I never knew Mr. Coan or that there was such a person as Mr. Coan until he appeared here in connection with the work of this committee. Senator SWANSON asked:

Is he a member of the Republican National Committee?

Mr. COAN. Yes, sir.

Senator SWANSON. And he is also interested in the National Republican?

Mr. COAN. Yes, sir; he is secretary of the Republican National Committee.

Senator SWANSON. At that time were they interwoven?

Mr. COAN. I do not know the connection exactly. I did not ask him when he gave me the job whether they were interwoven or not.

The CHAIRMAN. You may take the witness.

Senator SWANSON. Did he tell you the purpose for which he employed you?

Mr. COAN. Yes; I was sent out to Montana to investigate some of these stories about Senator WHEELER.

According to this testimony, Mr. Coan did not go out there to make a story to begin with, but to investigate stories that were afloat concerning Senator WHEELER. I do not know what those stories were; I never heard any of them as against Mr. WHEELER. I never interested myself in his campaign or to learn what his prospects for election were, and I had no feeling one way or the other in regard to it. Mr. Coan says:

Yes; I was sent out to Montana to investigate some of these stories about Senator WHEELER. WHEELER had been attacking the administration and everybody in public life here, and nobody seemed to be willing to get up and answer him, and they thought it was up to somebody to find out who this fellow was and what he had been doing.

If it were true that Mr. WHEELER was attacking the administration—and I did not know of it; I had not heard about it—then there was nothing particularly reprehensible in sending somebody out there to investigate the stories that were in circulation regarding Senator WHEELER.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. SWANSON. Do I understand the Senator from South Dakota to occupy the position that if a Senator of this body inaugurates an investigation of the Department of Justice, the proper response is to send somebody to investigate him instead of meeting the question?

Mr. STERLING. As I have said, Mr. Coan went out there to investigate certain stories, as he says, in regard to Mr. WHEELER, and I do not know but what it was proper, if the stories were in circulation, that he should go out and investigate them.

Mr. SWANSON. But that is not the reason he gave. The reason he gave was that WHEELER was attacking the administration——

Mr. STERLING. And everybody in public life here.

Mr. SWANSON. Of course, "everybody in public life" was merely an expression that he put in, but Mr. WHEELER's main activity was against the Department of Justice.

Mr. STERLING. Exactly; this is the version of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. Do I understand that the Senator approves of the suggestion that when any Senator undertakes to inaugurate an investigation of any department the counter reply should be an investigation by that department of that Senator?

Mr. STERLING. If this were a Democratic administration and a Republican had been elected Senator and there were stories about that Republican Senator elect and he had been attacking everybody in the Democratic administration, I would not blame the administration or the national committee of the Democratic Party for sending somebody out to investigate the stories that had been circulated in regard to that Republican Senator elect.

Mr. SWANSON. It is all right for a Senator to be investigated on account of rumors and reports, but that is not the reason he gave; the reason he gave was Mr. WHEELER's activities and attacks against the Department of Justice. Does the Senator approve the action that was taken?

Mr. STERLING. I suggest that the Senator read the statement. I have read it, and I do not think there can be any question about it.

Mr. SWANSON. Very well. Let the Senator read it again.

Mr. STERLING. Then the Senator from Virginia asked:

Who thought so?

Mr. Coan replied:

The Republican National Committee.

Senator SWANSON. And they sent you there for that purpose?

Mr. COAN. Yes; I went out there, and of course I did not want any stories of dead men or train robbers, and I took affidavits where I got the stories.

What affidavits did he take? He took the affidavits of two men, of Glosser and Rhea. Those affidavits were produced, and they are in the Record. Aside from that, however, the two witnesses, Glosser and Rhea, appeared before the committee and testified and were subjected to cross-examination by members of the committee, but in no instance that I recall was that testimony on the stand before the committee different from the statements in the affidavit which they had already made.

Mr. President, as a basis for the minority report, and the position in the report as to the functions of the committee or what the committee should do, whatever the broad terms of the resolution might permit it to do, there comes in addition to the testimony of Glosser and Rhea, who were witnesses before the grand jury—and I am confining my statement now to evidence before the grand jury—the documentary evidence showing what transpired here and before the Interior Department at Washington after Mr. WHEELER came here. Take Glosser's testimony and Rhea's testimony as to what happened in room 212 at the Rainbow Hotel in Great Falls, Mont., together with the documentary evidence that has been produced in this case with regard to permits, in regard to Senator WHEELER's interest in the permits, in regard to his connection with the solicitor of the Interior Department, Mr. Booth, as shown by telegram after telegram and by letter after letter, and I can not help but think that these things, unexplained and undenied by Mr. WHEELER, furnished evidence enough to warrant the grand jury in acting as it did.

I call attention to another piece of testimony about which comment has been made by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY].

He refers to the testimony of Mr. Sparling. Mr. Sparling was one of the grand jurors that found this indictment. Mr. President, it is an unusual if not an unallowed proceeding for a grand juror to testify as to what happened before the grand jury, or as to the testimony given before the grand jury, in advance of the final trial before the petit jury in a case. The proceedings of the grand jury are secret.

He testifies:

The CHAIRMAN. What is your business?

Mr. SPARLING. I am in the hotel business, or rooming-house business.

The CHAIRMAN. You were a member of the grand jury which returned the indictment against WHEELER?

Mr. SPARLING. I was.

The CHAIRMAN. Were there any minutes kept of the proceedings of your grand jury?

Mr. SPARLING. Not on this case.

The CHAIRMAN. Nothing at all?

Mr. SPARLING. Nothing.

Senator SWANSON. Did you keep minutes of other cases?

Mr. SPARLING. Well, when the grand jury was first called we kept the minutes of the first case that was called, the Butte case, and after that there were no minutes kept of any cases.

Then he goes on and says:

For information I might say that this case was a sort of a—

Then comes the blank, and I interposed with an objection:

Senator STERLING. Now, I think we will object to any statement as to the case. The question, as I understood the chairman, was simply whether minutes were kept or not?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Senator STERLING. That was all.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any questions?

Senator WHEELER. I would like to request the committee to ask him as to the number of ballots that were taken.

Senator STERLING. I object to that. I do not think that is proper at all. They might in any given case have a dozen or 20 ballots and it would not be material to any question at issue in the case.

Neither would it have been material. Think of its being testified by a member of the grand jury, in advance of the trial by the petit jury, as to how many ballots the grand jury took, probably for the purpose of prejudicing the petit jury in the trial of that case!

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield just a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LADD in the chair). Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. HEFLIN. Does the Senator know whether or not two or three members of the grand jury have stated that they balloted seven or eight times and never returned an indictment against Mr. WHEELER, and that they then were permitted to separate and they were taken out to dine by Republican politicians and told that it was necessary to indict WHEELER, and after that they did indict him?

Mr. STERLING. Let me say that the Senator from South Dakota does not know anything of the kind. I know that it would have been improper to inquire as to the number of ballots taken, and the Senator from Alabama knows that it would have been improper to have given out how many ballots had been taken by that grand jury.

Mr. HEFLIN. Well, it is a fact that members of that grand jury have conveyed that information to Senator WHEELER.

Mr. STERLING. That is aside from the record, and I am confining myself to the record made in the testimony before the committee.

Mr. HEFLIN. But I understand that the Senator objected to having the testimony come out before the committee.

Mr. STERLING. I did object to this testimony. It would not have been proper in any case.

Mr. HEFLIN. It could not get in if the Senator objected to it.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator now says the charge is whether or not this was a frame-up and whether the grand jury were parties to a frame-up. The evidence as to whether or not there was a frame-up involved the conduct of the grand jury and whether the district attorney appeared before them repeatedly and insisted on an indictment. The Senator from South Dakota objected to that being investigated. It seems to me the best proof he could have had of a frame-up would have been the issue made by him of the conduct of the grand jury. Was the grand jury a party to it? Was the district attorney a party to it? We wanted to investigate. The suggestion was made by Senator WHEELER, but we did not think it was pertinent, in which the Senator from South Dakota concurred with us. It was held that we were not discussing the conduct of the grand jury or the conduct of the district attorney; and yet after suppressing this evidence the Senator comes here and says that is the issue.

Mr. STERLING. If the Senator will bear with me, I for the first time here and now have heard that the United States district attorney appeared before the grand jury several times and urged the finding of an indictment. There was no evidence offered before the committee to that effect—not one scintilla of evidence.

Mr. SWANSON. No; and the Senator objected to going into anything in connection with the grand jury to see whether or not it was a frame-up, and now he comes in and makes a report on that line.

Mr. STERLING. Oh, no; the specific question was not submitted to the committee, and the Senator knows that it was not suggested that the United States district attorney might be subpœnaed or that evidence as to his proceedings and conduct before that grand jury might be presented. Not one suggestion of that kind was made.

Mr. SWANSON. I do not know whether it was true or not, but I had heard that the district attorney did appear before the grand jury and that they adjourned without finding the indictment. I did not think we were trying the grand jury, however, nor did the Senator think at that time that we were trying the grand jury. I did not go into it; I did not ask any questions about it, because at that time the Senator's mind and mine were concurring that we had nothing to do with the grand jury. It was as a result of later developments that the Senator and I parted company.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I will read the statement of the chairman. I said:

I object to that. I do not think that is proper at all. They might in any given case have a dozen or 20 ballots, and it would not be material to any question at issue in the case.

And it would not, either from the majority or from the minority standpoint, be material how many ballots were taken.

The CHAIRMAN. I am not so certain about that, but I am not certain enough of it to approve of it at this time. I shall want to look into the law before I make up my mind whether we ought to do that or not. If the effect of taking more than one ballot is what some very able lawyers think, why, we would like to hear it. But I have not made up my mind about it. That is all for the present, Mr. Sparling.

Mr. Sparling, a member of the grand jury, was the witness. No effort was made, following that, by the chairman or any other member of the committee, to prove how many ballots were taken by the grand jury.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. If he thought the issue was whether or not there was a frame up in the indictment, or whether there was probable cause, why did he not pursue the investigation at that time to ascertain that fact?

Mr. STERLING. That matter was largely in the hands of the other members of the committee.

Mr. SWANSON. It was not a bit more in our hands than in the hands of the Senator from South Dakota. None of us had an idea that that was an issue, except the Senator.

Mr. STERLING. I supposed that the committee were bringing out all the evidence that would affect the case, and in doing so of course we would necessarily bring out the evidence that was before the grand jury.

Mr. SWANSON. But it has been disclosed—the Senator was a member of the committee—that nobody had an idea, except the Senator, that we were passing on the conduct of the grand jury; and he did not conduct the investigation or have any witnesses summoned.

Mr. STERLING. I want to refer briefly to other evidence which has been spoken of here.

I said that the testimony of Glosser and Rhea, unimpeached—their oral testimony before the committee being the same as their testimony by affidavit given to Mr. Coan—together with the documentary evidence before the grand jury, would have warranted the finding of this indictment.

Mr. WHEELER writes on March 8, soon after he came to Washington, to Mr. Gordon Campbell, whose attorney he was:

I wish that you would have your office send me a detailed report of the condition of your permit that we discussed with the Standard Oil Co. of California, in order that when I take it up with the Department of the Interior that I will be able to intelligently discuss the matter.

And then to Mr. Beaulieu, the land-title attorney, he wires on March 13:

Secure and mail at once complete list Gordon Campbell Syndicate and individual holdings, giving each separate legal description and character of title, dividing acreage into two classes, that in which title is absolute and unquestionable and that in which title may be in doubt. Am writing letter in full to-morrow.

That does not refer to this or that one particular permit, Mr. President, but it refers to all the permits—those with undoubted titles and those with questionable titles.

Then Mr. Campbell wires Mr. WHEELER:

Received wire. Am forwarding map and list of all acreage with explanation and condition of titles—

And so forth.

Later Mr. WHEELER wires Mr. Campbell as follows: This is on March 14:

Leaving Saturday for Europe. Have taken your matter up with parties writing Baldwin. Suggest see him.

And the "parties" evidently meant, as the whole testimony would clearly show, I think, Mr. Booth, the Solicitor of the Interior Department.

Mr. President, I think I have nothing more to say, except to call attention to just one phase of the report of the committee in the old case alluded to by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], with a view to the construction we would at this day put upon certain language of this report.

The report was made by Mr. Adams, apparently the chairman of the committee. It was an investigation of the facts concerning an indictment of Mr. Smith, a Senator from Ohio, for complicity in the Aaron Burr conspiracy, and treason against the Government was involved, the most serious of crimes involving capital punishment. He said, in his report:

> The question upon the trial of a criminal cause before the courts of common law is not between guilt and innocence but between guilt and the possibility of innocence.

I disagree with that interpretation of the law by Mr. Adams, and I say that it is not the interpretation we put upon it to-day.

> If a doubt can possibly be raised, either by the ingenuity of the party or of his counsel or by the operation of general rules in their unforeseen application to particular cases, that doubt must be decisive for acquittal.
